The resolution was then put in the following form and agreed to: “This Council recommends to the Government that a committee be formed to inquire into the causes of recent strikes of workmen in Bengal and advise what remedial measures should be adopted.”

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: "This Council recommends to the Government that the Government of India be approached with a request that in connection with the recommendation contained in the second report of the Parliamentary Joint Committee regarding the peculiar financial difficulties of the Presidency of Bengal, effect be given to the recommendation by an order of the Governor-General in Council declaring the export duty on jute levied in Bengal to be a source of provincial revenue for Bengal from the financial year 1921-22."

It is a notorious fact that the finances of the country are in such a helpless condition that we will not henceforth be able to meet our ordinary expenses without borrowing or imposing fresh taxes upon the people. This year we may draw from our reserves, i.e., we shall have to draw more than 2 crores of rupees from our reserves or cash balance—by whatever name we may call it—but the amount which will be left to ourselves will be only about Rs. 50 lakhs. This means that we will not henceforth be able to carry on our ordinary duties without incurring debts. It is necessary that something should be done at once, so that we may not fall into the mire. We cannot moreover go on borrowing indefinitely, nor is it fair to the people of this country that with the advent of the Reforms the people should be burdened with fresh taxation. The people are poor, and any additional taxation at this time would meet with absolute disapprobation of the public, and would be the cause of discontent among the people.

It was only the other day that I moved a resolution in this Council for approaching the Government of India with the request that effect be given to the recommendation in the second report of the Parliamentary Joint Committee, namely: "The Committee desire to ask for their recognition of the peculiar financial difficulties of the Presidency of Bengal, which they accordingly commend to the special consideration of the Government of India." That resolution was accepted by Government. I pointed out that the introduction of the Reforms has brought about a complete change in the financial relations between the Centre and the Provincial Governments. We have now been made independent in the matter of finance, but we shall not be able to spend or utilise our own money. The apportionment of revenue has been very unsatisfactory and out of all proportion to the contribution by the Presidency and its needs. It is, therefore, necessary that we should approach the Government of India for a redistribution of the heads of revenue, at least to allow us to utilise the amount which is purely a Bengal contribution. I mean the export on jute. The tendency in the United States, Canada and some of the British Colonies is to mark off all indirect revenue as central and all direct taxes as Provincial. But the allocation made by the Government of India, or rather by the Parliamentary Joint Committee and the Meston Committee, proceed on a different basis. It means be said that the export duty on jute falls in the category of "customs," and therefore the income derived from it is legitimately the due of the Imperial Government. Jute is the product of Bengal and Bengal alone. The export duty on jute can be wholly provincialised. It is no doubt now levied as "customs," but it may be levied as excise duty. In my note on the report of the Meston Committee I pointed out that it was inequitable in practice, and wrong in principle, to select one or two particular commodities which were produced in one or two particular provinces only, and not generally throughout India and which have special advantages, and levy a tax on those commodities, not for the benefit of those particular provinces, but for India as a whole. This was a grievance sorely felt in Bengal, where the Government of India do not spend a single pice for the benefit of the jute growers, who, as a result of this tax, can only sell at a price less than what they would otherwise have got. It will appear that our deficit is more than 2 crores of rupees, and, even if the expenditure remains stationary, there will be at least this annual recurring deficit. We have no great hopes from "excise duties," for they are liable to decrease, and we have every reason to believe they will decrease gradually. We therefore require a permanent source of income, and that source should be in the strict sense of the term "provincial." The revenue as shown in the Budget estimates of 1919-20 from "Customs" or "Export duty" on jute was Rs. 239 lakhs, i.e., a little over Rs. 2 crores, the amount which we require to make two ends meet. We do not want anything to live a luxurious life. We want this sum of Rs. 2 crores for our bare subsistence. I therefore move that this export duty on jute, which is a purely provincial income, should be given to us by the Government of India.

Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: I rise to make a few brief observations with regard to the resolution which has been so ably moved by Babu Surendra Nath Ray. Sir, I had no mind to intervene at this stage of the debate, particularly so, when the empty chairs before us indicate that the House is in a mood to break up. But, as the representative of a constituency, which is chiefly composed of poor people, I thought it was incumbent on me to say what they feel about this matter. So far as the Budget is concerned, I think very many people have actually been frightened at the enormous deficit. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr has made a forcible speech to-day, and I find from the arguments in it that it is very difficult to defeat him, but I think all the same the impression is that, unless the Government of India come to our rescue, it would be absolutely impossible to get on. Sir, the Reforms Scheme is expected to give us popular government, and the idea is that, unless the Government of India come to our help, and unless the resolution which my friend Babu Surendra Nath Ray has moved is given effect to, that form of government would not be able to do much good to the people. The financial condition of the country at the present moment is so grave, and the economic conditions under which our people are struggling for their very existence so unfavourable, that it is but natural that they should be frightened to see our public expenditure rising higher and higher every day by leaps and bounds. And I do not see any reason why the Government of India should not come to our help, and according to the terms of this resolution and also according to the recommendation of the Parliamentary Joint Committee, I do not see any reason why the Government of India should not declare the export duty on jute levied in Bengal to be a source of provincial revenue. I thought I should tell the Council what was the feeling of the population in the rural areas of Bengal, but I think I shall not be justified in taking up the time of the Council, and I wholeheartedly support the resolution so eloquently moved by Babu Surendra Nath Ray.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: This is another effort on the part of Babu Surendra Nath Ray to improve our financial position, and it would be ungracious of me if I do not welcome his assistance. I would only say that we have hitherto looked on this matter from rather a different point of view or angle of vision. We have strongly urged upon the Government of India that our income is insufficient to meet our expenditure, and we have proved our proposition in great detail, but we have left it there. So long as the Government of India increase our resources in such a way as to produce equilibrium, it does not very much matter in what particular form assistance is given. However, there is admittedly a certain amount of appropriateness about giving us this jute export tax. It is levied on a product which is a monopoly of Bengal, and it so happens that just about what the tax at present produces is what we want to meet our deficit next year. On the other hand I do not know that the last consideration is altogether an advantage, because, as I am always saying, we are a very young Government and a very young Council, and we do not yet really know what are our permanent charges. As an instance, we do not yet know what our responsibilities are going to be with regard to the Calcutta University, and there are other questions still pending. So we are not in a position at present to say that a sum of Rs. two crores would make us comfortable or would be sufficient for our purposes. It would be a great mistake, therefore, for us to commit ourselves to any suggestion that if we got this jute tax we should be happy and would not want anything more. However, the proposal in the resolution if given effect to would improve our financial position very substantially, and, without going so far as to say that this transfer of the jute tax is the only method or even the best method of improving our financial position, I am prepared to accept the resolution on behalf of Government and to submit it to the Government of India for their consideration.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution, and as it has been already accepted by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, I would like to say one thing, and that is this. As Bengal is the only jute-producing province all over the world, and its produce is taken away by foreign countries, I think the jute tax should most appropriately be given to Bengal, especially when there is a large deficit and the province is in great need.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I am most thankful to the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr for having accepted this resolution. It was for some time past my intention to say that we should ask not only for this revenue from jute from the Government of India, for our needs are growing, and we may do with Rs. 2 crores next year, but we may require Rs. 4 crores the year after next.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

Partition of Midnapore.

Babu SARAT CHANDRA JANAH: I beg leave of the House to withdraw the resolution standing in my name.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn. It was as follows: "This Council recommends to the Government that the partition of the district of Midnapore be stopped for good."

Residential allowances.

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: The motion that stands in my name and which I have been called upon to move, may be carried or lost. I do not care so much whether this is carried or lost, because I have got the satisfaction to see its effect upon some of the members. It has worked as a piece of litmus paper in a chemical laboratory. Most of the mufassal members do not like the idea that the travelling expenses that they are now getting should be discontinued. So I pray for leave to withdraw this resolution. Its effect would be to remove the sword of Damocles hanging over the heads of the members.

The motion was then by leave of the Council withdrawn. It was as follows: "This Council recommends to the Government that no residential allowances be paid to members of the Legislative Council and that no provision be made in the Budget for such payment."

Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: As the original resolution has been withdrawn and it will be rather difficult to work out the suggestion, therefore, I beg to withdraw the amendment.

The amendment was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn. It was as follows: "This Council recommends to the Government that the members of the Legislative Council should be paid only their actual expenses for their board, lodging and other out-of-pocket expenses when attending Council meetings at Calcutta.

New Roads and Road repairs.

Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: " This Council recommends to the Government that the district boards and municipalities be recommended to make allotments separately in their Budgets under the heads of ' New Roads ' and ' Road Repairs ' according to the mileage of the different thanas and wards as the case may be."

Sir, I have already given notice of the said resolution, and the hon'ble members in this House have got it on their agenda paper, and I hope they have all considered the desirability of adopting such a resolution for the benefit of the general public. Let me first explain what I mean by the resolution. The prevailing system of local self-governing bodies in the mufassal such as district boards, local boards and municipalities is, when preparing their annual budget, to make allotments on the heads mentioned in the resolution, but in some cases the detailed estimates are prepared later on. Now, I would like to see that the whole amount under the heads of road repairs, etc., be divided accordingly in proportion to the mileage of respective thanas and wards. Take, for example, a municipality with an average income of Rs. 30,000 a year. It allots Rs. 3,000 for road repairs in the budget, but subsequently estimates are made of different parts of the road, which the authorities contemplate to repair. Of course the executives take a formal sanction of the Board. But the reasons for my moving the resolution are that no principle is followed in preparing such estimates, and as a result of this many roads are left without repairs for some time and years even, and gradually the roads become rotten and the public feel great inconvenience. In some cases we find that only the favourite roads and the roads through which high officials pass are maintained. Those who have gone to the interior of the mufassal in any district, have noticed the facts and the existing bad condition of the roads. Some roads look as though they were abandoned, and some are being encroached on by the cultivators and other people. The tax and cess payers pay their taxes, but they are not getting equal justice. Therefore, if this principle of distributing money according to the mileage of thanas and wards be followed, then no one can complain and the executives of the self-governing bodies will also be saved from any sort of adverse criticism. Some will say that there are Public Works Committees, District Engineers and Municipal Commissioners, who can fight for their grievances, but from the experiences which I have, I may fairly say that in most cases the executives of the mufassal self-governing boards have their own majority, and the poor members and commissioners are out-voted. Moreover in many places, though the district boards and municipalities have their non-official Chairmen, yet they require guidance from the Government on various considerations. I admit that it is beyond ope to compel them, and on principle we should not, but we can it to them any good idea. I admit and believe that the resolution, pted by this House and the Government, will not have a binding on the district boards and municipalities. Still I am sure it will moral pressure on those boards, and at the same time it will give a o the members of these boards how to divide their money on the mentioned in the resolution. In cases of emergency and in the e of any complaint, the authorities of the boards referred to are at to act according to their pious wish. I urge for the proper utility public money in a right way with a right principle. The Governwill be in no way doing wrong in its judgment in accepting the reso-

 , and it is simply in the way of recommendation or suggestion.
 ve we should do justice, if we follow the principle in our district s, and municipalities. The local boards, and other union commit-ill naturally follow the same line, and then the money may be evenly uted all over the districts. I hope the Hon'ble Minister in charge department, and the House will consider the desirability of accept-e resolution. With these words I beg to move the resolution.

ja MANILOLL SINCH ROY: Having an idea of the conditions rural area as well as of the system of preparation of the District Budget, as the Chairman of a district board, I regret that I t but oppose the resolution in its present form, so far as it relates to t boards. In the Boards' Budgets, allotments for "New Roads" Road Repairs" are separately shown, not according to the mileage different thanas, as proposed in the resolution, but according to the of the district as a whole. I do not see how distribution of road ents can be made according to the thana mileage. For, as regards "Roads," I think allotments should be made not according to the ge, but rather according to the inverse proportion of the mileage, to say, the thana which has a greater mileage of roads should have er number of new communications. As for repairs, the cost of s to metalled roads is far greater than that of unmetalled ones. One has a greater number of metalled roads than another, while the width al required also varies in accordance with the traffic on each road.
 umber of bridges and culverts on roads in the different thanas is uite different from each other. In the above circumstances the ge of roads in a thana cannot be taken as a criterion for allotting

Moreover, in my opinion the district, and not a thana, should be as a unit, and funds allotted according to the necessities of the t as a whole.

bu MITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: I rise to oppose this motion. experience both of district boards and municipalities, and I do ow why my learned friend has brought forward this motion before uncil. The only point raised by him is that there may be a principle of equal proportion to be followed by the municipalities. I do not know what practical experience he has got of municipalities. Suppose there are municipalities in which there are certain roads and places where practically there is no population, I fail to understand how the principle can be applied there. If this resolution is accepted, then this would mean interference by Government with district boards and municipalities. I am extremely sorry to see that in these days of self-government a motion like this should have been brought forward before the Council and I appeal to my friend to withdraw his motion before the Hon'ble Minister speaks.

With these few words I oppose the motion.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: It appears to me that the executive everywhere, whether in small village unions or in district boards or municipalites, cannot bear any criticism of their action. I do not quite see any harm in the resolution of my friend. I do not find in the resolution that any suggestion has been made that the allotments should be made equally for all villages or thanas without consideration of other elements which should be considered. I have found from my practical experience, and I am ready to bear out my learned mover, that certain localities always get favoured treatment, while certain other localities are always neglected. As I interpret the resolution, the mover's intention is to put a stop to that sort of thing by the executive on the spot. We have been losing our belief and confidence in the theory of the man on the spot, and this resolution is an illustration thereof. It does not really hamper the work. It only lays down that in making allotments the district boards and municipalities should show what amount of money they are going to devote to a particular locality in order to find out whether the work is being properly done or not. I think that is the only thing which the resolution aims at. I therefore support the resolution.

Maulvi SHAH MUHAMMAD CHAUDHURI: Generally new roads and road repairs are shown in the Budget, but it is not possible to show separately each thana according to the necessity of the roads. The district boards generally open roads where there is a large need for communication, and it is not possible for them to repair or open roads according to the mileage of the different thanas. There may be thanas, where it is not necessary to open any new road. For these reasons I oppose the resolution.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: While I fully sympathise with the mover of this resolution, I am sorry that I cannot support this resolution. In the first place it appears to me that this resolution is quite unnecessary. Union boards are going to be formed in several parts of the district and as the district boards will have to supervise their work, this resolution is quite unnecessary. In the second place of course equality of distribution is justice no doubt, but benevolence is higher justice, and the people, who are on the spot, are the best judges as to which place requires special attention, and what sort of grant is to be made. Moreover, the conditions throughout the districts are not similar, as, for instance, in the district of Pabna, the Sirajgunj subdivision goes under water during the rains and it requires special treatment, while the Sadar subdivision is on a higher land and it requires quite a different treatment. So no hard and fast rule can be laid down that allotments should be made according to the mileage of each thana. I submit that almost all the district boards of Bengal have got non official chairmen, and formerly when the district magistrates were at the helm, the members could not venture to interfere much with the work of the Chairmen. But now that there are non-official chairmen, the members are bold enough to press their respective claims, and I am sure in a year or two all the members will try to readjust the district board funds according to the requirements of the locality. In the third place, this resolution smacks of a little distrust of the ability and the honesty of the chairmen to do good to their respective districts. So I would ask the mover to withdraw this resolution and to bring it forward after two or three years, if he finds that matters do not adjust themselves according to local circumstances.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I extremely regret that this resolution has been brought forward before the Council. The learned mover asks for a mandate in the shape of a recommendation to interfere with the judgment of the municipal commissioners and members of the district boards. I request him to withdraw it. I do not think that any hard and fast rule should be laid down as to the manner in which allotments should be made in the Budget, as that would only mean an interference with the action of municipal commissioners and members of district boards. Sir, I am very sorry that such a resolution has been brought forward and I beg to oppose it.

SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ delivered his speech in Bengali.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): I came to this Council with quite an open mind resolved to follow the trend of the debate and to be guided by the sense of the Council. I have not in the slightest degree changed my mind in that respect. I have carefully followed the course of the debate, and what do I find? Speaker after speaker has spoken on this resolution and, with one exception, they have condemned it. Therefore I take it that it is the sense of this Chamber that this resolution should be dropped. Now, Sir, speaking from my own personal experience—and in this connection I may say that I have been the Chairman of a municipality for over 33 years—I think that while we all deprecate anything approaching favouritism, while we are all anxious that the construction and repairs of roads should not receive preferential treatment, it seems to me that this is not the remedy for the evil which my friend has referred to. The fact of the matter is—whether a road is to be repaired or not, whether new roads are constructed or not, these are matters which ought to be left to the decision of the local bodies concerned and should be determined by considerations with which only the local bodies can be acquainted. I think that this is the principle which should guide local bodies and which I take it does guide them in this matter. Therefore, having regard to all these circumstances, my advice to my friend is to withdraw this motion, and I hope he will do so. It is quite clear that the House is against the adoption of his resolution. May I take it that he withdraws the motion? If he does not, then, on behalf of Government, I must oppose the motion.

Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: After hearing the various speakers and the suggestion of the Hon'ble Minister, I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to Monday, the 14th March, 1921, at 3 p.m., at the Town Hall, Calcutta.

THE BENGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

VOLUME I—5.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Monday, the 14th March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Present :

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 109 nominated and elected members.

Oaths.

The following members made an affirmation of their allegiance to the Crown :—

RAI SAHIB PANCHANAN BARMA.
BABU BHABENDRA CHANDRA RAY.
MUNSHI AYUB ALI.
MUNSHI AMIR ALI.

President's Speech.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): I have received a letter from His Excellency the Governor which I wish to place before you. His Excellency writes:—

“I desire to call the attention of the Council to paragraph 10 of Part V of the Report of the Joint Select Committee of the two Houses of Parliament appointed to consider the Government of India Bill, which runs as follows:—

‘The Committee think that it may often greatly assist the political education of India if Standing Committees of the legislative bodies are attached to certain departments of Government, but they only express this opinion on the understanding that the appointment of such committees, their composition, and the regulations which govern their procedure, shall be matters wholly and exclusively within the discretion of the Governor General or of the Governor as the case may be.'

In accordance with the opinion therein expressed I have decided that it is desirable that such committees should be formed and it is my intention therefore that Standing Committees to advise the Member or Minister in charge upon questions of policy and upon such other matters in connection with the administration of his Department as he may desire to submit to them shall be attached to the following departments:—

1. Police.
2. Judicial and Jails.
3. Local Self-Government.
4. Medical and Public Health.
5. Education.
6. Commerce and Marine.
7. Public Works (Roads and Buildings).
8. Irrigation.
9. Agriculture (including Civil Veterinary, Fisheries and co-operative Credit).
10. Excise.
11. Land Revenue.

I propose that the Committees should consist of the Hon'ble Member or the Hon'ble Minister in charge of the Department as Chairman, the Head of the Department and four non-official members of the Legislative Council with the Departmental Secretary acting as Secretary. In order that I may be in possession of the views of the Legislative Council when making appointments to the Committees, I would invite you to arrange for the selection of names (for submission to me) by all non-official members of the Council by means of the single transferable vote. And since the main object of the Joint Select Committee in recommending the formation of such Committees was to provide for the wide diffusion of a knowledge of the work of administration, I would advise that no member should be selected to serve on more than one committee, and, in any case, would ask that no name be submitted to me for appointment to more than two such committees. For the same reason I propose that the Committees should be appointed annually, it being open to members to stand for re-election at the end of the year should they desire to do so. I shall be glad to receive from you, in due course, the names of the non-official members selected for nomination to the various committees."

In accordance with this letter I propose to fix a date for the election of members in order that the names may be submitted to His Excellency the Governor. I will give you notice in due time.

Starred Questions(to which oral answers were given).*Transfer of thana Ramnagar from Midnapore to Balasore.

I. Babu SARAT CHANDRA JANAH: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to say whether it is in the contemplation of the Government to transfer the thana of Ramnagar from the district of Midnapore to that of Balasore?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware of the strong public feeling against the said proposal?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the people of Ramnagar thana use the Bengali language in all their ordinary business and that it would be a punishment to them if they are placed under Bihar and Orissa where the Court language is Uriya?

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) In connection with a resolution moved in the Imperial Legislative Council on the 20th February, 1920, on the subject of the amalgamation of the Uriya-speaking tracts under one administration, it was decided to make a full investigation of the facts and to prepare such materials as might be useful in arriving at a just decision in the matter. Accordingly the District Magistrate of Midnapore has been instructed to investigate and report the facts in thana Ramnagar and to ascertain the wishes of the people affected by the proposal, as a proportion of the inhabitants of thana Ramnagar is said to be Uriya-speaking. The Government of Bengal has not yet formed any opinion on the matter.

(b) A memorial has been received from the inhabitants and land-holders of thana Ramnagar objecting to its transfer from Bengal, and it is under consideration.

(c) The facts are under examination, and Government will express its views after considering all the available information.

Ex-soldiers of the Bengali Regiment.

II. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department aware that a large number of the ex-soldiers of the Bengali Regiment with educational qualifications are out of employment at present?

(b) If so, what preference has the Government decided to give them, in view of the services rendered by them in the cause of the Empire, over other candidates for appointments in the various Government Departments?

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): Attention is invited to the reply given to question 8 (unstarred) at the meeting of Council of the 28th February, 1921.

Calcutta and Bengal constabularies and recruitment of Bengalis thereto.

 III. Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state the total number of constables both in Calcutta and in the Bengal police, and the number of Bengali constables among them?

(b) What steps, if any, did the Government take, since my questions in this respect in the Old Council in 1917, to recruit more Bengalis as constables in this province?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether it is the intention of Government to strengthen the Calcutta and the Bengal constabulary by recruiting Bengalis and, if so, are they considering the desirability of publishing their intention in the Calcutta and the Police Gazettes and of advertising the same in the local English and Bengali newspapers?

(d) Did the Government issue instructions to District Magistrates and Superintendents of Police to recruit Bengalis as constables?

(e) If so, with what result?

(f) Are the Government willing to take the help of non-official volunteers for the purpose of such recruitment?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The total number of constables in the Calcutta police is 3,923, of whom 79 are Bengalis; the total number in the Bengal police is 19,061, of whom 8,751 are Bengalis.

(b) The number of Bengalis enlisted in the Bengal police as constables since 1917 is as follows:—

Year.	Number.	Percentage of Bengalis to total recruits.
1918	... 1,847	63
1920	... 1,866	69

The standard of chest measurement in the case of Bengalis was reduced in 1918 with a view to secure more recruits for the Bengal police. In 1919 a deputy superintendent of police with a special staff was placed on special duty to recruit Bengalis. In 9 months he succeeded in enlisting only 447 Bengalis, nearly one-fifth of whom deserted soon after, as they found the rate of pay and the nature of the work not sufficiently attractive.

As regards the Calcutta police a small party was sent out by the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, in 1917 to several Bengal districts to recruit suitable Bengalis but met with no success.

(c) It is the declared policy of Government to recruit more Bengalis as constables both in the Calcutta and the Bengal police, and the progress made is noted every year in the annual reports and reviewed in the Government resolutions published in the Calcutta Gazette. No further intimation of Government's intention appears to be necessary.

(d) District Magistrates are not concerned with the recruitment of constables.

Superintendents of Police have instructions from the Inspector-General to carry out the Government policy, and to continue their efforts to enlist Bengali recruits by making widely known the rates of pay and the conditions of service. This is done through thana officers and other local agencies.

(e) As a result the percentage of Bengali recruits in the Bengal police has risen from 53 in 1917, to 69 in 1920. The low pay offered has hitherto been one of the main obstacles to the recruitment of a larger number of Bengalis and in Calcutta the experience has been that Bengalis do not care for the work of a city police constable.

(f) Since the recent revision of pay Bengalis are offering themselves in larger numbers for the Bengal police, and almost all the vacancies have been filled, but private persons can do useful public service by bringing employment in the police force to the notice of likely recruit constables.

Additional District Magistrates.

 IV. Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the work of District Magistrates has been materially diminished by their being relieved of the work of the Chairmanship of District Boards?

(b) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of abolishing the post of Additional District Magistrates in the districts where there are now such appointments?

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) Obviously their work has been reduced by the extent of their direct duties as Chairman; indirect duties in connection with District Boards will still remain.

(b) In the districts where there are now Additional District Magistrates the work is still very heavy. Two of these districts are at present being partitioned, and the Bengal District Administration Committee was of opinion that similar relief is required in two more districts. Government do not consider it possible to abolish any of the posts of Additional Magistrate at present.

Number of Primary, Middle Vernacular, Middle English, and Secondary High Schools in Bengal.

 V. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state the total number of—

- (a) Primary;
- (b) Middle Vernacular;
- (c) Middle English; and
- (d) Secondary High Schools in Bengal; and also the total number of schools under each variety maintained—

- (1) by Government,
- (2) by local bodies,
- (3) by grants-in-aid, and
- (4) by private effort?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to starred question No. V.

	NUMBER OF SCHOOLS IN 1919-20—				Total.
	Managed by Government.	Managed by Local or Municipal Boards.	Aided by Government or Local Funds or Municipal Boards.	Unaided.

Pasture lands for bovine cattle.

 VI. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to say whether there are any arrangements for the setting apart of pasture lands in Bengal?

(b) If not, are the Government considering the advisability of introducing the system?

(c) If the Government have taken steps, what have they done so far as bovine cattle are concerned, and how long would it take to complete the whole scheme?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): (a), (b) and (c) The member is referred to the answer to unstarred question No. 4 (c) (i) asked by Babu Amulya Dhone Addy at the Council meeting held on the 7th February last and to Sir John Cumming's speech referred to therein.

Representation of Government Khas Mahal and other estates on the Jalpaiguri District Board.

VII. (a) Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that in the District Board of Jalpaiguri there are eight non-official and one official members representing the Government Khas Mahal which pays cesses amounting to Rs. 76,140 and only one member representing the estate of the Maharaja of Cooch Behar in Jalpaiguri district which pays cesses amounting to Rs. 57,175, and only one member representing the Baikunthapur Estate which pays cesses amounting to Rs. 32,000 and if at any previous time there was no member at all representing the Baikunthapur Estate?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state on what principle nominations are made in the District Board of Jalpaiguri and, if the answer to (a) is in the affirmative or the figures laid down there are approximately correct, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what the reasons of this disparity are?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether the Government are considering the desirability of either introducing the elective system or of directing nominations to be so made in the future as will ensure proportionate representation of the said three estates?

SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (Mr. L. S. S. O'Malley): (a) and (b) The road and public works cesses paid by the various estates in Jalpaiguri are approximately as follows:—

	Rs.
Tenants of the Government Khas Mahals other than tea estates	60,000
Tea estates	62,000
Estates of the Maharaja of Cooch Behar	64,000
Baikunthapur estate	38,000

Government also pays $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of its Khas Mahal collections to the District Board for the improvement of roads within the Khas Mahal area. This comes to about Rs. 10,000 a year.

The District Board of Jalpaiguri consists of 16 members, viz., 14 nominated and 2 elected by the Alipur Duars Local Board. Of the 14 nominated members five (viz., the Senior Assistant Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner, the Subdivisional Officer, Alipur Duars, the Superintendent of Police, the Deputy Inspector of Schools and the Civil Surgeon) are officials appointed to look to the interests of the districts as a whole, three represent the European tea industry, three represent partly Indian tea industry and partly other interests extending over the whole district and the remaining three may be regarded as representing respectively the interests of the Bengal Duars Railway, the Cooch Behar estates and the Baikunthapur estate. No members have been nominated to represent Khas Mahal interests outside the tea industry.

With reference to the portion of the question asking whether at one time there was no representative of the Baikunthapur estate it appears that Mr. Lydiard, who was manager of the estate, was a nominated member of the Board. He ceased to be manager during his membership of the Board; and was removed from the Board as he absented himself from six consecutive meetings. The proprietor of the estate was then asked whether he was willing to serve in his place but sent no reply, and the Deputy Conservator of Forests was appointed for the remaining period of the Board's term of office. On the reconstitution of the Board a representative of the estate was appointed, and there has been a representative since then.

(c) The establishment of a Local Board in the Sadar subdivision is a necessary preliminary to the introduction of the elective system in the District Board. As stated in their address presented to His Excellency on the 8th February last the District Board are not in favour of this; but are anxious to have Local Boards in areas smaller than a subdivision. This would require an amendment of section 6 of the Local Self-Government Act. Proposals for amending this section have been referred to the District Boards for opinion. Government do not consider it desirable that nomination should be made so as to ensure proportionate representation of different estates.

Tramway strike.

VIII. Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state the date from which the tram-cars have ceased to run in Calcutta?

(b) When did the situation attract the notice of Government?

(c) What steps, if any, have the Government taken to see to resumption of the running of the cars?

(d) When did the Government first move in the matter?

(e) Is the subject of "tramways" one of the transferred subjects?

(f) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table the orders issued by Government in connection with the strike of the employees of the Tramways Company?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): (a) The majority of the tram-cars in Calcutta ceased to run on the 27th January. The full service was resumed on the 24th February.

(b) Government watched the situation carefully from the beginning of the strike.

(c) and (d) The Calcutta Corporation, who have a statutory agreement with the Tramways Company, first endeavoured to bring about a settlement, and when they failed they passed a resolution on the 18th February in which they asked Government to appoint a committee of inquiry or take such action as they might deem fit to terminate the existing deadlock and prevent such deadlocks in the future.

Government, on the 19th February, entered into communication with the Tramways Company and the representatives of the strikers, and the strike was finally settled on the 23rd February.

(e) No orders were issued by Government. For an account of the negotiations between Government, the Tramways Company and the strikers, the member is referred to the statement made in this Council on the 23rd February and to the communiqué issued on the same day. The Tramways Company and the strikers having failed to come to an agreement regarding the points at issue, a committee has now been appointed to deal with the matter.

(f) The subject of "tramways within Municipal areas" is dealt with in the Public Works Department which is a transferred department, but the tramway strike comes under the heading of 'settlement of labour disputes' appertaining to the Commerce Department, which is a reserved department.

Tramway strike.

 IX. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce aware of the recent strike of the drivers and conductors of the Calcutta Tramways Company, Limited, and the consequent dislocation of traffic?

(b) What action have the Government taken or what action are they going to take in this matter?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) and (b) The member is referred to the answer to starred question No. VIII.

Drinking water supply in the rural areas of Hooghly and Howrah.

 X. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state the number of new tanks excavated and old ones restored by the District Boards of Hooghly and Howrah for improvement of drinking water supply in the rural areas and specially in the subdivision of Arambagh during the last three years?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): A statement is laid on the table.

Unstarred Questions

(answers to which were laid on the table).

Amount sanctioned for Bankura famine.

I. Babu RISHINDRA NATH SARKAR: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to say what was the amount sanctioned in relieving the distress caused by famine in the district of Bankura in 1919, and what was the amount spent in doing so?

(b) What were the amounts spent under the following heads:—

- (i) in doles;
- (ii) in relief works such as construction and repair of roads;
- (iii) in relief works such as excavation and re-excavation of tanks and wells?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE [LAND REVENUE] (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan):

(a) The total sum sanctioned by Government to meet the expenditure in connection with the famine relief operations in the district of Burdwan in 1919 was Rs. 4,39,616 and the sum actually spent amounted to Rs. 4,37,109.

(b) The amounts spent under the heads are shown below: -

- (i) in doles, Rs. 1,28,244;
- (ii) in relief works, such as construction of, and repairs to, roads, Rs. 2,09,180;
- (iii) in relief works, such as excavation and re-excavation of tanks and wells, Rs. 66,317.

Subordinate Educational Service.

2. Babu RISHINDRA NATH SARKAR: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether the committee appointed for the reorganisation of the Subordinate Educational Service have submitted their report?

(b) If so, what are their chief recommendations?

(c) Have the recommendations been accepted by the Government?

(d) If so, when do the Government propose to give effect to them?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) Yes.

(b), (c) and (d) The Government of Bengal are not yet in a position to make any statement.

Allotment for constructing hostels for proposed college at Feni.

3. Munshi JAFAR AHMED: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the District Board of Noakhali has sanctioned Rs. 50,000 for the construction of hostels for the proposed college at Feni?

(b) What is the income of the District Board from the different cesses?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the work of construction of roads, etc., in the district will suffer if so much money is spent for the college hostels only?

(d) Is it not a fact that in the current year only nominal amounts have been sanctioned for the repair of roads, excavation of tanks, irrigation of canals, etc., as compared with previous years?

(b) The income of the District Board from Road and Public Works Cesses during 1920-21 is Rs. 2,26,236.

(c) The Chairman of the District Board reports:—

“ The grant will be paid in three years—

				Rs.
1920-21	10,000
1922-23	10,000

The amount allotted for this year (1920-21) has been paid out of the surplus of the preceding year. There is no large project for construction of roads, etc., for the year 1921-22. So the sum of Rs. 30,000 to be paid in 1921-22 can be paid without any detriment to the work of construction of roads, etc., for which a sum of Rs. 83,354 has been allotted. This amount was considered sufficient for that year by the members present at the last Budget meeting held on the 20th December, 1920. The Budget has been approved by the Commissioner. The sum of Rs. 10,000 to be paid in 1922-23 would be easily met even from the savings of that year.”

(d) No. A statement showing the estimated expenditure for the current year, as compared with the actual expenditure under the different heads during the previous two years, is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to question No. 3 (unstarred) showing Budget Estimates on Civil Works in 1920-21 and actual expenditure incurred in 1918-19 and 1919-20.

Allowances to officers of the subordinate and lower subordinate educational services.

4. Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: (1) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Education Department be pleased to state—

- (a) why no substantial allowance has been granted to the officers of the subordinate educational service and the lower subordinate educational service as yet on account of high prices of food-stuffs; and
- (b) whether it is the intention of the Government to give some temporary allowance to those officers till the re-organization scheme of the said services is given effect to?

(2) If the answer to clause (b) is in the affirmative, when and from what date and what allowance do the Government propose to give?

(3) If the answer is in the negative, when and from what date is the said scheme likely to be given effect to?

(4) At what stage is the scheme now standing and what steps are being taken to expedite the matter?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (1) (a) The question of the revision of the pay of the subordinate and lower subordinate educational services has been taken up by Government. A committee was appointed in Government Resolution No. 872 T.—Edn., dated the 9th October, 1920, to examine and report upon the present pay and prospects of officers of these services and to recommend such changes of pay as might be considered desirable.

(b) The report of the committee has been submitted to Government and is now under consideration. The committee's report includes a recommendation to the effect that if there is any delay in putting into operation their main recommendations, a temporary allowance should be granted in compensation. Government propose to act upon this recommendation in the event stated.

(2) and (3) In the circumstances stated in the preceding answers, Government are not in a position to give the detailed information required.

(4) Endeavours are being made to expedite the issue of orders on the proposals of the committee.

Number of collegiate students.

5. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to make a statement showing for the last quinquennial period the number of aided and unaided colleges together with the total numbers of students on the rolls of these institutions?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: A statement is laid upon the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 5.

Periodical surveys and reports of internal water-ways.

6. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a)

With reference to the answer given to unstarred question No. 29 at the meeting of the 21st February, 1921, will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state whether periodical surveys are made and reports are called for by his Department on the conditions of such internal water-ways as the "Lohajang"?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the last report on the Lohajang?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of IRRIGATION (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): (a) No.

(b) The question does not arise.

Scarcity of good drinking water in the Vishnupur subdivision in Bankura.

7. Mr. AJOY CHUNDER DUTT: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state what steps, if any, are being taken to clean the village tanks in the subdivision of Vishnupur?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that great distress prevails in the subdivision of Vishnupur by reason of the scarcity of good drinking water, and, if so, what steps are being taken to remove the want?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) No programme has been prepared for cleaning the village tanks in the subdivision as the District Board have no power to deal with private tanks. The practice followed is that when the Sanitary Inspector in the course of his tours in the interior of the district finds any tank which is insanitary, he reports the fact to the Chairman of the District Board, who issues a notice on the owner to clean the tank by a specified date. In most cases the notices are obeyed and the tanks are cleaned, but occasionally there have been cases in which the owners failed to comply with the requisition. In such cases the District Board could not take further action as the law did not authorize them to take any.

(b) There is scarcity of good drinking water in parts of the Vishnupur subdivision, and the Bankura District Board have been trying to remove it gradually by excavating wells every year, so far as their limited resources would permit. The District Board propose to improve the water supply of the district further by taking a loan from Government.

Improving the condition of the officers of the Registration Department.

8. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Education Department be pleased to state whether it is a fact that at the time of the introduction of the Registration Act, the Hon'ble the Member in charge said that the Registration Department would not be regarded as a revenue department and the receipts of the department would be utilised for improving the department?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge be pleased to state how the big surplus of the last year was utilised and what portion of the current year's surplus they intend to utilise for improving the condition of the officers of the department?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) From the official abstract of the proceedings of the meeting of the Council of the Governor-General of India, held on the 24th March, 1871, it appears that the views mentioned in the question were expressed by Mr. F. S. Chapman, who added that it would be satisfactory for him to learn that his opinions were in accordance with those of the Government of India. Mr. Ellis also stated that he thought that it was not proper that registration fees should be regulated so as to form a source of revenue. In reply, Sir Richard Temple stated: "If it was merely meant that there was no desire to make a revenue, then he thought the Members of the Government of India would be able to express their entire concurrence. Of course, it was known that the scale of fees was fixed with a view to recover the cost of registration. If, after fulfilment of the requirements of the law and the needs of registration, there should remain a surplus, it would then be a question for the Government of India to consider whether the fees for registration should not be slightly reduced, or some further expansion of the system be made. If that was the view taken by the Hon'ble Members who had spoken, he would express his entire concurrence in their remarks. But to do more would be impossible under the existing system of accounts; we could not devote any branch of revenue for any particular purpose. Every source of income was entered gross, both on the receipt side and on the expenditure side; and it would be impossible to deal differently with any particular branch of the revenue."

(b) In view of the reply given to clause (a) this question does not arise.

Public Works cesses from the subdivisions of the Hooghly district.

9. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state the amount of Public Works cesses annually realised and credited to the District Board of Hooghly from the subdivisions of Arambagh, Serampore and the Sadar subdivision of the district of Hooghly during the last three years?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEE: Figures showing the amounts of Public Works cesses annually realised and credited to the District Board of Hooghly from the subdivisions mentioned in the question are not available.

Pay of Sub-Registrars.

10. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: (a) Has the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Education Department received a memorial from the Sub-Registrars for increment of salary and the introduction of a time scale of increment?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state as to when the decisions of Government on it will be announced and from what date they intend to sanction increments, if at all?

(c) Are the Government aware that the reasons for granting increment of salaries with retrospective effect in the higher services exist also here?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The question of improving the pay and prospects of Sub-Registrars is under consideration, and Government are not at present prepared to make any statement of their intentions.

(c) The question of giving retrospective sanction to a revision of pay will be considered in connection with the financial position of Government.

Creation of a new subdivision at Sandwip.

11. Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state whether it is in the contemplation of the Government to open a subdivision at Sandwip Island comprising the same and other sister islands within the jurisdiction of the district of Noakhali?

(b) If so, how far has the scheme, if any, proceeded, and have any steps been taken in that direction till now?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The answer is in the negative.

(b) Does not arise.

Private and aided colleges.

12. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to say what were the total numbers of students on the rolls of private colleges in each of the last 10 years?

(b) What ratio of the cost of education of a pupil in an aided college did the Government bear during each of the last 10 years?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) and (b) A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 12.

Suspected "kala azar" in Tangail and Manikganj.

13. Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it has come to the knowledge of the Government that the endemic fever in the subdivisions of Tangail and Manikganj is suspected to be kala azar and not malaria, and that such fever is devastating the locality?

(b) Are the Government prepared to institute local inquiries and an investigation by competent agency in some important centre to settle the question with a view to ensure a proper method of treatment, and to advise local medical men to discriminate between the two diseases?

(c) Are the Government aware that it is reported that prejudice against quinine among the people is becoming extensive owing to its wrong administration in cases of kala azar?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) and (b) Special inquiries have been made in both the subdivisions mentioned and the results are summarized as follows in resolution No. 1355 San., dated the 27th December, 1920, reviewing the working of the Public Health Department during the year 1919:—

“ In the Tangail subdivision in the Mymensingh district, it appears that there is a high rate of kala azar infection, and the District Board has been urged to start a campaign against the disease on systematic lines. In the Dacca district the result of the inquiry is to show that a severe stage of infection has not yet been reached, and it rests with the District Board to make a thorough survey of infected areas and to arrange for treatment, which should not only prevent the further spread of the Government are informed that the Mymensingh District Board propose to start 18 centres for kala azar treatment in Tangail under the control of six doctors, each of whom will visit each of three centres for two days each week. It is understood that diagnosis between kala azar and malaria is not easy and that the two diseases are frequently confused. A copy of a circular* on the subject by the Director of Public Health is laid on the library table.

Gaibandha Sub-Registry Office.

14. Maulvi HAMID-UD-DIN KHAN: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education been drawn to the difficulties of the people whose documents for registration are returned for four or five days successively before their registration at Gaibandha Sub-Registry Office?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister state what steps have been taken on the representations of different bodies asking for an extra officer to cope with the heavy work in the above office?

*Not printed in these Proceedings.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) It has been ascertained that owing to the increase in the number of documents presented, viz., from 6,529 in 1919 to 7,297 in 1920, there has been some delay in registrations.

(b) A representation from the local Bar has been received by the District Registrar, Rangpur, and it is understood that he is about to submit proposals for the appointment of a Joint Sub-Registrar.

Partition of Bakarganj district.

15. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to say whether it is a fact that there was a proposal to partition the district of Bakarganj?

(b) If so, is the partition scheme still in the contemplation of Government?

(c) If so, can the Government give an approximate time within which the scheme will be carried out?

(d) If not, are the Government considering the desirability of directing that the partition of the district of Bakarganj be effected at an early date, before the partition of any other district, if any others are in contemplation?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The Bengal District Administration Committee recommended that the present district of Bakarganj should be divided into two districts.

(b) and (c) The proposed partition of Bakarganj has been held in abeyance and it is impossible to say when it will be taken up.

(d) The answer is in the negative.

Gun Licenses.

16. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to say whether there is any other country in the world, besides India, where the natives of the country are not permitted to possess guns or arms without license?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the number of gun licenses granted and renewed in each district of Bengal in the year 1919?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the number of gun licenses granted and renewed under the new Arms Act of 1920 in each district of Bengal in the years 1920 and 1921 year by year, other than those of persons who would have been exempted under the previous Act as privileged?

(d) Is it a fact that license fees are realised from those who are allowed to possess guns for killing wild birds and beasts to protect cattle and crops and from those who have to possess arms for the purpose of performing public duty such as police officers?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of directing that such persons be exempted from paying any fees for possessing guns

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) There is at least on other country in the world besides India, viz., England, where the natives of the country are not permitted to possess guns or firearms without license. It is not proposed to conduct a world-wide inquiry in order to answer the question in its widest form.

(b) It is understood that licenses for the possession of guns in old forms XV, XVI, XVII and XVIII are meant. A statement is laid on the table.

(c) Figures relating to the administration of the Arms Act during 1920 are not yet available. The annual reports are due to Government on the 1st of April.

(d) Licenses for the possession of arms and for going armed for the destruction of wild animals which do injury to human beings, cattle or crops, are issued free of all fee. Public servants, such as police officers, are not required to take out licenses for arms which they are obliged to bear or possess.

(e) The question does not arise.

Separation of the Judicial from the Executive.

17. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to say whether it is a fact that there was a proposal to separate the Judicial from the Executive?

(b) Is it a fact that the Government asked for opinions from the executive officers whether they wished to serve either in the one or the other branch of the service?

(c) Can the Hon'ble the Member give any information as to whether the Judicial is to be separated from the Executive? If so, when?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) Proposals for the further separation of Judicial and Executive functions have been advanced at various times.

(b) Each year those officers of the Indian Civil Service who have completed 12 years' service are allotted either to the Judicial or to the Executive Branch. With a view to this allotment the officers recruited in 1908 were recently asked to declare their choice in the matter, but this is merely in accordance with the usual annual procedure.

(c) This Government is not in a position to make an announcement at present.

Grievances of civil court peons.

18. Babu NALINI NATH ROY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department been drawn to the resolutions passed at the Bengal Civil Court Peons' Conference held at Dacca regarding the grievances of these men, viz., inadequate pay, unjust guard-duty, promotion, etc.?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what steps are being taken to redress the same?

(c) What is the duty of the process-servers?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of directing that such persons be exempted from paying any fees for possessing guns?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) There is at least one other country in the world besides India, viz., England, where the natives of the country are not permitted to possess guns or firearms without a license. 18. Babu NALINI NATH ROY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department been drawn to the resolutions passed at the Bengal Civil Court Peons' Conference held at Dacca regarding the grievances of these men, viz., inadequate pay, unjust guard-duty, promotion, etc.?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what steps are being taken to redress the same?

(c) What is the duty of the process-servers?

(d) What are the total amounts realised from process fees and the balance left after paying the process-servers their pay, during the last three years, 1918-20?

(e) For how many days in a month on an average was a peon deputed to process-serving work during that period?

(f) Besides process-serving, are the process-servers deputed to the works of orderly, office-peon and night-guard?

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): (a) Yes, a copy of the proceedings of the conference was forwarded to Government informally.

(b) In view of the fact that the pay of the process-servers was raised only in May last, Government do not propose to take any further action in this connection.

The process-servers are appointed in accordance with the rules framed by the High Court under the Court Fees Act and their number is regulated by the number of processes to be served. They are therefore on the temporary establishment. They belong to what is designated the 'inferior service' and are men of little education. They cannot therefore be given the privileges enjoyed by Government servants on permanent establishments or of a "superior service." Nor can they generally be promoted to ministerial posts on account of their educational disqualification. Government do not therefore propose to take any action on the resolutions, several of which are of vague character.

(c) The duty of the process-servers, as the very name implies, is to serve processes, whether they be summonses, warrants, notices or whatever be the description.

(d) The member is referred to the reply given to the question asked by the Hon'ble Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri at the Council meeting of the 1st September, 1920, which contains the figures for 1915 to 1919. The figures for 1920 are not available.

(e) No information on the subject is available.

(f) Prior to 1902 complaints were received that process-servers were employed in some places on work other than service of processes, and Government in their circulars No. 3460 J.D., dated the 17th October, 1902, and No. 3884 J., dated the 31st October, 1903, strictly prohibited this practice. No instance of a breach of these orders has since been received.

List of certain heads of expenditure not requiring submission to the Council.

19. Colonel A. J. PUGH: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to lay on the table a list, so far as Bengal is concerned, of all persons (other than High Court Judges and the Advocate-General) "appointed by or with the approval of His Majesty or by the Secretary of State in Council" (as referred to in section 11 (3) (iv) of the Government of India Act, 1919), indicating in each case the date of, and salaries attached to, such appointments.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: The Governor and Members of the Executive Council are appointed by His Majesty by warrant under the Royal Sign Manual. In accordance with the rules framed under section 96 B (2) of the Government of India Act, all first appointments to an all-India service, other than appointments made by promotion to such service of officers belonging to some other service or of members of the bar appointed to posts ordinarily held by the members of the Indian Civil Service, shall be made by the Secretary of State in Council. In the same rules the all-India services are defined as consisting of—

(a) all officers serving under local Governments who are members of any of the following:—

- (1) The Indian Civil Service.
- (2) The Indian Police Service.
- (3) The Indian Forest Service.
- (4) The Indian Educational Service.
- (5) The Indian Agricultural Service.
- (6) The Indian Service of Engineers.
- (7) The Imperial branch of the Civil Veterinary Department.
- (8) Officers of the Indian Medical Service in civil employ and any other service declared by the Secretary of State in Council to be an all-India service.

(b) Military officers and other officers holding posts borne on the provincial cadres of the above services.

For a list of the persons employed in these services, together with the dates of and salaries attached to their appointments, the member is referred to the Bengal Quarterly Civil List.

Appointment of a Muhammadan as a deputy-collector of income-tax.

20. Mr. RAZAUR RAHMAN KHAN: (a) Will the Hon'ble the member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state whether any Muhammadan has been appointed as a deputy-collector of income-tax since the creation of the office?

(b) If the answer to clause (a) is in the negative, are the Government considering the desirability of appointing a Muhammadan on a vacancy occurring in the office?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): (a) The reply is in the negative.

(b) The matter will be considered when a vacancy arises.

Report on the merits of the regulations as to recording votes in the general constituencies.

21. Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to say whether the Government are considering the advisability of calling for a report from each polling officer on the merits of the regulations prescribed by the Government in respect of recording of votes in the general constituencies?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Reports as to the suitability of the electoral rules and regulations have already been obtained from Commissioners and District Officers who were returning officers at the recent elections, and also from the revising authorities for the Calcutta constituencies. The returning officers have given their opinions after consulting selected presiding officers and revising authorities, and it is not proposed to call for further reports.

These papers are under examination and if they point to the need of change in any of the regulations the requisite steps will be taken.

Revision of the pay of the ministerial and menial services.

22. Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state whether the Committee which has been appointed to advise on the revision of the pay of the ministerial and menial services has come to any decision regarding the rate of increase to be given? If so, is the report unanimous?

(b) If not, will the Hon'ble the Finance Member be pleased to state on what basis the extra provision of Rs. 45,61,000 in the coming year's Budget has been made, and whether the Committee was consulted before the figure was inserted in the Budget?

(c) If the answer to (a) be in the negative, will the Hon'ble the Finance Member be pleased to state whether, if as a result of the recommendation of the Committee and further consideration of the subject, the amount is found insufficient, it will be possible later to supplement the provision?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Finance Member be pleased to state separately the number of ministerial and menial officers concerned, the total present cost on account of salary including acting allowance for each class and the percentage which the proposed Rs. 45,61,000 bears to the cost thus shown?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) The report of the Committee has not been received and is not expected before the end of March.

(b) The figure of Rs. 45,61,000 was arrived at by rough calculation in consultation with the President of the Committee.

(c) If necessary, a supplementary demand will be submitted to the Legislative Council.

(d) It would take much time and trouble to collect this information. Full details will be given in the Committee's report.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Is it proposed to publish the evidence that has been taken by the Committee for the information of the members of this House?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: That question cannot be considered until the report of the Committee is received.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: What is the highest and lowest grade of pay settled by the Committee?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: Nothing has been settled as the inquiry is still in progress.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Is any retrospective effect proposed to be given to these officers as has been done in the case of the higher grade officers?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: The question does not arise.

The Fisheries Department.

23. Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state from what year the Fisheries Department has been in existence in Bengal?

(b) What has been the total expenditure on the Department up to date?

(c) What practical and research work has the Department done up to date?

(d) If so, with what result?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to give the list of the experts in charge of the Department, with their emoluments and qualifications?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) December 1911.

(b), (c) and (d) The member is referred to the reply to unstarred question No. 50 (a) by Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur in the Council meeting of 7th February, 1921.

(e) A statement is laid on the table.

Amount sanctioned for the Bangabasi defamation case.

24. Babu JOCESH CHANDRA SARKAR: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state what amount has been expended by the Government up to date in the case Dwijendra Nath Ghose versus the proprietors of the Bangabasi newspaper (otherwise known as the Bangabasi defamation case) now pending in the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court, and also what further amount has been sanctioned for the case?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: A sum of Rs. 88,853 has been expended up to date. No additional amount has yet been sanctioned.

Rifles and revolvers to European police sergeants.

25. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state what is the strength of the European police sergeant force in Calcutta?

(b) What percentage of them is allowed the use of revolvers and rifles?

(c) Under what conditions are they allowed the use of revolvers and rifles?

(d) What qualifications, if any, are required to be satisfied before a European sergeant is considered competent to have revolvers and cartridges allowed to him?

(e) What instructions, if any, are given to the sergeants as to their use, and what precautions are taken against their abuse?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) There are 152 European and Anglo-Indian sergeants.

(b), (c) and (d) All sergeants undergo a course of instruction and practice on a local range, and revolvers may be issued to those who pass a qualifying test. Revolvers are carried by sergeants on certain night beats and are also issued to sergeants sent out on alarms of serious riots or other emergencies. Muskets are not ordinarily issued, but are kept in reserve for use in emergencies.

(e) Sergeants when supplied with revolvers are cautioned that they must use them only as a last resort in accordance with the instructions of Government. A resumé of the Government instructions on the subject of the use of firearms by the police in suppressing disorders is appended.

Resumé of Government instructions regarding the use of firearms by the Police in the suppression of disorders.

When it is necessary to fire upon a mob, this must be done in such a way that the fire shall be immediately effective. Experience has shown that the use of blank cartridge does not succeed in checking a determined mob, and in fact often produces the opposite effect, and may ultimately result in more loss of life than would have been the case had the firing been effective in the first instance. The issue of blank cartridge on such occasions has, therefore, been absolutely forbidden. For the same reason the practice of firing over the heads of a crowd has been interdicted. This method in fact not only often fails to convince a mob of rioters of the determination of the police or the military to suppress the riot, but has the additional disadvantage of possibly sacrificing innocent persons, while sparing the guilty. The order to fire should only be given in the last resort, and when it is impossible to disperse the mob by any other means. But when the order is given, the firing should be at once effective, and must be such as, with the minimum of injury, to convince the crowd of the necessity of immediately dispersing. The mob should be kept at a distance, so that the police may not be overwhelmed by a rush; full and sufficient warning should be given by the civil officer or the squad commander, as the case may be, to the rioters of the consequences of failure to disperse; when firing has to be resorted to, it must be immediately effective, but no more than is necessary in the circumstances of the case. file firing, section firing and volley firing should be used according to the distance that separates the mob from the police, or the degree of danger to which the police or the life or property of members of the public are exposed, and, lastly, the word "cease fire" must be given as soon as the mob shows the slightest inclination of retiring or dispersing.

26. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to say whether it is a fact that there is no police-station at Chikandi, although there are three munsifs there?

(b) Is it in the contemplation of the Government to establish a police-station or an out-post at Chikandi?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The facts are as stated. The nearest thana is at Palong, four miles off.

(b) The intention is to open a police-station at Chikandi when the proposed subdivision with headquarters at Chikandi is formed. It is not possible to state when this project will be taken up.

Residential accommodation of Munsifs at Chikandi.

27. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to say whether it is a fact that munsifs at Chikandi have got to live in thatched huts with mud plinths as tenants of pleaders and pleaders' clerks?

(b) Is it a fact that Mr. J. C. H. Macnair, the then District Judge of Faridpur, drew the attention of the High Court in the Annual Administration Report to the miserable conditions under which munsifs have got to live at Chikandi?

(c) If so, what steps have since then been taken by the Government to remedy the defects?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of recommending to the High Court to make Chikandi a two years' station for munsifs like Bhanga in the same district?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) Yes. Government are aware that the munsifs at Chikandi live in thatched houses owned by private landlords.

(b) The annual administration reports are submitted by District Judges to the High Court and not to Government who have no information in the matter.

(c) It is the policy of Government to provide munsifs at outlying stations with suitable quarters and, as a matter of fact, houses have been built at many places, but the progress has not been very rapid on account of the shortness of funds. In the case of the munsifs at Chikandi administrative approval was given in 1917 to the construction of residences at an estimated cost of Rs. 18,500 which was revised in 1919 to Rs. 30,840. It is proposed to allot Rs. 10,000 to the project during the next financial year.

(d) No. This is a matter which lies entirely at the discretion of the High Court.

Pay and prospects of the Subordinate Educational Service.

28. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state when the scheme to increase the pay and settle the prospects of the Subordinate Educational Service is likely to be published?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: The Government of Bengal are not at present in a position to make any statement.

Pay of clerks in Government employ.

29. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state what steps are being taken to increase the pay of clerks in Government employ in view of the rise of the price of the necessities of life?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: Government have appointed a committee consisting of Mr. McAlpin, I.C.S., Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur and Mr. S. N. Roy, I.C.S., to advise as to the revision, in accordance with modern economic conditions, of the pay of the permanent ministerial establishments in all Provincial offices, as well as in the Imperial offices under the control of the Local Government in this Presidency. As an ad-interim measure Government have sanctioned the grant of temporary allowances with effect from the 1st April, 1920. Copies of two resolutions,* dated the 1st September and the 2nd November, 1920, dealing with these questions have been placed on the library table.

Chaukidars and chaukidari tax.

30. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state what was the total number of chaukidars in each of the several districts of Bengal during the last five years ending in 1920?

(b) What was the total amount paid to the chaukidars as salary in the said districts during such period?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the amount of receipts on account of chaukidari tax in Bengal, district by district, during each of the last five years ending in 1920?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a), (b) and (c) Information is being obtained from district officers and a statement will be laid on the table at a subsequent meeting.

Scheme for reorganising the Subordinate Civil Service.

31. Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the scheme for reorganising the Subordinate Civil Service has been finally drawn up and sent to the Government of India for sanction?

* Not printed in these Proceedings.

(b) If so, what is the scale drawn up by the Bengal Government?

(c) Has the sanction of the Government of India been obtained to the same?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that there is a widespread feeling of discontent amongst the members of the Subordinate Civil Service on account of the long delay in giving effect to the scheme?

(e) Is the Hon'ble the Member in a position to state when the scheme will be given effect to?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: The question of the reorganisation is still under consideration and it is hoped to make an announcement shortly. A scheme was submitted to the Government of India, but pending final orders upon it, its details cannot be disclosed.

Wards for phthisis cases in the Presidency General Hospital.

32. Mr. H. BARTON: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the two Pilgrim Memorial wards in the Presidency General Hospital, erected over six years ago chiefly for phthisis cases, cannot be brought into use for lack of the necessary funds to meet the expenses of the required nursing and menial staff?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that this has necessitated the mixing up of phthisis cases with other cases in the other wards and endangering the health of the patients.

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of making provision in the coming budget for the necessary funds to work these wards?

(d) If not, how do Government propose to meet the situation?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The wards were completed in February 1917. It has not yet been possible to open them owing to the difficulty of housing the extra nurses required.

(b) No. Phthisis cases are dealt with in the verandahs of the hospital wards and are not mixed up with other patients.

(c) and (d) A scheme for the construction of nurses' quarters at the Presidency General Hospital has been prepared, of which the estimated cost is Rs. 3,64,000; this scheme will provide accommodation for the extra nurses required for the phthisis wards. Government regret that owing to financial stringency it has not been possible to provide for the scheme in the Budget for 1921-22, and it will have to wait till funds are available.

"Kala azar" in Calcutta.

33. Mr. H. BARTON: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether the attention of Government has been drawn to the spread of kala azar in Calcutta?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to say whether a map exists of Calcutta from the kala azar point of view showing the chief endemic areas?

(c) If not, are the Government considering the desirability of having such a map made so that the medical authorities might know accurately which are the infected centres where the disease is maintained?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The number of deaths recorded as due to kala azar in 1920 was 162 equivalent to a death rate of 18 per thousand. No fewer than 48 or nearly 30 per cent. were imported cases. The average number of deaths from kala azar during the preceding three years was 90. The increase is probably more apparent than real and appears to be due to the larger number of cases coming into the city for treatment.

(b) No. The wards returning the largest number of fatal cases are—

Ward 1 Shampukur (14 deaths)—26 per thousand

Ward 9 Moocheepara (15 deaths)—23 per thousand

Ward 22—Bhowanipore (18 deaths)—32 per thousand

(c) The Chairman of the Corporation reports that a spot-map for other diseases is under preparation and kala azar will be included

Agricultural publications.

34. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state whether the Government agricultural publication in the vernacular are distributed free of charge to the presidents of the union boards?

(b) If not, are the Government considering the desirability of doing so?

(c) Do the district agricultural officers keep themselves in constant touch with the cultivators, with a view to instruct and help them on modern methods of cultivation and, if so, what is the nature of the help rendered?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) The Bengal Agricultural Department Year Book in Bengali is distributed free to the union boards. Other agricultural publications are also supplied free to them on requisition.

(b) The question does not arise.

(c) The main duties of the agricultural officers are to get the cultivators interested in agricultural improvement by personal discussion and visual demonstration. They are the chief means by which the Department brings home the results of scientific research and experiment to the agricultural population. The agricultural officers show the people in their own fields and on demonstration farms the advantages of improved varieties of crops and new manures and suggest remedies for crop diseases, insect pests, etc. These officers are also responsible for organising village agricultural associations and seed stores, which play an important part in introducing agricultural improvements of proved efficacy among the cultivators.

Subdivisional charitable hospitals.

35. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that most of the subdivisional charitable hospitals are on the verge of bankruptcy for want of funds?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: Government regret that owing to inadequate local support mutassal dispensaries including those at subdivisional headquarters, are in a state of financial embarrassment. Their financial condition has been described as follows by the Surgeon-General with the Government of Bengal:—"These institutions generally live a hand-to-mouth existence. Their income is hardly sufficient to meet the bare necessities in normal times and, when prices of drugs and other articles run high or when any equipment or furniture has to be purchased or replaced, there is no money to meet the charge. Subscriptions are promised, but paid most irregularly or not at all. Expenditure has on the one hand steadily increased and income on the other is uncertain or falling. The result is that either the most urgent necessities are not provided or are purchased on credit and payment of bills is put off from year to year."

It is the manifest duty of local bodies and of the public, which benefit by these institutions, to take steps to remedy this lamentable state of affairs.

Duties of deputy superintendents and inspectors of police.

36. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state the duties of deputy superintendents and inspectors of police in the subdivisions?

(b) Is it a fact that their duties are identical?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the number of deputy superintendents and inspectors of police in each subdivision of the districts of Bengal?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The main duties of deputy superintendents of police at subdivisions are contained in rules 125 and 126 of Part I of the Police Regulations, Bengal. The duties of circle inspectors are enumerated in rules 1—28, 266 and 279 of Part V of the same publication. Copies of the Police Regulations can be consulted in the Council Library.

(b) In subdivisions where there is only one inspector and no deputy superintendent of police, the inspector performs the duties of a subdivisional police officer. In subdivisions to which both officers are posted, which are the heaviest and most important charges, the intention is that the deputy superintendent will exercise general control and supervision, so as to get into direct touch with the subordinate police and the people; and be in charge of the entire administrative work and the duties of inspection; while the functions of the inspectors will relate more directly to the professional work of the prevention and detection of crime. A clear distribution of duties between these two officers on these lines has not yet been made in all cases. It is being tried experimentally in three subdivisions.

(c) There is an inspector in all subdivisions. A statement is given of those subdivisions in which there are deputy superintendents as well as inspectors.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 36 (c).

Subsidised Charitable Dispensary at Panjia in Jessore.

37. Babu NALINI NATH ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to place on the table a copy of the petition submitted by the inhabitants of Panjia to the Chairman of the District Board, Jessore, for the establishment at Panjia of a subsidised charitable dispensary?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to mention the amount of cost, recurring and non-recurring, that the villagers of Panjia expressed their intention to contribute to the establishment and upkeep of the dispensary?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to mention the measures, if any, that have subsequently been taken by the Board to give effect to the petition?

(d) If no steps have as yet been adopted, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to explain the reason for the delay?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a), (b), (c) and (d) A copy of letter No. 1382*, dated 21st February, 1921, from the Chairman of the District Board and of its enclosures, is laid on the library table.

Grievances of the Inhabitants of Panjia and the adjoining villages in the Jessore district.

38. Babu NALINI NATH ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to place on the table copies of addresses submitted to the Chairman of the District Board, Jessore, by the inhabitants of Panjia and the adjoining villages on the occasion of the Chairman's official visit to Panjia in June, 1919?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state specifically the measures, if any, which have since then been adopted by the said Board to remove the grievances as embodied in the addresses?

(c) If no steps have been taken as yet are the Government considering the desirability of instituting an inquiry to ascertain the extent and intensity of the grievances from which the people of the villages are suffering?

(d) If the Board have not adopted any remedial measures to remove the grievances of the villagers in question, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the reasons that the Board hold as a justification for its conduct?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The present Chairman of the District Board reports that no address was received in the office of the Board and that the District Board are not in a position to say whether any address was presented to the late Chairman on the occasion of his visit to Panjia in June 1919.

The questions asked in (b), (c) and (d) do not therefore arise.

Agricultural farms.

39. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state how many agricultural farms have been established since 1918 to facilitate instruction in improved methods of agriculture and where the same are situated?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: Three. They are located at Mymensingh, Bogra, and Comilla.

Bengal Civil Service (Judicial).

40. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state when the Government are likely to give effect to the scheme of appointing probationers in the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial)?

(b) Is it in the contemplation of the Government to increase the strength of the cadre of the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial)?

(c) Is it a fact that salary slips for Rs. 350 were not issued to certain officers of the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial) in spite of their confirmation because they could not, through no fault of their own, complete two years of actual service before the 1st December, 1919?

(d) Are the Government aware that some of these officers were confirmed more than three years and some even four years after the date of getting their first officiating appointment?

(e) Have the Government before them any proposal to modify the method of calculation of the period of an officer's service in these cases by ruling that an officer of the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial) who has been confirmed more than two years after the date of his first appointment should get Rs. 350 either on confirmation or on completion of two years' actual service, whichever occurs earlier?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) and (b) The member is referred to the replies given to Maulvi Fazlal Karim, M.L.C., on these points

(c) Yes.

(d) Yes.

(e) No. The salaries of the members of the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial), (Sub-Judges and munsifs) under the time-scale were fixed according to the length of actual service rendered by each officer. No departure can therefore be made from this principle in the case of junior officers who have not been given the confirmation pay of Rs. 350 per mensem.

Cases of cutting down trees instituted by landlords against their tenants.

41. Maulvi MUHAMMAD RAFIQUE UDDIN KHAN: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing separately the number of cases—

- (i) civil, and
- (ii) criminal,

brought during the last ten years by the landlords for cutting down tree against holders of occupancy rights or ryots within the province?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (i) and (ii) As the records of all such cases are not preserved for ten years, it is impossible to supply the statement.

Chaktai Khal project.

42. Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state—

- (i) whether there is a project to open out the Chaktai Khal in the town of Chittagong;
- (ii) if so, at what stage it is;
- (iii) what the probable cost will be of clearing out the whole of the khal to allow country boats to ply in the same; and
- (iv) when the project is likely to be taken up?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (i) There is no proposal to open out the Chaktai Khal in the town of Chittagong by the Irrigation Department.

- (ii) The question does not arise.
- (iii) No estimates were prepared for the work of silt clearance.
- (iv) The question does not arise.

Malaria in Tangail.

43. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self Government aware of the prevalence of the worst type of malaria within the municipal limits of the Tangail subdivision?

(b) If so, what steps are the Government taking with a view to ameliorate the condition of the people of the affected locality?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEE: (a) It is understood that the question relates to the Tangail municipality. Government are aware that there was an increase of malaria in the municipality in 1920, possibly as a result of low floods in the locality?

(b) Measures for the improvement of local conditions are primarily a duty of the municipality, Government has received no communication on the subject from the municipality.

Water-ways division at Dacca.

44. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: With reference to the answer given to my unstarred question No. 56 at the meeting of 1st July, 1920, will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the correspondence that passed between the local Government and the Government of India on the question of the formation of a permanent water-ways division at Dacca.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: Government regret they are unable to lay the correspondence asked for by the member of the table.

Hookworm investigations.

45. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state the final conclusions, if any, arrived at by the Government with regard to the Hookworm investigations undertaken by the Government and its bearing on the public health?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: As a result of the anti-hookworm campaign instituted by Government, valuable investigation work has been done, knowledge of the disease and its effects has been disseminated and progress has been made in establishing centres for diagnosis and treatment. In this connection reference is invited to resolution No. 38 T.—San.,* dated the 31st May, 1920, of which a copy is laid on the library table.

Non-payment of the price of bandage cloth for patients of police cases in hospitals.

46. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to say whether it is a fact that Government have stopped payment of the price of bandage cloth for patients of police cases in hospitals, and that consequently some of the hospitals have closed their indoor patient ward?

(b) If the answer to clause (a) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to say whether the Government are re-considering their decision in this matter?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The member is referred to the orders conveyed in Government order Nos. 167-71 T.—Med., dated the 19th June, 1919, to all Commissioners of Divisions, a copy of which is laid on the table. Government are not aware that any hospital has had to close its indoor patients' wards as a result of these orders.

Government do not see any reason to reconsider their decision.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 46.

Nos. 167-71 T.—Medl., dated Darjeeling, the 19th June 1919.

From—THE HON'BLE MR. C. F. PAYNE, I.C.S., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Finance (Medical) Department,
To—The Commissioners of the (1) Burdwan, (2) Presidency, (3) Rajshahi, (4) Dacca and (5) Chittagong Divisions.

I am directed to refer to the correspondence ending with your (1) letter No. 219 M., dated the 21st February 1919, (2) letter No. 193 L. S.-G., dated the 14th March 1919, (3) letter No. 1699 J., dated the 8th May 1919, (4) memorandum No. 2048 J., dated the 28th April 1919, and (5) letter No. 104 T. G.—X-3, dated the 21st March 1919, on the subject of the debit of the charges for dressings of patients in medico-legal cases in class III dispensaries. The reports submitted by the local officers show that there is at present a great diversity of practice obtaining in different localities in the matter. It appears that in the majority of cases these charges are met out of the funds of the dispensaries concerned; while in the remaining cases they are borne by Government, the expenditure being either debited to the Collector's budget under the head "Land Revenue—Supplies and Services—Hospital expenses of wounded persons," or under the head "Magistrate's grant—Law and Justice—Hospital expenses of wounded persons," or met from the Magistrate's contingent grant. I am to say that after a careful consideration of the question, the Governor in Council has decided that a uniform system should be observed throughout the Presidency in the matter of these charges.

2. Class III dispensaries are generally charitable institutions, and under the existing rules relating to these institutions any wounded person can attend at such a dispensary and claim to be treated and dressed. His Excellency in Council is of opinion that the fact that the police send him to the dispensary does not make any material difference to this aspect of the case, and considers that expenditure incurred on this account is a legitimate charge on the Dispensary Funds. He accordingly directs that the charges for the dressings of patients in medico-legal cases in class III dispensaries should henceforth be met in all cases from the funds of the dispensaries concerned, and I am to request that you will be so good as to issue the necessary instruction to the District Officers in your division and, through them, to the authorities of class III dispensaries.

3. I am to add that the charges on account of diet of patients in medico-legal cases will continue to be borne by Government as at present.

Electoral roll of the general constituencies.

47. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state on what basis the Southborough Committee estimated the number of voters in the general constituencies?

(b) Will the Government be pleased to state what steps were taken to acquaint the inhabitants of rural areas with the electoral rules especially those contained in Schedule II and when were these steps taken?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of ascertaining the cause of the heavy discrepancy in those cases where the number of electors on the roll of a general constituency is less than half the number estimated by the Southborough Committee?

(d) Has it attracted the notice of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department that while the number of voters on the electoral roll exceeds the number estimated by the Southborough Committee in the majority of Muhammadan constituencies the number of enrolled voters exceeds the said estimate in the case of only four out of forty-two non-Muhammadan constituencies?

(e) If it has not, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to refer to the statement submitted in answer to my question No 39 (unstarred) asked at the meeting of the 7th February, 1921, and to state whether this is a fact?

(f) If the answer to clause (e) is in the affirmative, are the Government considering the desirability of having the electoral rolls for non-Muhammadan general constituencies revised?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The figures of the number of electors, qualified by the payment of cess, given in the Franchise Committee's report, were obtained in four districts by a scrutiny of the record-of-rights, and in the remaining districts by rough and somewhat hurried calculation from the latest cess revaluation records. It was recognised at the time that the figures obtained would not be more than approximations. The number of chaukidari tax-payers was obtained by local inquiry.

(b) The electoral rules were not finally sanctioned by the Secretary of State until the end of July, 1920, but the provisional qualifications of electors were in the hands of panchayats by the end of February of that year, when the preparation of the draft rolls was initiated. So far as was practicable, publicity was given to the qualifications by the panchayats.

(c) No, because, as already stated, the estimates given by the Southborough Committee were admittedly rough calculations only.

(d) and (e) The fact to which the member draws attention appears to be borne out by the answer to question No. 39, asked at the meeting of the 7th February last. But in the preparation of the figures given by the Franchise Committee it was impossible to make due allowance for the Hindu joint family, and this probably increased the error in non-Muhammadan constituencies.

(f) There is no intention of revising the rolls of the non-Muhammadan general constituencies until the next general revision under the rules.

Admission into Medical College.

48. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: (a) With reference to the statement in reply to unstarred questions No. 13 (a), (b) and (c) for the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council of the 7th February, 1921, will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

- (i) the names and addresses of the M.Sc.'s who were selected in 1918, 1919 and 1920 for admission into the Calcutta Medical College, but who did not join;
 - (ii) whether the selected candidates are communicated with in writing, and, if so, what check is exercised by the authorities to safeguard the timely issue of those communications and their delivery at their respective destinations; and
 - (iii) whether these letters are sent out in registered covers or not?
- (b) Are the Government considering the desirability of making a pronouncement as to what should be the various qualifications of the candidates for admission into the Calcutta Medical College, and to submit a comparative table with different items of those qualifications applied to the unsuccessful B.Sc.'s (Honours) individually and also the successful I.Sc.'s (2nd and 3rd Divisions) individually, so as to justify the admission of the latter?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) (i) 1918.—

- (1) Bhupati Bhushan Datta, M.Sc., post office Tatwa, district Burdwan;
- (2) Jagadindra Nath Lahiri, M.Sc., Prithibir Itihasha office, Howrah;
- (3) Girijapada Bhattacharji, M.Sc., 12, Hara Lal Mitter Street, Calcutta.

1919.—Krishna Lal Sanyal, M.Sc., 43, Harrison Road, Calcutta.

1920.—(1) Hari Das Dalal, M.Sc., 52, Nemu Gossain Lane, Calcutta; (2) Sarat Chandra Dutt, 7, Halder Lane, Bow Bazar, Calcutta.

(ii) and (iii) As soon as the candidates are selected for admission in the Medical College, their names are posted on the notice-board for the information of the public. Most applicants or their relations and friends crowd to this board to see the list of selected candidates, and each selected candidate is also informed by letter signed by the Principal. The letters are duly checked by the Principal and then sent to the General Post Office. It is not possible to ascertain whether they are delivered at their respective destinations. These letters are not sent in a registered cover.

(b) The answer is in the negative. In this connection the member is referred to the answer given to clause (i) of the starred question No. IX asked by Mr. Tarit Bhushan Roy at the meeting of the Council held on the 21st February, 1921.

Dredging scheme regarding East Bengal rivers.

49. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to lay on the table a copy of the dredging scheme prepared by Rai Shailendra Nath Banarji Bahadur, Executive Engineer, Dacca, regarding East Bengal rivers?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The schemes prepared by Rai Shailendra Nath Banarji Bahadur, Executive Engineer, regarding the East Bengal rivers are under consideration and cannot therefore be placed on the table at present.

Connecting Dacca and Goalundo by a light railway.

50. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state what the distance is of Dacca from Goalundo by land and water, respectively, and if the distance by land is shorter, why a project to construct a light railway has not been encouraged?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC WORKS (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): The distance from Dacca to Goalundo via Aricha (on the left bank of Padma river opposite Goalundo) by land route is 55 miles (including 10 miles by river). The distance by the mail steamer route from Dacca to Goalundo is 101 miles (including 10 miles by rail from Dacca to Narayan-ganj). The distance by water by the Buriganga, Dhaleswari, Meghna and Padma rivers via Rajabari is about 96 miles. In regard to the construction of a railway from Dacca to Goalundo the member is referred to the information contained in the reply to unstarred question No. 7 put by Babu Brojendra Kishor Ray Chaudhuri at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on the 7th April, 1920, and to the Government of Bengal, Public Works Department, resolution No. 1316 R.,* dated the 16th November, 1920, a copy of which is laid on the library table.

The report of the Committee has not yet been received.

Silting up of waterways in Dacca and inconvenience of trade and commerce.

51. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware of the fact that the canals and the other waterways in the district of Dacca are silting up and that this is causing inconvenience to the expansion of trade and commerce? (b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what steps, if any, are contemplated to obviate this danger to trade and commerce?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN:(a) It is known to Government that a very large number of canals and other waterways in the Dacca as also other districts in the deltaic tracts are silting up, causing inconvenience to the expansion of trade and commerce in cases.

*Not printed in these Proceedings

(b) It is a very large question which cannot be successfully tackled with the staff, funds and dredging machinery at the disposal of the Government at the present time. Important routes in the province have been declared under the Canals Act, No. 5 of 1864, and these channels are maintained and improved as far as feasible.

Leprosy in Bankura.

52. Babu RISHINDRA NATH SARKAR: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the number of lepers in the district of Bankura has increased since the last census by at least 50 per cent., according to a rough calculation made by Mr. J. Vas, I.C.S., who was in charge of the district recently?

(b) What steps have been taken to check the progress of this disease?

(c) What is the sum, if any, granted to the authorities of the Leper Asylum in Bankura?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Government are aware that Mr. Vas estimated last year that there were 4,600 lepers in the district of Bankura, whereas the number recorded at the census of 1911 was 2,645.

(b) The action taken by Government in regard to leprosy will be apparent from the following remarks recorded in this Government resolution dated the 7th December, 1920, on the triennial report on the working of hospitals and dispensaries in Bengal for the years 1917, 18 and 1919:—

“ Leprosy.—This disease is treated chiefly in the three leper asylums Gobra, Raniganj and Bankura. The first is maintained by Government, while the other two are under the Mission to Lepers helped by Government. The scale of capitation grants paid from provincial revenues for adult lepers treated in the last two asylums was raised from Rs. 1-8 to Rs. 4 per head per mensem, with effect from April, 1919, and that for the untainted children of lepers to Rs. 2 per child. The Gobra Leper Asylum had an annual average population of 396, while the population at the Raniganj and Bankura asylums averaged 317 and 176 a year, respectively.

The Lepers Act has been amended so as to widen the definition of a statutory leper. The arrangements at present existing in the leper asylums are not up to date, while the accommodation provided therein is so insufficient. A more satisfactory way of dealing with the problem is to open large leper colonies or settlements, and the question of establishing a leper colony is engaging the attention of Government. The difficulty will be mainly financial.”

(c) The grant for the year 1920 amounted to Rs. 7,296.

Recruitment of depressed classes in Government service.

53. Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department aware of the Resolution of the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam, No. 1769-C, dated the 15th February, 1907, on the question of the employment of Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal and Assam in which reference was also made to the employment of important castes of Hindus other than those usually employed in Government offices?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware of the deputation on behalf of one of these communities, namely the Namasudra community, which waited upon Their Excellencies Baron Carmichael in July, 1912, and the Earl of Ronaldshay in July, 1917, and their replies with regard to the State patronage to be extended to the members of these communities?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the number of people belonging to the backward (depressed) classes comes to a figure of about ten millions, i.e., about half of the total Hindu population of Bengal?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to say what steps the Government are taking to carry out the wishes of Their Excellencies and the spirit of the resolution referred to above?

(e) Are the Government considering the desirability of issuing instructions in this matter to those responsible for recruitment?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) Yes.

(b) The policy of Government was explained by His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay in July, 1917, to a deputation of the Namasudra community in the following terms:—

“The Government desires to make no distinction between one caste and another; between one creed and another; that is, the Government is prepared so far as patronage is concerned, to give equal opportunities to the members of all communities who prove themselves competent, and you may rest assured that Government will consider not only fairly, but also sympathetically, the claims of such members of your community as have proved themselves competent.”

(c) Estimates of the number of people belonging to the backward or depressed classes vary according to the classes which are accepted as falling within this category; but the number is generally taken to be some 7 or 8 millions in Bengal.

(d) The policy of Government as outlined above is known to those responsible for recruitment; for instance, one member of the Mahishya and one of the Namasudra community were recently appointed to the Subordinate Civil Service.

(e) Government do not consider that it is necessary to issue any further instructions.

Works of river improvement.

54. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state what works of river improvement have been undertaken and completed during the last four years?

(b) What dredging operations are now in progress in the rivers in the Dacca Division?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Works in regard to river improvement which have been undertaken during the last four years by the Irrigation Department are as follows:—

- (1) Improvement of the Gabkhan Burhani Khal in the Bakarganj district.
- (2) Silt clearance of the Manikdah entrance channel or the western approach to the Madaripur Bil Route.
- (3) Dredging shoals in the river Madhumati at Girishnagar on the inland steamer route.
- (4) Improvement of the Lower Kumar river at Charmaguria the eastern approach of the Madaripur Bil Route.
- (5) Removing shoals in the Nurea channel at Jobsa, another eastern steamer approach to the Madaripur Bil Route.
- (6) Easing bends between Futteypur and Takerhat in the Madaripur Bil Route.
- (7) Dredging shoals in the river Attarabanka between its off-take with the Madhumati and Sachiada on the steamer route between Khulna and Barisal. For these works both the suction dredgers Foyers and Alexandria were employed.

- (1) Silt clearance of the Manikdah entrance channel.
- (2) Improvement of the Gabkhan Burhani Khal in the Bakarganj district, continued and completed.
- (3) Easing bends between Futteypur and Takerhat in the Madaripur Bil Route.
- (4) Dredging sidings along the Madaripur Bil Route.
- (5) Dredging shoals in the Dhalleswari river, Dacca district.
- (6) Dredging the deteriorated portions of the channel in the Madaripur Bil Route near Olpur.
- (7) Improving the Lower Kumar river at Charmaguria.
- (8) Dredging the shallow portions of the Madhumati river between Patgate and Girishnagar on the inland steamer route.

1919.

- (1) Dredging shoals in the Attarabanka river between its off-take from the Madhumati and Sachiada on the inland steamer route between Khulna and Barisal.
- (2) Commencing the work of widening and deepening the Madaripur Bil Route as sanctioned by the Secretary of State.
- (3) Dredging shoals in the Madhumati river on the inland steamer route.
- (4) Continuing the work of easing bends between Futteypur and Takerhat and excavating sidings in the Madaripur Bil Route.

- (1) Continuing the work of widening and deepening the Madaripur Bil Route.
- (2) Dredging the western end of the Doogra channel in the Sunderbans steamer route 24-Parganas.
- (3) Dredging shoals in the Attarabanka river.
- (4) Improving the Lower Kumar river.

Besides the above original and maintenance works carried out by the suction dredgers, training works were annually undertaken in the following rivers to improve and deepen the dry weather steamer and boat channels:—The Dhalleswari and Buriganga rivers, the entrance to the Bhagirati and the Ganges river at Rampur Boalia, and between Rajmehal and Goulundo.

(b) The dredger Alexandra is now working in the Faridpur district in the Dacca Division, in opening out a new outlet at the western end of the Madaripur Bil Route.

Improvement of sanitation in Hooghly and Howrah.

55. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the amount allotted by the District Boards of Howrah and Hooghly from their current year's budget for the improvement of sanitation in their respective districts and showing also what amount has been spent up to this time out of the allotted amount on the above head and on what items

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 55.

Name of District Board.	Amount allotted for the improvement of sanitation.	Amount spent up to 31st January, 1921.			Items on which spent.
	Rs.	Rs.	A	P
Howrah ..	13,745 (a)	6,697	10	6	1. Vaccination establishment. 2. Health Officer's charges. 3. Drainage and contingencies.
Hooghly ...	42,800	12,896	0	0	1. Entertainment of Health Officer and peripatetic medical officers. 2. Improvement of village sanitation by drainage and clearing of jungle. 3. Improvement of water supply.

(a) This includes Rs. 1,029-0-5, the Government contribution to the pay of the District Health Officer, but excludes Rs. 4,767 which was allotted on account of an anti-cholera campaign. In addition to a Government grant of Rs. 3,033 made for the purpose.

Areas under rice, sugarcane and cotton cultivation.

56. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing—

- (1) the percentage of annual increase in acres of the area under, and
- (2) the yearly variation in outturn per acre of—
 - (i) rice;
 - (ii) sugarcane; and
 - (iii) cotton;

since the organisation of the Agricultural Department under the Director of Agriculture?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: A statement showing the area in acres under—

- (1) rice;
- (2) sugarcane; and
- (3) cotton;

and the outturn per acre of these crops in each year since the organization of the Agricultural Department under a Director of Agriculture is laid on the table. The question assumes that there is an annual increase of the area under these crops, but, as the statement shows, this is not the case. It is therefore impossible to give the percentage of annual increase in the area.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 56.

Fee on the value of a holding for mutation of the names of transferees in the Midnapore district.

57. Babu SARAT CHANDRA JANAH: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Government have issued a circular recently instructing the authorities in charge of the Khas Mahal Department of Midnapore to realise a fee of 25 per cent. on the value of a holding, as a premium for mutation of the names of transferees?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware of the fact that no such premium was ever paid or demanded in the zamindari of Basudebpur, Jalamutha and Majnamutha estates, which have now been incorporated in the Khas Mahal, at any time since their creation?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) No special circular has been issued to the Khas Mahal authorities of Midnapore. Under clause (7) of rule 156 A of the Government Estates Manual, a fee of 25 per cent. of the value of a holding is to be levied on transfers by sales in estates under the direct management of Government in which the free right of transfer has not been recognised.

(b) No; the applicability of the rule mentioned above to the Jalamutha and Majnamutha estates is under consideration. The Basudebpur estate is under the Court of Wards.

Proportion of Muhammadan educational officers.

58. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Education Department be pleased to state the subdivisions and districts of Bengal where the Muhammadan population is more than 50 per cent.?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the number of Muhammadan sub-inspectors, deputy-inspectors and district deputy-inspectors of schools in Bengal?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the percentage of Muhammadan sub-inspectors, deputy-inspectors and district deputy-inspectors of schools in Bengal?

(d) Is there any Government circular to the effect that Muhammadan educational officers should be posted in places where Muhammadans predominate?

(e) If so, is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the circular is not generally given effect to in spite of repeated representations from Moslem associations, to the educational authorities for posting Muhammadan officers?

(f) Is it a fact that the Muhammadan population of Patuakhali subdivision is about 85 per cent.?

(g) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the number of educational officers in Patuakhali with their race and rank?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) A statement is laid on the table.

(b) Muhammadan sub-inspectors of schools 118, Muhammadan deputy-inspectors of schools 17, Muhammadan district deputy-inspectors of schools 11.

(c) Muhammadan sub-inspectors of schools, 44 per cent., Muhammadan deputy-inspectors of schools, 36·2 per cent., Muhammadan district deputy-inspectors of schools, 39·3 per cent.

(d) No. The reference is probably to Government of Bengal Resolution No. 1227 Edu., dated 3rd August, 1916, paragraph 10, the general tenor of which is to the effect that it is the policy of Government to employ Muhammadan educational officers in places where Muhammadans predominate, subject to the interests of the service and those of efficiency.

(e) The policy of Government as laid down in the resolution is followed by the Education Department in making its appointments.

(f) In the Patuakhali subdivision the Muhammadans constitute 83 per cent. of the total population.

(g) There are 6 officers stationed at Patuakhali, viz., 1 deputy-inspector of schools and 5 sub-inspectors of schools. The deputy-inspector and one sub-inspector are Hindus. The 4 remaining sub-inspectors are Muhammadans.

Bengal Civil Service and the officiating Munsifs.

59. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state—

- (i) when the scheme for appointing probationers to the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial) is likely to be given effect to?
- (ii) what is the number of officiating Munsifs at present?
- (iii) whether the existing cadre of the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial) will be strengthened? If so, by how many?
- (iv) whether all the existing officiating Munsifs will be amalgamated into the cadre?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (i) The matter is under consideration and no definite statement can be made at present.

(ii) Sixty-eight.

(iii) Yes; it has been proposed to the Government of India that the cadre of the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial) should be increased by 5 subordinate Judges and 40 Munsifs.

(iv) Yes.

Grand Trunk Canal project.

60. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to lay on the table all the correspondence with the Government of India relating to, and resulting in, the sanction of the Grand Trunk Canal project and the final selection of the present alignment?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether it is under contemplation to extend the northern limits of the town of Calcutta up to the Grand Trunk Canal?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) This Government regret they are unable to lay the papers on the table.

(b) The reply is in the negative.

Removal of Secretariat Press to Gopalnagar and inconvenience of press employees.

61. Babu HEM CHANDRA BHATTACHARJI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance aware of the fact that 99 per cent. of the employees of the Bengal Secretariat Press will be seriously inconvenienced by the removal of the Press from Writers' Buildings to Gopalnagar, Chetla, 24-Parganas?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that Gopalnagar is a malarious place?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that almost all the employees of the Bengal Secretariat Press, both salaried and piece-hands, are residing at Sham Bazar, Bagh Bazar, Kumartuli, Barnagore, Tala, Jorasanko, Sukea Street, Champatalla, Bow Bazar, Intally, Garpar, Narikeldanga, Salkea, Sibpur, Howrah, or Ramkrishnapur, and that the rest are daily-passengers on the East Indian, Eastern Bengal and Martin Railways?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware of the difficulty that will be experienced by the employees who will have to attend to their duties in Gopalnagar at 9 A.M. every day throughout the year? Is it the intention of Government to provide special conveyances for those men who live at long distances?

(e) Have the Government considered whether the expeditious printing of urgent and important Government work will suffer owing to the removal of the Press to Gopalnagar?

(f) Are the Government considering the desirability of reviewing the question of the removal with a view to cancelling the same?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) and (c) A certain amount of inconvenience will be caused to employees living in the north of and outside Calcutta by the transfer of the Press, but the site selected is the most suitable that can be found.

(b) Gopalnagar is not a specially malarious place. In 1918 and 1919 the proportion of fever cases attending Chetla Dispensary was 14 per cent. as compared with 25 per cent. for the rest of Bengal. The whole of the site for the new Press is being raised well above the road level and will be high and dry.

(d) Whatever site is selected, some inconvenience is certain to be caused to some of the Press employees. It is not Government's intention to provide special conveyances for men who live at long distances from the Press.

(e) Arrangements are being made to keep in constant touch with the Secretariat. The existing division of the Press into branches at Writers' Buildings and Sealdah causes more delay than the removal of the Press to Chetla will entail. The location of the Press in one building designed as a printing office will expedite work.

(f) The construction of a new Press at Chetla was forced on Government owing to the insanitary conditions under which the employees work in the present buildings. The new Press building has advanced so far that there can be no question of cancelling the move.

Printing Department and the regulation of the lines for the residence of workmen.

62. Babu HEM CHANDRA BHATTACHARJI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Finance Department be pleased to state whether the Printing Department comes under the Civil Service Department or under the Factories Act?

(b) What is the arrangement with regard to the same in England?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state as to whether the lines for the residence of workmen that come under the Factories Act are strictly regulated in connection with the provisions made in the same?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) Service in the Printing Department is regulated by the Civil Service Regulations. The working of the Presses is regulated by the Indian Factories Act.

(b) Printing presses in England come under the Factories Act in the same manner as other non-textile factories.

(c) Lines for the residence of workmen, if situated inside a factory compound, come under the Factories Act in regard to sanitary matters only.

Improvement of rivers in the Jessore drainage division.

63. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state what steps have been taken in connection with the improvement of the rivers in the Jessore Drainage Division?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The statement below shows the action taken in connection with the improvement of rivers investigated by the Jessore Drainage Division (Temporary) which was formed in September, 1912, and abolished in September, 1916.

Charitable Dispensaries and supply of quinine thereto.

64. Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

- (z) how many charitable dispensaries in each district are maintained by the district board and the municipalities;
- (u) how many again are maintained in each district by private charity;
- (iii) how many again are maintained in each district partly by private charity and partly with the aid from the district board or the municipalities in each district;
- (iv) what amounts are being spent by Government in each district outside Calcutta for medical arrangements and relief,
- (v) what amounts again are being spent by Government for medical arrangements and relief in Calcutta;
- (vi) how many thanas in each district have dispensaries and how many have not;
- (vii) what the population is in each of these thanas either having or not having such a dispensary;
- (viii) what the probable additional cost would be if additional dispensaries are to be started to meet the requirements of the situation;
- (ix) what steps the Government have taken or are going to take to start such additional dispensaries;
- (x) what amount the Government would be prepared to contribute to meet this problem;
- (xi) in which of the districts the death-rate is higher than the birth-rate, and what the ratio is of the death-rate to the birth-rate,
- (xii) whether it is a fact that the supply of quinine in the existing dispensaries is absolutely inadequate and, if so, is it due to the abnormal rise of the price of quinine, and
- (xiii) what the reason is of such rise in the price of quinine and what steps the Government are contemplating to bring down the price of quinine?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (i), (ii), (iii), and (iv) A statement (A) is laid on the table.

(v) Rupees 24,53,641 was spent by Government during the year 1919.

(vi) and (vii) A statement (B) is laid on the library table.

(viii) The average cost of a dispensary roughly amounts to—

For expensive districts, Rs. 6,244.

For cheap districts, Rs. 4,783.

Recurring cost, Rs. 2,026 a year.

(ix) and (x) The member is referred to the answer given to clause (b) of unstarred question No. 14 asked by Babu Jogendra Nath Roy at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on the 21st February, 1921.

In addition to the usual annual grants made by Government to hospitals and dispensaries the sum of Rs. 15,000 has been provided in the next year's Budget for grants to mufassal dispensaries.

(xi) A statement (C) is laid on the table.

(xii) It is a fact that the quantity of quinine administered at the majority of dispensaries is not adequate for the proper treatment of the malaria cases admitted. This is attributed to three main causes, viz., the meagre funds at the disposal of dispensary committees, the high price of quinine and patients' reluctance to continue the treatment once the fever is stopped. The failure to give effective doses of quinine is no new feature. It was noticeable when the price of quinine was much lower, but the rise in price has naturally made it more difficult to supply adequate amounts.

(xiii) It is due to an increase in the market rates for quinine outside India and to the fall in the rupee exchange, and these are causes over which this Government have no control.

Enumerators for census operations.

65. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue be pleased to state on what principle enumerators have been or are being recruited for census operations within the town of Calcutta and other parts of Bengal?

(b) What are the grounds, if any, on which exemption is granted?

(c) Is it a fact that enumerators are appointed without first ascertaining whether they have the time and the inclination to serve as such?

(d) Is it a fact that for the purpose of the census work appointments have been made in total disregard of the conveniences or inconveniences of persons so appointed in many instances?

(e) Does the Government approve of the policy of compelling the services of persons as enumerators who are unwilling or unable to serve as such?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) In rural areas in Bengal census enumerators were selected by the Charge Superintendent, a Government official, ordinarily on the recommendations of president panchayats and other men of local influence who were chosen to be supervisors. In mufassal municipalities the census enumeration is in the hands of the Municipal authorities who made the selection. In Calcutta it was anticipated that it would not be easy to obtain the services of enumerators. Accordingly the preliminary arrangements for house-numbering and demarcation of blocks was done by a paid staff. In November last a circular was issued to Government, mercantile and other offices asking for lists of volunteers from among their staff for employment as enumerators. These lists were the basis of the selection, but the number of volunteers from other than Government offices was disappointing. The persons who had volunteered were appointed and were asked to bring in others to help as far as they could.

(b) The Special Census Officer in Calcutta aims at relieving any enumerator who has stated his unwillingness to work and has relieved every one who has any physical disability to do it. The extent to which this has been carried out may be gauged from the fact that more letters of appointment of enumerators have been cancelled than the total number of the enumerators required. In other parts of Bengal the services of willing volunteers have generally been obtained with little difficulty.

(c) Enumerators have not been appointed whose names were not in lists of volunteers received from various sources. It has been presumed when their names appeared in lists sent from Government and other offices that they had the time to do the work.

(d) The answer is in the negative.

(e) Under section 10 of the Census Act (IV of 1920) it is an offence if a person appointed to be an enumerator refuses or neglects to use reasonable diligence in performing the duty imposed upon him; but it is the policy of Government not to use this power of compulsion except in the rare cases in which it is necessary to compel the services of enumerators in order to complete the work of enumeration.

Applications for grants from High English Schools.

66. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether there were any applications for capital and recurring grants from High English Schools during the current year?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing how many such applications were received and how they were disposed of?

DEPUTY SECRETARY, DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (Mr. W. W. Hornell): (a) Yes.

(b) A statement of the applications for capital grants, together with a brief statement of the action taken on each, is laid on the table. This contains all the applications received in the Director of Public Instruction's office during the financial year up to February 28th, 1921.

As Inspectors of Schools are competent to sanction petty cases up to Rs. 500, the list contains only major cases of capital grant applications.

Recurring grants are also sanctioned by the Inspectors and the information required on this head is not therefore readily available in the Director of Public Instruction's office. A supplementary statement will be laid on the table when the necessary information has been collected for subordinate offices.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 66 (b), showing applications for capital grants from High English Schools during 1920-21 received in the office of the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal.

Serial No.	Name of school and nature of project.	Amount of grant applied for.	Amount of grant recommended	REMARKS
		Rs.	Rs.
1	Sijgram-Hossanabad High English School, district Murshidabad. New school building.	6,003	5,329	Additional grant, original sanctioned grant being Rs 10,000. As funds are not available in 1920-21, the case will be considered in 1921-22; but the additional grant, if any is given, will exceed half the additional cost, the balance being met from local contributions.

Cadastral Survey.

69. Babu NALINI NATH ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state the objects that they had in view in commencing the cadastral survey of this province?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table a list showing the districts in which survey has been completed and also those in which the work has yet to be commenced?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table an account showing the expenditure that has been incurred in this connection in each of the districts in which the work has been completed?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether they had the following objects in view viz. :—

- (i) settlement and reduction of agrarian disputes, both civil and criminal;
- (ii) enhancement of cesses;
- (iii) detection and demarcation of Government khas lands;
- (iv) conversion of rents in kind into money rents; and
- (v) teaching the tenants their rights and privileges.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) It is assumed that the question refers to survey and settlement operations, and not merely to the cadastral survey stage of those operations. The objects which Government had in view in 1902 in undertaking survey and settlement operations, were as follows:—

- (1) the protection of the rights of the raiyats and the interests of the landlords, by giving them an accurate account of their landed interests,

(2) the prevention of agrarian disputes; and

(3) the preparation of maps, records and statistics useful alike to the people and the officers of Government employed on district administration.

(b) and (c) A statement is laid on the table.

(d) The objects are stated in the reply to (a).

List referred to in unstarred questions Nos. 69 (b) and (c) showing the districts in which cadastral survey has been completed and the expenditure incurred in each district and also the districts in which the work has yet to be commenced.

Voting of Grants.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: With your permission, Sir, I should like, before we commence the discussion of grants, to make, on behalf of His Excellency, a statement on a point connected with the Budget which it is understood has given rise to some criticism of the action of Government, possibly based on a certain amount of misunderstanding.

The Council will observe that the salaries of Ministers have been classed as non-voted, and His Excellency has learned that some at least of the members of this Council regard this action as an unjustifiable curtailment of the constitutional rights of the Council in relation to this particular item of expenditure. His Excellency, therefore, wishes me to explain the reasons on which the action of Government was based.

It will be within the recollection of Council that under section 52 (1) of the Government of India Act, the Governor appointed three Ministers on the same salary as that drawn by Members of the Executive Council. It will equally be within the recollection of Council that on the 11th February various motions under section 52 (1) to reduce that salary were debated and finally rejected in this Council.

A reference was made to the Advocate-General—the highest accredited legal adviser of Government—as to the precise effect of the rejection of these motions, and we were advised that the intention of the section seemed to be that the power to reduce the salary of Ministers could be exercised once only, and that the salary of Ministers was now definitely fixed. In connection with the discussion on which we are about to enter to-day a second reference was then made to the Advocate-General as to whether the salary of Ministers was now to be regarded as expenditure of which the amount is prescribed by or under any law within the meaning of section 72-D (3) (iii), which directs that nothing in section 72-D (2) shall require proposals to be submitted to the Council relating to a head of expenditure of that category. The answer of the Advocate-General was in the affirmative, and in accordance with that answer the expenditure in question was classed as non-voted.

The local Government have not the slightest desire to impede the Legislative Council in the exercise of any right conferred upon it by Statute, but as the question is one of an interpretation of a Statute they can only be guided by the opinion of their legal advisers. His Excellency is, however, aware that doubts have been expressed in some quarters as to the correctness of the interpretation thus placed upon the Statute, and in these circumstances he is taking further legal opinion, and, if necessary, is prepared to refer the point, through the usual channels, for an authoritative ruling of constitutional lawyers at home.

This will enable these doubts to be finally set at rest before the Budget of 1922-23, while as regards the present Budget the matter has only recently been debated and decided in Council.

His Excellency trusts that it will be clear to all that the sole wish of the local Government is to follow what is decided to be the intention of the Statute.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: Before the voting on grants begins I would ask permission to make a brief statement regarding the revised edition of the Budget and the Civil estimates which has been placed in the hands of members to-day. These volumes contain the latest figures, and it is proposed to work on them during the discussion on the demands for grants. I would ask the members of this Council to discard the old statements. I will only mention here the most important changes which have been made. The first change is that Income-Tax now appears in our Budget both on the receipt side and on the expenditure side. As I told the Council on the 21st February, the precise figure had not then been settled but we hoped that it would eventually be a figure which would make income and expenditure meet, and that result has been achieved. The receipt side of the estimate on page 1 of the Budget Statement now shows Rs. 93 lakhs under taxes on income, and the expenditure side shows a similar sum of Rs. 93 lakhs, made up of Rs. 1,29,000 under taxes on income as cost of establishment and Rs. 91,71,000 which is inserted under head "51" as part of the contribution to the Central Government. The result is therefore that our receipts and expenditure under income-tax balance and make no difference to the net actual financial position of the local Government.

The only other important changes made in the Budget are a reduction in the revised estimate for the current year of Rs. 7 lakhs under the head "Excise" and Rs. 6 lakhs under the head "Stamps." Under the latter head only half the reduction affects the provincial revenues and the other half is taken by the Government of India under the present financial arrangements. These changes in the revised estimate have been made on the basis of actual receipts up to the 31st January last. The importance of these changes so far as we are concerned is that they reduce our closing balance on the 31st March next by Rs. 10 lakhs, and there is consequently a corresponding reduction in the estimated closing balance of the year ending 31st March, 1922. The other alterations are of a minor character and most of them are due to a re-classification of the estimates between the "voted" and "non-voted" heads. In view of the remarks which were made in this House during the Budget discussion on this subject we have thoroughly overhauled these classifications in consultation with the Accountant-General. The final result which is shown on page 2 of the Budget is that out of a total expenditure of Rs. 1,275 lakhs a sum of Rs. 340 lakhs is "non-voted." Of this sum of Rs. 340 lakhs, Rs. 93 lakhs represents the income-tax expenditure to which I have already referred and Rs. 63 lakhs represents our contribution to the Government of India, while Rs. 4 lakhs represents the interest on capital irrigation works. This total of Rs. 160 lakhs is clearly "non-voted." The balance of Rs. 180 lakhs which we have classified as "non-voted" represents expenditure on other items which fall under section 72-D (3) of the Government of India Act and also expenditure on the excluded areas—Darjeeling and the Chittagong Hill Tracts. We do not propose at present to put any part of this sum of Rs. 180 lakhs to the vote of this Council because we believe it to be excluded from their notice under the provisions of the law, but I would like to say that the ascertainment of these non-voted items in this first year of the new Budget arrangements has been a matter of considerable difficulty. In many cases it has involved the tracing back of the history of appointments for several years. It is possible we may find hereafter that some of the items which are at present placed under the non-voted head should have been placed under voted, but if it should be so, the Accountant-General will not allow us to spend the money until we get permission from the Council; we may therefore find it necessary to come to the Council later on to ask for supplementary votes on this account. I explain this to show that there is no ground for the suspicion that seems to exist, that we have improperly placed certain items under the "non-voted" head. It would not help us to do so, because if the money ought to be voted the Accountant-General would not allow us to spend it without permission from the Council. One of the functions of the Committee on public accounts will be to keep us straight with regard to these matters, and to report any improper behaviour on our part to the Council.

Meanwhile the total demand for the grants which we shall ask the Council to make during the next fortnight comes to Rs. 934 lakhs as shown on page 2 of the Budget estimates, plus a sum of Rs. 69,02,000 for expenditure on the Grand Trunk Canal which we propose to meet from loans, and a sum of Rs. 14,41,000 to be advanced by us in loans to local bodies and agriculturists.

The Council may therefore safely confine their attention for the present to these demands.

The PRESIDENT: Before proceeding further, I wish to say that His Excellency the Governor has made an allotment of time for the discussion of the several demands of the local Government for grants. The paper has been circulated to you. His Excellency's object is to give the Council, during the 12 days allowed for the discussion under the rules, an opportunity of considering the grants under each major head. If the discussion of all the amendments under a particular head for which a separate allotment of time has been made is not finished within the time allotted, every amendment which has not been moved within that time will fall through. It is, therefore, for you to consider whether you should not economise the time given to you in such a way as to enable every mover of an amendment to place his motion before the Council.

Another way in which time can be economised is not to call for a division without due cause. I wish also to add that recently there was a question as to whether the 15-minutes adjournment in the evening should be granted. As you know, I called informally for an expression of the opinion of the Council, and the result was that 62 were in favour of the adjournment and 32 against it. The adjournment will, therefore, continue, but in order to give the Council the full 4 hours, I propose to sit till a quarter after 7 each day.

I have also to tell you that the statement made by Sir Henry Wheeler has no effect on the present debate, and no questions regarding the salary of Ministers can be raised while the voting of grants is going on.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN moved "that a sum of Rs. 69,32,000 be voted for expenditure under the head '5-Land Revenue' for the year 1921-21."

To take the last item which is the smallest first, I wish to explain that, with a view to obviate the necessity for the existence of revenue and expenditure accounts, the Government of India have ordered that all refunds from revenue in the civil estimates and the accounts, must be shown as deductions from actual collections. As, however, all revenue collected is deposited in full in the Treasury, refunds which represent excess amounts are regarded as expenditure which require the vote of the Council, and are therefore included in the demand for grants.

Within the amount of Rs. 59 lakhs odd there appears the grant we ask for survey and settlement. In view of the motions which will come up for a reduction of the provision in the Budget for survey and settlement, it will perhaps be better for the Council if the facts leading up to the Budget estimates are explained.

I already explained at some length the other day, in the course of the general discussion, that in 1915 the programme of survey and settlement work for the whole province was sanctioned by the Government of India. This programme replaced the programme of 1910. The 1915 programme provided for the carrying out of the survey and settlement work by four survey and settlement parties. In 1916 owing to the reduction of expenditure enforced by the war the four-party programme was reduced to a three-party programme. The result of this was that the operations in the Birbhum and Khulna districts, which should according to the programme have been finished by now, were not begun till the current year 1920-21. Murshidabad district was taken up in the same year according to the 1915 programme. In accordance with the Devolution Act, these three schemes were sanctioned by the Government of Bengal. The other operations in progress, namely, in Rajshahi Nadia, Jessore, Bankura and Pabna-Bogra were all sanctioned by the Government of India.

Besides these major operations, there are minor operations divided into the "land revenue" settlements and "advances recoverable" settlements. The cost of the latter is met out of sums deposited by the persons, on whose behalf they are made, and the same figure appears on both sides of the Budget. The land revenue settlements are for periodical settlements in Government estates and temporarily settled estates. This expenditure is unavoidable and the delay in carrying out such settlements involves loss of revenue. Postponement of some settlements of this nature was necessitated by the war, and this postponement involved loss.

In order to carry on the work according to the schemes sanctioned by the Government of India and by the Government of Bengal, the survey and settlement departments submitted estimates for expenditure amounting to Rs. 27,31,000. In addition to these estimates there were the following provisions in the Public Works Department Budget, under survey Rs. 2,57,000, under settlement Rs. 1,75,000. Provision in the Budget estimates for settlement operations was cut down by the Financial Department by Rs. 2,78,000 in all. The provision for buildings was also reduced by a Conference of Members and Ministers, and the following figures therefore now appear in the Budget estimates now under consideration :--

	Rs.
Survey	... 4,47,000
Settlement	... 24,53,000
Survey buildings	... 1,25,000
Settlement buildings	... 1,10,000

The Settlement Department are therefore already faced with the problem of carrying on the work according to the sanctioned programme with Rs. 2,79,000 less than they considered necessary. I would therefore suggest that as the figure for Survey and Settlement operations has already been reduced which will involve the people of the district in a loss, and it is not possible because there is not enough money to run settlement operations in a more economical fashion, it is obvious that if any of the motions for reduction be accepted, it would mean a loss of so much labour. Instead, therefore, of cutting down the figures in this manner arbitrarily, it would be wiser for the Council to wait till next year when proposals for new work and new traverses, such as that of Burdwan and other districts come up and it would be wiser for the members to consider the matter of voting, or voting down new survey programmes, instead of hampering works in progress and thereby increasing the costs of apportionment which would indeed be hard on the people of the district concerned, for I take it that the whole province is not going to bear the cost for the sufferers in a particular district. I mention this all the more clearly, because in the motions that have been brought in order to retrench expenditure it is important to note that out of the expenditure only one-fourth will fall on provincial funds, three-fourths being recoverable from the landlords and tenants of the districts benefited.

The PRESIDENT: In connection with the various amendments, I wish to tell the Council that all the amendments in connection with the survey and settlement operations will be moved one by one, and then I propose to have a general discussion on the whole subject. Amendments 4 and 5 are in identical terms, so only one can be moved; I therefore call upon Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta to move his amendment.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA moved "that the demand under '5—Land Revenue' be reduced by omitting from the Budget the whole amount provided for settlement operations in Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum."

At the outset, I want to make my position clear, by saying that it is not my intention to be obstructive, but I do say that the principle which has actuated me in moving this amendment and others, is this: I think it is the paramount duty of this Council to reduce expenditure to the lowest level consistent with the well-being of the province and the efficiency of the departments concerned. It is, therefore, not at all my intention to request this House to do away with all survey and settlement operations altogether. The larger question as to whether survey and settlement operations, as at present conducted, are for the good of the people, does not concern us to-day. There is a great deal to be said on both sides of the question, especially about the present method, which keeps clear of the very important revenue survey line, but I am not going to discuss that point at all. I take it for granted that survey and settlement operations have got to be undertaken. On that basis, I would like to point out that the work which is already in progress in the five districts—Jessore, Nadia, Bankura, Pabna and Bogra—ought to be quite enough for the coming year without troubling our heads with new work in the three districts of Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum. I know that Government is in the happy position of being able to realise three-fourths of the cost in this connection, but the money has to be spent first and the realisation comes only afterwards, sometimes long afterwards. Money is scarce just now; and I think it is the duty of this Council to see that no work is undertaken which can safely be postponed, even for one year. We must cut down the Budget grants in such a manner that the earmarked balance of 1½ crores, the amount which had been specially set apart for Education and Sanitation by the Government of India, may not be touched at all. That amount must be religiously set apart, so that, when schemes for the improvement of education and sanitation mature,— and the Ministers have given us hopes that they will mature,—we may be in a position to fall back upon our reserves.

Coming now to the point at issue, as far as a layman like me can understand the situation, not much important work has yet been done in connection with the survey and settlement operations of these three districts of Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum. As far as I have been able to gather, the preliminary work, if any work has been done at all, must merely have been traverse section work. Now in 1916, owing to war conditions, much preliminary work had to be postponed, and I do not think much harm was the effect of that. I submit that although the war is over, peace conditions are no better as regards finances. I think, if only traverse-section work has been done, we can safely wait another year to start settlement operations in these three new districts. It may be argued that the work in some of those districts, where operations are in progress, will be finished before the end of the next financial year, and that some of the staff may not have any work to do during some months of the year. But this is not a very serious argument after all. I think much of the settlement staff is temporary, and the officers and men can very well be discharged for a few months if occasion arises. Moreover, this sort of discharge of unnecessary staff is not at all a new matter in this department. Many such officers and men have been discharged in the past and taken on again, when new operations made their service necessary. In this case also, such a procedure may easily be followed.

Then again, from the Budget figures of the last four years we find that whereas the Government received a refund of Rs. 24, 21, 15 and 10 lakhs respectively during the last few years, they spent Rs. 18, 20, and 24 lakhs respectively under this head. It seems rather curious that whereas the expenditure has gone on increasing, the revenue has gone on diminishing. I do not know why this is so. The Budget provides during the coming year for a revenue of Rs. 16½ lakhs, that is likely to accrue from revenue on settlement and survey, whereas there is a provision of Rs. 27½ lakhs for expenditure. Now, if the new operations in these districts of Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum are postponed for one year, and not taken up just now, the revenue under the head of settlement and survey may be quite enough to meet expenditure that may be necessary for carrying on operations in the five old districts, so that we may not have any occasion to touch the revenue on other subjects at all.

The Hon'ble Revenue Member has told us that owing to delay in settlement during the war, there has been a loss of revenue, but I do not think this was very serious. I submit that no case has been made out that the settlement in these three districts is really so urgent as to demand the work being taken up at once, so I think it will be economical to have these operations postponed for one year at any rate.

With these few words, I beg to move that this demand be not granted for these three districts.

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: In commending the motion that stands in my name to your acceptance I admit that I am actuated by motives of retrenchment. What I propose virtually is that expenditure under this head should be confined to the amount realisable under similar revenue heads. My reason for such a proposal is as much the supreme necessity for curtailment as also the fact that henceforth the Government of India are not going to pay for the settlement operations and make such advances as they were hitherto making. As we shall therefore have to fall back upon our inadequate revenue resources, it would be, I think, nothing but imprudence to follow the original programme sanctioned as far back as in 1915. To provide for operations on a larger scale this year Government will be pushing on settlement operations with a vengeance indeed. Here it may be questioned that, if my object is to de-limit survey and settlement operations to the expected realisation under this head, why do I propose a grant for Rs. 13,00,000 in all, even taking the non-voted items therein, and why should I not put it down at Rs. 16,50,000—the Budget estimate of recoveries on this account? My answer is that such recoveries will have to be made mostly from the zamindars and tenants of the districts of Bankura, Jessore, and Nadia, and, if Bankura was only lately in the grip of a horrible famine from the effects of which it has hardly recovered yet, Jessore was to a great extent affected by the late cyclone. Moreover, I have got it from the Hon'ble Minister in charge of Agriculture that there has been a partial failure of rice crop in Nadia so that the yield has not been more than 67 per cent. the lowest figure for this year. I have therefore grounds for suspicion that recovery of survey and settlement charges for the year 1921-22 has been over-estimated and that however certificate procedure may come handy and be availed, something between Rs. 10,50,000 and Rs. 16,50,000 will be the correct estimate of receipts, I suppose.

Much on similar grounds I propose that settlement operations should not be extended to the districts of Khulna and Murshidabad. The district of Khulna, which naturally bears the brunt of all cyclonic disturbances was hit the hardest by the last cyclone. It will appear from the final report on the cyclone relief operations (although that report did not fully recognise the distress in Khulna) that Khulna ranked below Dacca only in the loss of human lives, but was the greatest sufferer in loss of cattle (having 28,000 cattle killed, out of the total number of 38,000 cattle mortality due to the cyclone), in damages to human habitation, and in permanent injury to its betelnut and cocoanut wealth. The greatest number of relief circles had to be opened in this district, and about 15,000 people (the greatest number of persons next to Dacca) had to bear the burden of loans, much of which still remain unpaid.

So great were the distressing after-effects that even after the cyclone relief operations were over, the local authorities had to request the zamindars to come to the rescue of the people suffering from severe scarcity prevailing in many of the southern villages of the district.

To extend settlement operations to that district now will be nothing but a cruel step and an unjust attempt to force an unwelcome measure against the wishes of the people. In the second of the three districts, to which it is proposed to extend settlement operations, I mean Murshidabad, there has also been a partial failure of crops. So, if the Government is at all bent upon extending settlement operations, new ground can be broken only in the small district of Birbhum and the reduced grant may permit them to do such things as well as to bring to the closing stages the current settlement works in the districts of Jessore, Nadia, etc.

In conclusion I beg to say that when records-of-rights have been finally published with regard to five-eighths of the total area, there is no reason to be in a hurry for such work. I also beg to remind the Hon'ble the Member in charge that suspension of new major undertakings is not without precedent, that no major settlement operation was undertaken in 1915 the year after the great war was declared and hence the proposal to curtail work and expenditure under this head should also be accepted in this year of unprecedented financial difficulty.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur moved "that the demand for Rs. 27,21,000 for the survey and settlement operations be reduced by Rs. 9,00,000.

In moving this resolution, I wish to make a few observations.

It is well known that the Council is much embarrassed to find a huge deficit in the Budget, and that, although several demands have been made for the improvement of public health, education and the promotion of industries, the invariable answer has been that there are no funds available at the disposal of Government for the promotion of these objects. The non-official members of the Council have been necessarily at pains to find out whether it is possible to reduce certain items of expenditure in order to swell the cash balances, and to place the Ministers in a position to embark on schemes which have been suggested in this Council. Well, the survey and settlement operations, it will be admitted, I hope by the Hon'ble Member, are not an item which affects the everyday administration of this Government. It is found from the figures that have been given in the Budget that the actual figure varied from Rs. 18,00,000 to Rs. 20,00,000 during the last few years, and if we now confine ourselves to the last year's actual, that is Rs. 20,00,000, the saving will to a certain extent help the initiation and promotion of some of the measures which the Council have been pressing on the attention of the Government. I think the Government, will not be in any way hampered in pursuing the present operations of survey and settlement work. Hitherto, the Government of India have been contributing the entire cost of these operations, and according to the revised arrangement, under the Reforms Scheme, the whole cost will fall upon the local Government. On an average, the local Government had to contribute, I believe, Rs. 1,00,000 in one year, Rs. 1,85,000 in another year, and the last year Rs. 1,25,000 on this item of expenditure. The jump from Rs. 1,00,000 to Rs. 29,00,000 is a very big one and I think therefore that, instead of committing ourselves in the first year of the Budget to such a large expenditure, it would be better if we shouldered the burden which had already been placed on us during the last few years. Having regard to these facts I beg to move that the demand be reduced by Rs. 9,00,000.

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINGH ROY Bahadur moved " that the demand for survey and settlement operations be reduced by Rs. 8,21,000."

The PRESIDENT: I may state to the Council that Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur is not quite well and asks that permission may be given to some other Member of the Council to read his speech on his behalf. As a very special case I think this may be allowed, but I would leave it to the Council whether such permission should be given.

The Council agreed.

Maulvi Mahammed Madassur Hussain then read the following speech:—

I invite the attention of the Council to the proposed grant to the survey and settlement operations. It is a large sum. It is gradually on the increase over the figures of the previous years. There is an important fact which we should not overlook. The cost of major survey and settlement operations used to be advanced from the Imperial revenues, but from the next year the whole cost of the operations will fall on our shoulders. A glance at the revenue side of the Budget will convince us that the recoveries are not sufficient for the purpose. We must call it a spending department of the Government. We are investing large sums of money year after year, and our nation might rightly ask what benefits will come out of it. What material good or pecuniary help will be derived from the investment? We cannot tell the people that it is a commercial department, because its revenues fall far short of its expenditure. The nation might have overlooked the facts, if the incomes balanced the expenditure. We cannot support this department as one contributing greatly towards the moral and material improvement of the nation. What good does it bring? If public feelings be consulted outside the Council, I am sure every one will condemn it; zamindars murmur and raiyats complain. When the utility of the department is questionable, I think it will be prudent to restrict expenditure under this head, only to save ourselves from the hostile criticism from outside.

We are the custodians of public finance. We should, therefore, be careful in introducing new measures, new things into the Council. We should feel the pulse of public opinion, before we should venture to do anything totally new. The charges under this head are altogether new, the financial crisis of our country is great. The utility of the operations is questionable, and the public is suspicious about the activities of the department. I, therefore, think I am voicing the public opinion, if I say all the proposals for new survey and settlement operations be postponed for the present year. When we cannot spend more than Rs. 1,00,000 for primary education, Rs. 18,50,000 for public health, I think, it would not be prudent to spend more than Rs. 19,00,000 under survey and settlement operations. If we do not undertake any new settlement operations for the present year, I think we shall be able to manage the settlement department, making a reduction to the amount of Rs. 8,00,000. The curtailment of expenditure in the settlement department will enable us to restrict the activities of the survey department also.

I, therefore, propose a reduction of Rs. 21,000 under the survey department.

It but remains again to lay emphasis on the fact that good finance must be controlled by strong and intelligent public opinion outside the Council. The expenditure and income must be kept within reasonable limits, and public opinion must be sought when any new move is to be made. If we remain sensible to the demand outside, it is sure that we should do nothing liable to adverse criticism outside the Council. The members must echo the public voice, and that is why I ask to restrict expenditure on the survey and settlement operations.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY moved "that the demand for Rs. 23,11,000 be reduced by Rs. 8,00,000."

It is a significant fact that there have been so many motions to cut down the survey and settlement estimate. I am sorry that I have to differ from some of them. In moving the motion which stands in my name, I have specially two things in view. My first object has been to put a stop to an unnecessary drain on our impoverished exchequer by effecting such reductions of the estimate as would neither involve any serious dislocation of the present establishment nor disturb the normal programme of the department. My next object is to protest against any increased outlay on this department till our grievances against it have been redressed.

I find that the Hon'ble Revenue Member has made a demand, which is out of all proportion to what had been the normal allotment to the department of settlement in previous years; and in doing so he seems to have quite overlooked the fact that he can no longer draw upon the Imperial Exchequer for his supply. Every rupee that he wants to spend on settlement operations will have to be advanced by a Provincial Government, which, as everybody knows, is practically faced with a big deficit.

He also seems to take no account of the fact that in the present economic condition of the country any widening of the scope of settlement operations cannot but tell very heavily on the people, who would be affected thereby. He speaks of the programme sanctioned by the Government of India in 1915. Well, we discarded the programme the very next year. Moreover, the Government of India now do not make any contribution to this item. So I do not think that any programme sanctioned by them is in any way binding upon us. It is we, the zamindars and the raiyats, who bear the bulk of these expenses. Seventy-five per cent. of the expenditure is recovered from us, and if we pay the piper, I think we are entitled to ask for the tune. The Maharaja of Burdwan also seems to have taken no account of the present economic condition of the country.

I deeply deplore the attitude which the Revenue Member has thought fit to adopt in this connection. The series of motions against him demand undoubtedly show the public feeling on the subject; they prove no doubt the unpopularity of the department. And to be candid, the public in the villages has been driven to a state of exasperation by the careless and inconsiderate manner in which the settlement proceedings are rushed through, and the situation has been further aggravated by the petty oppressions which are openly and systematically practised by the underlings of the department. The introduction of settlement operations in a district has now come to be looked upon as a visitation of the worst type. Settlement proceedings nowadays bring along in their train a long era of untold suffering in the affected area. It is a long and dismal tale of petty oppression, extortion, humiliation and what not; vested with summary powers the underlings of the department peacock about the country as if they are the pocket editions of the Revenue Member himself. Poor, illiterate and ignorant masses fall an easy prey to their abuse of authority. I am prepared to substantiate the charge, if the Hon'ble Member would care to come with me and go round the villages where he would see things for himself. This is not all; there is such an undue haste about the proceedings that the entries are not correctly made, disputes are not properly entertained, and the stage called "attestation" is a mere farce. Important questions of rights and titles are disposed of in a manner which cannot but undermine the traditional respect that the villagers have for British justice. Such is the system, and there is apparently no remedy against these *zulum*s, and this perhaps is the worst feature of the whole thing. One redeeming feature however is that all is well if you can pay well. The result is that, while the rich and wealthy prosper, the poor and weak suffer. I do not intend to take up more time of the Council in dwelling on this aspect of the question. All that I would like to say in this connection is that the system followed with regard to settlement operations requires a careful examination and a thorough overhauling from top to bottom. We have now got a whole-time Revenue Member; and it is extremely fortunate that the post is now held by a most capable nobleman, who has first-hand knowledge of the abuses of the department, he himself being a big zamindar. Knowing him as I do, I can confidently hope that, if he would only set his heart to the subject, he would effect a reform which would earn for the department a reputation which it rightly deserves. I have nothing but the highest regard for the theory underlying the settlement proceedings. They are meant to give us an accurate survey of our holdings, to settle our rent and boundary disputes and to correctly record our rights and interests. In short, they are intended to be a great boon to the raiyats and zamindars alike, and I highly appreciate their educative effect on our tenantry. But it is against the present rules which regulate the system that I protest. They are the root causes of the deplorable degeneration of the Settlement Department. We want the Maharaja of Burdwan to set things right and I have every hope that he would do so. It is because I fervently cherish this hope that I do not want to cripple the department in a manner which some of my friends would like to. All that I want, with regard to the Budget estimate is that we should not vote for the increased activities of the department so long as the necessary reforms are not effected. I do not want to interfere with the normal activities of the department, and in proposing the reductions I have scrupulously adhered to this principle. I will place before the Council a detailed account of the settlement expenses from the year 1917 and the reductions that I propose to effect in the budget estimate.

The total expenditure on settlement in the year—

		Rs.
1917 was	...	17,36,000
1918 "	...	17,33,000
1919 "	...	18,48,000
1920 "	...	17,94,000
1921 "	about	18,00,000 and the budget estimate for the year 1922 is Rs. 24,38,000. From Rs. 17,36,000 in 1917 the budget estimate for 1922 is Rs. 24,38,000 with a deficit budget before us!

Coming to the details, I find that the expenses under the head "Salary and Local Allowances" were in—

		Rs.
1917	...	3,03,000
1918	...	2,72,000
1919	...	3,19,000

and the budget estimate for 1922 is Rs. 5,21,000. From Rs. 2,72,000 in 1918 there is a big jump to Rs. 5,21,000 in 1922! I propose a reduction under this head of Rs. 2,00,000.

I then come to the head "Travelling Expenses." The expenses under this head were in—

			Rs.
1917	72,000
1918	70,000

but perhaps as the railway fares have gone up the figure for 1922 has been put at Rs. 2,15,000. From Rs. 72,000 in 1917 the budget estimate for 1922 has gone up to Rs. 2,15,000, i.e., three times what it was in 1917. Under this head I propose a reduction of Rs. 1,30,000.

Then comes the "Office and Field Establishment" (a portion of this is temporary). It is often impossible to discharge people who are permanently employed in this department; but, Sir, these items concern all temporary men. The expenses were in—

			Rs.
1917	3,34,000
1918	3,37,000
1919	4,06,000

and the budget estimate for 1922 is Rs. 4,81,000. Here, I propose a reduction of Rs. 1,20,000.

Then comes the "Job work" (entirely temporary). I am told that a lot of jobbery goes on here: the work is done entirely by temporary hands. The expenses were in—

			Rs.
1917	8,64,000
1918	8,40,000
1919	8,60,000

and the budget estimate for 1922 is Rs. 8,43,000. Here I propose a reduction of Rs. 2,10,000.

I now come to the "Provision for Minor Operations." The Hon'ble Member in charge has referred to the fact that the Government of India sanction them. But the Government of India laid down that when the major operations were going on, it was not necessary to carry on any minor operations. However, I think it did not attract his notice and so a provision has been made of Rs. 82,000 under this head for 1922. I propose to reduce Rs. 25,000 from this item.

Then comes the head "Miscellaneous" (including contingencies, stores, and such things as motor-cars, motor-launches, tents, etc.). The expenses under this head were in—

			Rs.
1917	1,63,000
1918	2,14,000
1919	1,80,000
1920	1,79,000

But the budget estimate for 1922 is Rs. 2,96,000. Almost double! Here I propose a reduction of Rs. 1,15,000.

Thus, from the total budget estimate of Rs. 24,38,000. I propose a reduction of Rs. 8,00,000 only. Still I allow the department to have about Rs. 16,50,000 to play with, to use the Maharaja's favourite term.

This would show that I do not mean any serious interference with current arrangements, nor do I propose to dispense with the services of any trained permanent hand.

With these words I commend my motion to the acceptance of the House.

The PRESIDENT: The next item is identical to the one which has just been moved. I therefore call upon Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur to move item No. 11.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur moved "that the demand for Rs. 27,21,000 be reduced by Rs. 2,81,000."

At the outset I wish to make my position clear. My object in proposing this motion is two-fold; first, to draw the attention of Government and of this Council to the lavish manner in which extra expenditure is proposed to be incurred without regard to the financial situation of the Presidency or the willingness or ability of the people, on whom the settlement operations are thrust, to pay the extra taxation they have to meet for this purpose, and secondly, I wish to draw attention to the extravagance of the department owing to which a large portion of the expenditure is simply a waste of public money. When at the beginning of the new era we are confronted with a financial crisis of an alarming nature threatening the success of the whole scheme, it behoves every one concerned to be a bit cautious before he allows himself to be a party to any new expenditure which is neither urgent nor productive of fresh wealth. In regard to the case under consideration, which relates to the survey and preparation of record-of-rights in the three new districts of Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum, the only explanation that has been offered is that these operations have already been sanctioned. I ask the Government seriously whether in the present financial bankruptcy this is a sufficient justification for commencing these expensive schemes. Perhaps Government will reply that the traverse survey has already been done in these districts and to postpone the operations would mean perhaps a loss of the money spent on this account. I will answer to this later on and will show that this alleged loss will be more than compensated by the savings, which will follow, if my suggestions are accepted. In fact, my contention is that the present system is ruinous both to the public and the particular individuals concerned, and the whole system requires a thorough overhauling. So far as I understand, the present system is this: Under section 114 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the cost of all settlement operations is shared by Government and the people in the ratio of 25 to 75. Now, what happens appears to be this, that a preliminary estimate is made, according to which the people are made to pay 75 per cent. of the estimated expenditure. At the conclusion of most of the operations a very large saving takes place even after meeting expenditure at a lavish scale, which saving Government appropriates without any justification whatsoever. It appears that in the case of the Mymensingh district the saving amounted to about 3 lakhs of rupees, which sum the Mymensingh public claimed back for starting a dispensary, and the reply they received was that the money belonged to the Government of India and the local Government was not concerned. I ask the Government seriously, was it morally and legally justified in appropriating this sum realized from the people as their share of the cost? My first submission, therefore, is that the whole money budgeted for is not really necessary and the estimate requires closer scrutiny.

My second point is this, that in order to mitigate the hardship of the people and to minimise the cost of the Settlement Department the whole question requires careful examination. It will be said that these are vague words. I, therefore, make certain definite suggestions. In the first place, I find that Bihar and Orissa with a larger area than Bengal, and having a larger number of Khas Mahals, manages the departments of Survey and Land Records by a single officer. In Bengal we have a separate Director of Surveys. Surely there is scope for retrenchment here, and why cannot the Revenue Secretary, with his work considerably lightened by the appointment of a separate Agricultural and Industrial Secretary, take up some of the duties of either the Director of Surveys or the Director of Land Records? In the second place, from an examination of the present Civil List I find that in Pabna-Bogra the Settlement Officer, Mr. Philpott, has another I.C.S. officer under him. Similarly both in Bankura and Nadia the I.C.S. Settlement Officers have each an I.C.S. Assistant Settlement Officer under them. Now look to Jessore where the Settlement Officer is Khan Bahadur Maulvi Abdul Momin, an officer risen from the rank of Sub-Deputy Collector, I believe. There is no I.C.S. Assistant Settlement Officer there. The obvious reason is that it would be derogatory to an European officer to be placed under an Indian Officer. Whatever may be the cause, I put to Government this question: Is the settlement operation at Jessore being managed less efficiently because the Assistant Settlement Officers are not

I.C.S. officers? If the answer be in the negative, then there is no justification whatsoever in employing the costly I.C.S. officers either as Settlement or Assistant Settlement Officers, as the work can be equally efficiently performed by the less costly Deputy and Sub-Deputy Collectors. I should like to go down further, why cannot experienced Kanungoes, who nowadays possess equal qualifications as Deputy and Sub-Deputy Collectors, be vested with revenue powers and largely replace expensive gazetted officers? A Sub-Deputy Collector employed on settlement work draws an allowance of Rs. 50 a month in addition to pay, while an I.C.S. or a Deputy Collector or a Munsif working as Assistant Settlement Officer draws an allowance of Rs. 100 a month, whereas a Kanungo requires no allowance and his pay is only Rs. 100 rising to Rs. 200.

I am not a visionary, but a practical man of the world, and I do not suggest any violent or sudden change. I perfectly realise that the maintenance of a correct record-of-rights is beneficial both to Government and to the people. My resolution therefore does not imply the abolition of the Department of Land Records or a surrender of the programme laid down for Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum. What I mean to urge is that this is a very fit subject for examination by a Special Committee with a view to ascertain what retrenchment is possible without loss of the efficiency of the work, and that until this question is thoroughly settled the proposed operations be postponed. Any loss that might be incurred owing to the effacement of traverse survey marks will be more than compensated by the savings which will accrue from my suggestions. After all, this is by no means such an urgent matter that it cannot bear one or two years' delay and in view of the state of the provincial finance, which has rendered it necessary to postpone most important reforms, I venture to appeal most strongly to Government and to this Council that my resolution for the reduction of the demand for survey and settlement by Rs. 2,84,000 be accepted. If this is done, the grant under the head will be Rs. 24,37,000, which is the revised estimate for the current year and this will allow all existing operations in progress to be continued. It will only mean a temporary postponement of the programme laid down for three new districts.

With these words, Sir, I hope and trust that my motion will be accepted by the Council.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY moved "that the demand for Rs. 2,73,000 under the head 'Survey Operations—5A—Survey and Settlement' be reduced by Rs. 63,000."

In moving this motion, too, I have taken pretty good care not to interfere with current arrangements. The proposed reduction only refers to the excess outlay proposed in the Budget estimates. The following statement of detailed accounts of previous years will make my position clear:—The total expenditure in 1918, 1919, 1920 and 1921 was Rs. 1,35,000, Rs. 1,53,000, Rs. 1,90,000 and Rs. 2,24,000, done in these districts and to postpone the operations would mean perhaps a loss of the money spent on this account. I will answer to this later on and will show that this alleged loss will be more than compensated by the savings, which will follow, if my suggestions are accepted. In fact, my contention is that the present system is ruinous both to the public and the particular individuals concerned, and the whole system requires a thorough overhauling. So far as I understand, the present system is this: Under section 114 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the cost of all settlement operations is shared by Government and the people in the ratio of 25 to 75. Now, what happens appears to be this, that a preliminary estimate is made, according to which the people are made to pay 75 per cent. of the estimated expenditure. At the conclusion of most of the operations a very large saving takes place even after meeting expenditure at a lavish scale, which saving Government appropriates without any justification whatsoever. It appears that in the case of the Mymensingh district the saving amounted to about 3 lakhs of rupees, which sum the Mymensingh public claimed back for starting a dispensary, and the reply they received was that the money belonged to the Government of India and the local Government was not concerned. I ask the Government seriously, was it morally and legally justified in appropriating this sum realized from the people as their share of the cost? My first submission, therefore, is that the whole money budgeted for is not really necessary and the estimate requires closer scrutiny.

My second point is this, that in order to mitigate the hardship of the people and to minimise the cost of the Settlement Department the whole question requires careful examination. It will be said that these are vague words. I, therefore, make certain definite suggestions. In the first place, I find that Bihar and Orissa with a larger area than Bengal, and having a larger number of Khas Mahals, manages the departments of Survey and Land Records by a single officer. In Bengal we have a separate Director of Surveys. Surely there is scope for retrenchment here, and why cannot the Revenue Secretary, with his work considerably lightened by the appointment of a separate Agricultural and Industrial Secretary, take up some of the duties of either the Director of Surveys or the Director of Land Records? In the second place, from an examination of the present Civil List I find that in Pabna-Bogra the Settlement Officer, Mr. Philpott, has another I.C.S. officer under him. Similarly both in Bankura and Nadia the I.C.S. Settlement Officers have each an I.C.S. Assistant Settlement Officer under them. Now look to Jessore where the Settlement Officer is Khan Bahadur Maulvi Abdul Momin, an officer risen from the rank of Sub-Deputy Collector, I believe. There is no I.C.S. Assistant Settlement Officer there. The obvious reason is that it would be derogatory to an European officer to be placed under an Indian Officer. Whatever may be the cause, I put to Government this question: Is the settlement operation at Jessore being managed less efficiently because the Assistant Settlement Officers are not

I.C.S. officers? If the answer be in the negative, then there is no justification whatsoever in employing the costly I.C.S. officers either as Settlement or Assistant Settlement Officers, as the work can be equally efficiently performed by the less costly Deputy and Sub-Deputy Collectors. I should like to go down further, why cannot experienced Kanungoes, who nowadays possess equal qualifications as Deputy and Sub-Deputy Collectors, be vested with revenue powers and largely replace expensive gazetted officers? A Sub-Deputy Collector employed on settlement work draws an allowance of Rs. 50 a month in addition to pay, while an I.C.S. or a Deputy Collector or a Munsif working as Assistant Settlement Officer draws an allowance of Rs. 100 a month, whereas a Kanungo requires no allowance and his pay is only Rs. 100 rising to Rs. 200.

I am not a visionary, but a practical man of the world, and I do not suggest any violent or sudden change. I perfectly realise that the maintenance of a correct record-of-rights is beneficial both to Government and to the people. My resolution therefore does not imply the abolition of the Department of Land Records or a surrender of the programme laid down for Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum. What I mean to urge is that this is a very fit subject for examination by a Special Committee with a view to ascertain what retrenchment is possible without loss of the efficiency of the work, and that until this question is thoroughly settled the proposed operations be postponed. Any loss that might be incurred owing to the effacement of traverse survey marks will be more than compensated by the savings which will accrue from my suggestions. After all, this is by no means such an urgent matter that it cannot bear one or two years' delay and in view of the state of the provincial finance, which has rendered it necessary to postpone most important reforms, I venture to appeal most strongly to Government and to this Council that my resolution for the reduction of the demand for survey and settlement by Rs. 2,84,000 be accepted. If this is done, the grant under the head will be Rs. 24,37,000, which is the revised estimate for the current year and this will allow all existing operations in progress to be continued. It will only mean a temporary postponement of the programme laid down for three new districts.

With these words, Sir, I hope and trust that my motion will be accepted by the Council.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY moved "that the demand of Rs. 2,73,000 under the head 'Survey Operations—5A—Survey and Settlement' be reduced by Rs. 63,000."

In moving this motion, too, I have taken pretty good care not to interfere with current arrangements. The proposed reduction only refers to the excess outlay proposed in the Budget estimates. The following statement of detailed accounts of previous years will make my position clear:—The total expenditure in 1918, 1919, 1920 and 1921 was Rs. 1,35,000, Rs. 1,53,000, Rs. 1,90,000 and Rs. 2,24,000, respectively, and in the Budget Estimates of this year it is Rs. 2,70,000. Then again, Sir, coming to the detailed salaries in 1918 the provision was Rs. 10,000 and the proposed estimate (1921-22) is Rs. 16,500. Travelling in 1918 was Rs. 7,000 and the proposed estimate (1921-22) is Rs. 14,500. The establishment in 1918 was Rs. 89,000 and in 1921-22 is Rs. 1,65,000. Stores and contingencies in 1918 were Rs. 29,000 and in 1921-22 are Rs. 74,000. It will be apparent to the House how the expenses are gradually rising. My proposal for reducing the grant by Rs. 63,000 is by no means unreasonable and I hope the House will help me to carry my motion.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: There is no doubt that settlement and surveys operations are a necessity for the poor raiyats. Zamindars may chafe at the operations, but in order to settle the record of rights and to settle the position of raiyats, it is an essentially necessary operation. My object in giving notice of an amendment is to reduce the amount of expenditure. Of course there ought to be expenditure for settlement and survey operations, but we ought to limit the expenditure to as small an amount as is possible. My object, therefore, it is not to hinder operations on any account, but, let the expenditure be reduced as far as possible. That is the object of my amendment and I therefore beg leave to move that the demand under head "Detailed Account—No. 5 A—Survey and Settlement" for Rs. 2,73,000 be reduced by Rs. 35,288.

The PRESIDENT: I wish to remind the members that, unless speeches are short, it will be impossible to go through all the amendments.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I would be very short, Sir. I might say here that the speech delivered by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr ought to have been supplied to us, as it was very difficult for us to follow from such a distance. These speeches are manuscript speeches. They could have with advantage been supplied to us. The same remark applies to the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan's speech. In this connection, I might also say that Mr. Marr gave us some details about the grants at the last Council. His speech has not been reported in the press and even now we do not know what those details are, for we could not follow him at such a distance.

Coming to the question of the motion, of which I gave notice, I may say that I entirely agree with Mr. Dutta that our sole desire in moving this resolution is that we should be strictly economical, and our object is not to encroach upon the closing balance, which consists of a large sum of money already earmarked. Sir, it is admitted that our budget is a deficit, and if we are to take money from other sources, we must first see how far we can avoid doing it. The people, whom we have the honour to represent in this Council, would consider an encroachment upon earmarked grants as a spoliation. And it is no wonder. Sir, these sums are meant for special purposes and they would serve to do something towards the solution of the bread problem, and if we are to spend it for ordinary purposes, the people will not naturally be satisfied with us.

The Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee said in this Council:—

“ Give me more money and I would drive malaria from the province.” Now, Sir, here is a large sum of money. Why not take it and devise means for fighting out malaria? Sir, the other day Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur moved a resolution on vocational education and which was accepted by Government. Why not take a few lakhs from this large sum and utilize it for the purpose of vocational education? I have full sympathy with the movement that, as far as possible, we should cut down expenses and not grant the whole demand. The new settlement operations are not a strict necessity, and the rules under which they are being carried on require consideration and revision. Even from the raiyats' point of view, I can say that in the Settlement Department waste lands and old tanks are being assessed for cess purposes, and the result is that the same rent is fixed for all kinds of lands, and the whole thing is assessed generally for the purposes of irrigation. If these things are taxed, zamindars will naturally take advantage of enhancing the rent, and the poor raiyat will suffer. The measurement is being made on a plane-table system and without any reference to the village, a measurement is fixed. A few years hence if there is any dispute between raiyats and raiyats, it would be very difficult to compare these maps and measurement papers in order to ascertain the nature of the disputes. There are several other things, which need not be discussed now. I only want to say that this land settlement is not a strict necessity, and before starting it we should see how far the rules require revision.

I may be permitted to refer to another question. Bengal is an agricultural province. Even the middle class people are agriculturists by nature. Zamindars themselves have been recognising the middle class gentlemen as raiyats for a very long time, but in the settlement operations those who engage labourers or cultivate lands themselves are being treated as tenure-holders and the result is a tremendous enhancement of rents by zamindars. I refer to these things only in the interests of raiyats. Whether these things are to be reconsidered is a point for serious consideration. I say if there is a special necessity for these new operations, then go on with it by all means, but if there is no such necessity, then we should not continue it. The Hon'ble the Revenue Member reminded us that, if we were spending money now, we should recover 75 per cent. later on, but I say, if it is a loan operation, then why not wait till we have sufficient money at our disposal? I think the grant should be cut down materially, and only that grant which is required as an absolute necessity should be voted. With these observations support the motion.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I have to oppose this motion. But before I do so, I have very reluctantly and with a great regret to reply to certain very injurious observations made against me on the last occasion when I was here by Mr. Ajoy Dutt, the son of an illustrious patriot and leader. I would not have to make this reply now but for the closure that was used then. Mr. Dutt said that I was a non-co-operator. I was not, and I am not in the ranks of the Moderates whose leaders 15 years ago were the originators and supporters of the boycott movement, which sent hundreds of young men to gallows, to imprisonment and to the Andamans. On that occasion I was thanked both by the supreme and the local Governments for my action. It is enough for me to say that I am not a non-co-operator and I am a Moderate. I belong to no party. But I hold the good and welfare of this province above all interests except those of morality.

Now, I come to the main subject. The British Government is nowadays credited with much goodwill towards the people of this country. But in this matter of record-of-rights it has acted up to the highest traditions of safeguarding the rights of the poor people of Bengal. Everybody knows how the rights of tenants have been preserved by the Regulations of 1793 and by the Tenancy Act. We know what great good the British Government has done to the poor tenants of the country. The record-of-rights is the greatest of these beneficent acts. So, I am myself a landlord entitled to be elected to the Council of State. I have suffered personally on account of these settlement proceedings—I have suffered much loss. It is not yet forgotten that Sir Nicholas Beatson Bell most unjustly abused in the Gazette my father and Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri. But notwithstanding that I am bound to say that the record-of-rights is a most beneficent act, it safeguards the rights of tenants, and I can safely say that it is of a great advantage to the landlords also. It is only the shortsighted landlords that oppose the record-of-rights. But the time is coming, within the next 20 years—when these benches and chairs will be occupied not by the landlords' but by the tenants' representatives. And then they will begin to ask—what are your rights—the rights of the landlords. And the landlords will be very glad to have a record-of-rights then.

There is another matter. In most of the districts there has been no record-of-rights,—only a few districts remain. And why on earth should the operations be stopped in these districts? Here is Raja Hrishikesh Laha the largest zamindar in the district of the 24 Parganas and Khulna and here am I, a poor zamindar—and we are both of opinion that not for a single day should the proceedings of the record-of-rights be stopped in these districts. Do those gentlemen, who have spoken about Khulna, know that the record-of-rights is in operation in now in that district? The large properties of the Lahas are being surveyed. Is this to be stopped? Somebody said—these are only temporary men, let them go. Temporary men have no rights, and so they must go away and starve. Very good! But nobody would approve of this sort of thing. Government knows how to do things. It employs a large number of amins and other officers. They cannot be turned out in a day. Government knows how they are to be employed;—and the staff must go on till the settlement proceedings are completed. Somebody said—why have you taken up work in four districts? Do you know why? The work has been completed, in other districts and where are these men to go? After the records are made and the disputes settled, the surveyors should go to other districts. I think in this matter Government has every right to the support of every member here. As regards economy, nobody can suggest where the economy is to be applied. I think it would be enough for the Hon'ble Member in charge to say that he would see that the utmost economy is exercised. That would be quite enough. Nobody can point out how economy is to be exercised. Economy is very good, but how is it to be effected? I think the motion that has been brought here should not be supported.

MR. C. W. RHODES: This resolution makes a very imposing vanguard for the other resolutions which follow on the Budget and by the time we have passed them, all, I shall be congratulating the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr on having a very handsome surplus in a howling wilderness of a province. The intention of all these resolutions is to kill land settlement. Most of the resolutions and most of the speakers will kill it by sweet words, "not this year, but next year," "not next year but a year after that." The Kumar of Rajshahi has come out in the open declaring himself to be a zamindar and fought for his rights as a zamindar. I do not know that I respect him any the less for that. Sixty years ago the zamindars of Bengal obtained their rights—their record-of-rights—in those old maps which they still produce in court as evidence of their ownership. The permanent settlement promised the same record for the tenants. Have we asked the tenant whether he wants the land settlement to be continued? So far as I see only the zamindars have spoken. The resolution asked us to declare that pledges may be broken and obligations may be unfulfilled. Well, then, pass this resolution, and it would create a very good precedent for the scrapping of the whole permanent settlement. The pledge given to the zamindar is no more valuable in the eyes of the Government than the pledge given to the raiyat. As regards the views of the raiyats, may I just quote what a Lieutenant-Governor said many years ago. He said: "Our principal object in undertaking the survey and record-of-rights is to protect the legal rights of the raiyats which have been so neglected in the past. The zamindars seek to defeat the existing law and the Government seeks to enforce it." And again the Government of India, so far back as in 1822, proposed a record-of-rights of the permanently settled districts of Bengal, as being the only effectual means of defining and maintaining the rights of raiyats, all other means having proved useless. All these resolutions have been moved in the interest of economy, and in the interest of economy I oppose them. If the settlement goes on, 75 per cent. of the cost is recoverable from the zamindars; if it is stopped, all is lost. The zamindars, it is true, will save money at the expense of the people, but you must remember—and I know I am speaking to a great many zamindars—that the absence of these records-of-rights has often produced riots in the districts. But I am not prepared to believe, until the division bell compels me to believe, that the zamindars in this Council will deliberately put the money of the people into their own pockets.

One word more. This province can never be properly developed until the land is properly settled. Those of us, who are trying to buy lands for coal mines and for other industrial purposes, know how it is almost impossible to get any clear title to the land, and that the titles we get are not worth the paper they are written on. There can be no industrial development for Bengal until we can get clearer titles, and land settlement is the first step in this direction. I would, therefore, ask the Council to throw out these resolutions, first, because they will break a pledge to those voiceless millions, about whom we heard so much when the elections were on and so little in this Council, and secondly, because it would be throwing away much money, and thirdly, because all these resolutions aim a blow at the development of the province.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: It will be found by the members of this Council that most of these motions have come from the zamindars, and so in the first place I beg to submit for the information of the President and the House that I am not a zamindar.

The first speaker based his argument for reduction on the ground that by effecting a reduction we may not have to interfere with the grant from the Government of India and that towards the end of the year we could have a big sum as our closing balance. Now, Sir, I ask—is that a sufficient ground for stopping the survey and settlement operations which have been continuing for many years past? His next ground is, as has been observed by him, that the survey operations in some of the districts should be postponed, and that the officers and men employed on the work should await another year, and that they should go with their bag and baggage elsewhere, and that in the next year when we frame the Budget they will go on with their work. I do not think, Sir that should have been the statement of any responsible officer.

The next speaker wants money for Sanitation and Education—indeed I have every sympathy with him—and he wants to stop the survey operations, but our position here is like that of a member of a District Board or a Municipal Commissioner in appointing certain persons on a pay of over Rs. 50 whose decision can be vetoed by the Chairman and the Commissioner. Therefore, Sir, it does not lie in our mouth to say that this money should be spent on Education and that on Sanitation.

Then we have heard the very able speech of one of the leading members of this Council, who has advocated the postponement of survey work on account of the oppression committed by particular officers. I admit that there may be a bad man, but is that a sufficient reason for stopping the operations. Are not some of the naibs of zamindars regular bad-mashes, and what has been done by the leading zamindars to stop that engine of oppression?

Then, Sir, we have been told that no further progress should be made in this department, until and unless some reform is introduced. But we have not been told as to how and by whom these reforms will be introduced. So we may do away with this suggestion.

We have also heard our Rai Bahadur, who has come forward with a request, to which I hope the Hon'ble Member will give his kind consideration. On one hand we have heard that the survey operations in Khulna should be stopped, while on the other hand we are told that they must continue. We do not know what course to follow.

We have also heard another gentleman who has said that the preparation of record-of-rights saves rights and privileges of the tenants, and he therefore thinks that the survey operations should continue.

We have also heard another gentleman, who said that the pasture land has to be assessed and requires to be assessed. The result is that the zamindars will get some amount of money from this pasture land and the poor tenants will suffer. I request the zamindar councillors to extend their helping hand in this matter.

With these few observations I beg to oppose the motion.

Maulvi RAFI UDDIN AHMED: I beg to support this motion and my reasons are these. The Settlement operations generally begin in November when there is a pucca paddy on the lands, and so many amins and so many villagers pass over this pucca paddy of the humble tenant that they cause great damage to the paddy. If this is the case with every plot of land in a village, it makes a huge damage in the whole district. So, if survey operations are carried on in many districts, the damage will be very large. Secondly, Sir, the amins, kanungoes and the officers of the Settlement Department, begin their work in the winter season and also in the summer season, and all the villagers have to dance attendance on these officers with the result that most of the land in villages remain uncultivated. Thirdly, Sir, it also entails a great hardship on the zamindars, who happen to possess land in more than one district because they have to engage more officers to attend these officers of the Settlement Department. Besides, Sir, the zamindars do incur large costs, and I know some zamindars have already run into debt for paying up these costs. Fourthly, Sir, if all the districts in Bengal are taken up all at once, the whole staff of the Settlement Department will have to work all together with the result that the settlement will be finished very soon and these officers will be let loose without anything in future for them. So, Sir, I think that if the work of the Settlement Department is taken up one by one, the result will be that these officers could be provided for a longer period than they would be under the present arrangements. It has also been suggested that the settlement operations in the districts of Khulna, Murshidabad and Jessore should be stopped. This, I am afraid, I cannot support, because I know in Jessore and Bankura the settlement operations are going to be finished this year. The staff of the Settlement Department will lose their appointments, if no districts are taken up very soon. So some new district should be taken up—preferably Murshidabad, where Government will not have to spend money for buildings. I therefore submit that instead of taking these three districts all together, if Government take them up one by one that will serve the purpose of Government as well as that of the people.

With these few observations I beg to support the motion.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: We have had too many motions which propose the curtailment of the expenditure on settlement operations. The settlement operations and the preparation of the record-of-rights should be proceeded with as quickly as possible. In many districts there are agrarian troubles and gradually there will be more agrarian troubles in Bengal, and it is proper that record-of-rights should be prepared in every district as early as possible. Sir, I, representing the non-Muhammadians of Dinajpore, perhaps the most backward district in Bengal, would welcome expenditure on the preparation of record-of-rights as early as possible. Sir, some of the movers of the motions have said that settlement operations should be stopped in some of the districts. I beg to submit that it would be very unfair if that is done. There are encroachments upon rights by might, and Government should come forward and help the right to have its own might. I am a landholder, and I can say that it would be very well for the landholders, if these settlement operations are finished as quickly as possible, which would avoid much trouble between the tenant and the landlord.

Kumar Shib Shekhareswar Ray has said that there are oppressions by the officers of the Settlement Department. Sir, we all complain against that, but that should be no ground for curtailing expenditure on settlement operations. Of course the cost of settlement operations will be brought down as low as possible but settlement operations must not be stopped.

With these few remarks I beg to oppose the motion.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I am one of those who do appreciate the value of survey and settlement proceedings, and I am one of those, who do think that it is a very important procedure, so far as the rights of these poor tenants are concerned as against their landlords. There are of course good landlords and bad landlords. I need not say anything against them as a whole. That the rights of these poor men have to be safeguarded is beyond question, but at the same time, Sir, I think that there is something like moderation in the work you ought to take up, and you ought not to spend even more than last year. In making my suggestion in this behalf to the Council, I will ask the Council to remember that hitherto this expenditure was being paid to us practically by the Government of India and now we have got to find the whole of it for ourselves. Therefore the question arises, which is just the same as eating lollipops. You can eat as much as you like if somebody pays for it, but you cannot eat too much particularly when your pocket is not full. You have got to pay the whole of this Rs. 27,00,000, and therefore in this present condition of your Budget, should you indulge in this excessive cost? That is the whole question. I think there is room for moderation.

There is only one thing which I would like to say in reply to my esteemed friend Mr. Rhodes. He said—"Ask the tenants: what do they say? Do they think that this is a necessity?" I say—why don't you go and ask them if there is no greater necessity in matters of sanitation and education? People are dying of malaria, and you have not got much to say about them, but your hearts are overflowing with sympathy when the question of survey and settlement comes before you. I do not think there is any point in what my esteemed friend Mr. Rhodes has said. Ask the tenants, ask the better minds among them about agricultural education, about technical education, about compulsory primary education. What have we got to say to them in respect of these matters? Only when the question of survey operations comes your heart flows to overflowing.

Then, Sir, Mr. Rhodes has also referred to one other matter and I think I should say something in passing. He said that there would be no industrial development until land settlement was made, as the whole of this industrial question and progress in this country were absolutely dependent on this land settlement. Nobody heard of a proposition like that. As regards the reduction in the demand for survey and settlement operations I think there is something like a via media and I will ask the Hon'ble Member to consider whether a sufficient reduction cannot be made, and that money left over for improvements in the domains of sanitation and primary and agricultural education.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The tone of the debate on the different motions for the curtailment of the settlement grant has on the whole been very moderate, and, therefore, before I make any general observations in defending the policy of Government and the programme of the Settlement Department with regard to survey and settlement operations in the province during the year for which we are budgeting, I think that it would perhaps be best for me to make a few general observations with regard to some of the remarks that have been made by some of the movers of the amendments.

First of all, I come to the motion of Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta. His arguments have been to reduce the demand, firstly, on the ground of the present economic condition, and although he does not wish to retard the progress of works we have in hand, he considers that we should postpone the new works which, according to him, are those in Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum. Well, I shall show the condition in these three districts and how much work has been done there, and it would then be for the members of this Council to judge as to whether we should stop that work or not.

Then Rai Harendra Nath Chaudhuri has said his main motive of retrenchment is the present economic condition, and of course he has raised the question of the Government of India having advanced the money in former days and so forth. Well, that too I will endeavour to explain in my general observations. Then we have Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, who also has made certain general observations regarding retrenchment. Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur does not think that survey and settlement operations contribute to the moral and material good of the people. I will quote from the Bengal District Administration Committee's Report a few remarks to challenge what the Rai Bahadur has said on this point. I shall only mention what the Committee said with regard to the finish of the work in this province as well as to the utility of survey and settlement. With regard to the finish of the work, the Committee said: "We have compared the difficulty of the work with that of other provinces, and we are satisfied that in no province has the work been better done. Those of us who come from other provinces were particularly impressed by the zeal and efficiency of the Bengal kanungoes and by the excellence of the printed records which are now being prepared."

With regard to the usefulness, the Committee said: "On the usefulness of these documents to landlords and tenants almost all the Bengal witnesses whom we examined were unanimous, and many of them expressed an opinion in favour of their continuous maintenance by a local agency. For instance, we would invite attention to the evidence of the Hon'ble Mr. Byomkesh Chakravarti, who came to us as the accredited representative of the Bengal Landholders' Association. This witness stated that 'the maintenance of the record would be valuable and he would prefer yearly maintenance to periodical revision'! This is a sufficient evidence and from the landholders' point of view it does not bear out what the Rai Bahadur said that it would not contribute to the moral and material good of the people."

Now we come to the remarks of Kumar Shib Shekhareswar Ray. I shall deal with some of the arguments that the Kumar adduced in my general observations, but the Kumar has got such a knack of blowing hot and cold in the same breath, of trying to kick up the leading zamindar to the seventh heaven and then bringing him down to the level of the smaller fries in the Settlement Department that one is at a loss to understand whether the Kumar should be taken seriously. However, this is a matter, regarding which there has been a difference of opinion, and as I have got to push my argument and convince the Council, I shall be as brief as possible in reply to the general remarks of the Kumar. Of course the main objection that the Kumar has in a general way to the survey and settlement operations is that the oppression and zulum of some of the underlings are so great that, instead of these operations being really beneficial to the tenants, they are really a great source of nuisance to them. There are of course men—underlings—who deal in an underhand way, but if we were to go into it, I doubt very much whether a good number of zamindars would come out of it with clean hands, or whether this endeavour to wash dirty linen in public would really show up a certain number of zamindars in a light, which would be beneficial to them in the long run. I do not know if the Kumar has considered this aspect of the question. There is a great deal to be said, from the pay and emoluments which these underlings get, whether these temptations are not made greater by that element in the settlement operations, which is in a position to offer the temptations and that element is certainly not the tenant element.

This is a matter which I think should be considered by every zamindar, and I include myself in the category, for at present in Bengal perhaps the biggest zamindar to suffer is the poor Revenue Member himself, for whom the Kumar has shown such sympathy. What I mean to say is that we cannot take these personal matters into consideration but with regard to the charge made by the venerable Rai Bahadur of Hooghly against those underlings I would like to point out that the remedy would certainly not lie in largely cutting down our budget, or in simply reducing the staff, or in criticising the Settlement Officers or Assistant Settlement Officers, but we must consider what these reductions would mean in actual practice and how these kanungoes would have to be utilised in future. The L.C.S. officers are employed on survey and settlement operations in order to give them a training and experience in those operations, and not for any luxury or any other reason as he seems to think. On the other hand there is this additional ground against the reduction that, although they may not have experience, everyone can expect them to take remedial measures, if there be gross cases of zulum and extortion by the underlings brought to their notice regarding whom the Kumar has spoken with such heat. Now the Kumar, as I have said, blows hot and cold in the same breath. These underlings, whom he calls pocket editions of the Revenue Member himself, are very corrupt and if corruption were to increase by progressive stages as they proceed upwards then although he describes the Revenue Member as an ideal man he must be a mountain of corruption, a monster of iniquity, a regular edition de luce of corruption or from the point of view of height a mount Everest of corruption. If that were so I do not know how he could possibly expect any sympathy from me.

I shall try to be as brief as possible (for I am afraid the prayer hour is approaching) in replying to the main points raised by the Kumar and others. The Kumar's learned erudition and essay will, I hope, some day find a place in the Bodleian Library at Oxford but what we have got to consider is the real state of things. The movers of the resolution have already supported the curtailment of the settlement grants on one or other of the following grounds. The first is that the Settlement Department is getting an extremely expensive department, and therefore no provision should be made for it in the Budget, and the work should be stopped altogether. The answer to the utility of settlement operations has been partially given by Mr. Rhodes, namely, that it is the long delayed attempt to fulfil the promises of Government and it is necessary to complete them in all districts before necessary amendments of the Tenancy Act can be devised to meet the special needs of the province. With regard to the point that the process is expensive and should be simplified if possible, I think it will be admitted on all hands that, if the record-of-rights is to be prepared at all, it is best to have an accurate one, because a bad and an inaccurate record is worse than no record at all. The Bengal Government has been addressed over and over again by the Government of India as regards excessive cost of East Bengal settlements expenditure and it has been pointed out no appreciable reduction of expenditure is possible.

A great deal is said about the high rates; well, when we get to actual figures we find that the cost per acre is not much. For instance, in Rajshahi, it is little over 14 annas per acre. This includes not only the share of the tenants but also of the zamindars. In Jessore it will be about Re. 1. This will show that the plea of costs is exaggerated.

The third point is that the settlement operations may be delayed and the provincial programme completed more gradually in order to save a few lakhs, say Rs. 10,00,000 or Rs. 15,00,000 from the next few years' Budget. Some of the members here proposed a reduction on the ground of economy, but they have not explained how this curtailment should be made and whether the proposed curtailment of the present settlement programme meant the curtailment of the settlement operations now going on in the three districts. It is not clear whether they want to curtail the settlement programme for the districts, where work has not been started, or in districts where traverse survey alone has been done such as, Birbhum, Murshidabad and Khulna. Some members have suggested the curtailment of the settlement operations now in progress in these three districts. But, as I mentioned in asking for this grant, that next year there would be an opportunity for the members of this Council to consider the programme, where there has been no traverse done, and also whether the general programme of survey should be retarded, or whether new traverse should not be taken up until the programme we have in hand is completed. If you were to curtail the programme, where traverse has already been made, we would have to start settlement operations anew and the inhabitants of each of these three districts would have to suffer a loss of Rs. 30,000 to Rs. 40,000 roughly for nothing, because the sum which has already been spent will have to be spent again sooner or later. To give a concrete instance the total cost of traverse in the three districts in the present year, 1920-21, has been nearly Rs. 90,000. The cost calculated in the Budget under discussion is Rs. 1,66,000; if this amount were cut out we would still have to spend Rs. 36,000 in again putting up the pillars and other marks that might have been removed, to keep the work of the traverse from being obliterated. This would mean that the expenditure of Rs. 90,000 plus Rs. 36,000 will either have to be a loss to Government or what is more likely will have to be recovered from the zamindars or tenants at the time of the completion of the settlement operation, and I am sure the Council which must naturally be alive to the interests of the people and not plead merely the plea of economy, do not wish to bring on this extra burden on the districts which, in the long run, would happen when so much has already been spent on traverse.

Now with regard to the districts, where the work of settlement is already in progress, if the sum necessary to collect the amounts legally recoverable for records finally published in Jessore, Bankura and Nadia is disallowed, the saving will not be as great as movers may imagine, because there will be loss of recoveries under section 114 of the Bengal Tenancy Act on the receipt side of the Budget for 1921-22 and further the stopping of work in these three districts would mean a net loss in the Budgets of the next three years, as the cost of the work already done instead of being borne to the extent of 75 per cent. by the people of the districts benefited would fall on the shoulders of the tax-payers as a whole. The effect on the Budget of stopping work in Jessore, Bankura and Nadia, apart from a few thousand rupees for recoveries, would be as follows:—In 1921-22 diminution in expenditure would be only Rs. 21 lakhs and the decrease in receipts would be Rs. 9 lakhs therefore there would be a gain in 1921-22 of Rs. 12 lakhs. But now let us take the figures for the next year 1922-23; decrease in expenditure would be Rs. 14½ lakhs; decrease in receipts would be Rs. 21½ lakhs. Therefore there would be a net loss of revenue to the State of Rs. 7,80,000. In 1923-24 the decrease in expenditure would be Rs. 9,34,000 and the decrease in receipts Rs. 20,09,000; therefore the loss to the State would be Rs. 11 lakhs and so forth. The reason for this is that not a single pie of the cost on settlement operations in any area can be recovered under section 114 of the Bengal Tenancy Act until the final publication of that area is complete. The most expensive branch of the settlement operations are the traverse, cadastral survey and bujharat and attestation. The concluding stages, viz., objections under section 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, final publication and recovery, cost comparatively little, and case-work more than pays for itself, and in fact reduces the total cost of the operations. If the sum necessary for final publication and recovery is not passed by the Council, the loss to the State will be three-fourths of Rs. 700 × 800. To explain—An average block is generally 800 square miles, and the rate of cost is Rs. 700 per square mile. Therefore the total cost per square mile is Rs. 56,000 × $\frac{3}{4}$ and thus there is a loss of Rs. 4,20,000 to the Government. For instance, to take the concrete case of Nadia, where the A block is 900 square miles, the ordinary expenditure on that ratio would be Rs. 6 lakhs in all and the amount now recoverable comes to Rs. 2 lakhs. If we stop the work, we shall still be spending to a certain extent in completing the record and the result would be a loss of three-fourths of Rs. 15 lakhs in 3 years which will be distributed among the financial years in the following manner:—

" 1924-25	1 lakh.

In these circumstances the Council will do well to deal carefully with the allotments and should not reduce them without considering what the loss to the State is likely to be. On the other hand to meet partly the arguments adduced by Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur of not having munsifs and other officers, I may say that this change of plan, if it was decided upon, would involve some decrease in the total cost of the operations it is true, but we shall have in any case to minimise our expense to a considerable sum. The wholesale discharge of kanungoes and the disbandment of the staff of amins, whom it is very hard to collect, as one or two speakers have suggested, is not a practical proposal. They are a body of useful public servants. Mr. Fazl-ul Haq, among others, moved a resolution in the old Bengal Legislative Council asking that every department should be thrown open to the kanungoes who had lost their appointments. If this curtailment were decided upon by the Council we would have to employ these kanungoes in more than one of our departments; they will have to be employed not only for the kind of work they do now but also as cadastral circle officers in place of several gazetted officers. It will also be necessary to ask for sub-deputy collectors instead of munsifs and deputy collectors. Whether the public as a whole would view this curtailment in the Budget with favour or the removal of munsifs and deputy-collectors I greatly doubt. Government think this move may not be popular, not only with the members of the Provincial Civil Service and their friends in this Council, but also with those who want munsifs to do this work and to gain experience.

I now turn to some of the points raised in the motion of the Kumar, because there he has made some direct accusation, especially in a letter which he has addressed to the members of the Legislative Council (a copy of which was sent to me) where he has tried to explain why he wants the figures to be reduced. He has noted that in the past the entire outlay on settlement operations was advanced by the Government of India and the provincial finances were not affected, but that under the new constitution we shall have to meet all this expenditure. The position was that in the past the entire cost was advanced by the Government of which one-fourth was met by this Government and three-fourths were recovered from landlords and tenants. From next year's revenue we will have to advance the cost, three-fourths of which will be recoverable in due course. Then of course the Kumar has quoted the figures to show that the expenditure on settlement operations has been gradually going up since 1914. The figures are misleading, because he ignores the credit on the other side, which consists partly of recoveries under section 114 and partly of receipts in court-fee stamps. According to the Budget of 1921-22 the cost of settlement operations in the province would be actually Rs. 5 lakhs and not Rs. 24½ lakhs, or including survey expenditure of about Rs. 2 lakhs, Rs. 7 lakhs because Rs. 16½ lakhs are shown among the revenue receipts and another Rs. 3 lakhs will also be credited to settlement either as miscellaneous receipts or court-fee stamps. Even this net expenditure of Rs. 7 lakhs is more than the settlement has cost the administration in the previous four years.

In the financial year 1916-17 the gross expenditure was Rs. 18 lakhs and receipts Rs. 33½ lakhs.

In 1917-18 the expenditure was Rs. 18½ lakhs and the receipts Rs. 30 lakhs.

In 1918-19 the expenditure was Rs. 20½ lakhs and the receipts were Rs. 27½ lakhs.

In 1919-20 the expenditure was Rs. 19½ lakhs and the receipts Rs. 23 lakhs.

Thus in the years 1916-17 and 1917-18 there was an excess of receipts over expenditure from the settlement operations of Rs. 15½ and Rs. 11½ lakhs, respectively. Though the Kumar gave a grossly exaggerated idea of the effect of the settlement operations on the Budget, there is much foundation in his argument that during the last three years the net receipts has gradually diminished, until there is a net excess on the expenditure side of Rs. 7 lakhs, and the reason for this is the sudden curtailment of the settlement operations on the outbreak of the war. The same result will follow by any sudden curtailment of the work now, even the stoppage of the three new settlements, in which only one block traverse has been done.

There is one other point. The Kumar has proposed a reduction of Rs. 25,000 from Rs. 82,000 provided for minor operations. Out of this Rs. 82,000, Rs. 26,000 is recoverable from private and wards estates for which settlement work is being done. This work cannot be left out and there are provisions for several settlement operations in khas mahals, three of which are included in the excluded areas. For all these reasons I would strongly advise this Council not to cut down the Budget so far as the survey and settlement is concerned. It is really to the benefit of the landlords and the tenants that we should complete the work that has been done partially. I may point out that, where one stage of traverse has been done in the three districts, it would cause a lot of inconvenience and hardship to the landlords and the tenants, when we finally recover the whole amount due from them when the work in each districts is completed. I think, therefore, that I have made it quite clear on behalf of Government that it would be unwise to cut down the Budget figures so far as they relate to survey and settlement operations. If next year, when the question of new traverse is taken up, the Council would like to go into the whole question, we shall be ready to consider it.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: As all the movers have spoken the question will now be put.

The motions were then put in the following order :—

The motion was put and lost.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI moved “ that the demand under ‘ 5-Land Revenue ’ be reduced by omitting from the Budget the whole amount provided for settlement operations in Khulna, Murshidabad and Birbhum.”

The motion was put and lost.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY moved “ that the demand for Rs. 2,73,000 under the head ‘ Survey Operation 5 A—Survey and Settlement ’ be reduced by Rs. 63,000.”

The motion was put and lost.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED moved “ that the demand under head ‘ Detailed Account No. 5A—Survey and Settlement ’ for Rs. 2,73,000 be reduced by Rs. 35,288.”

The motion was put and lost.

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI moved “ that the demand of Rs. 27,21,000 for survey and settlement operations be reduced by Rs. 16 lakhs.”

The motion was put and lost.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur moved "that the demand for Rs. 27,21,000 for the survey and settlement operations be reduced by Rs. 9 lakhs."

The motion was put and lost.

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINGH ROY Bahadur moved "that the demand for survey and settlement operations be reduced by Rs. 8,21,000."

The motion was put and lost.

On the President declaring that he thought "the Noes had it," Kumar Shib Shekharewar Ray called for a division.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I rise to a point of order. As almost the whole House is of opinion that no reduction should be made, is one single member competent to claim a division?

The PRESIDENT: Yes, as the rules stand any member can call for a division.

A division was then taken with the following result:—

The Ayes being 22 and the Noes 64, the motion was lost.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI moved "that the demand under '5-Land Revenue' be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000 by the omission of the 'further sum of Rs. 2,00,000 proposed in the ensuing year's Budget for the appointment of additional circle officers.'"

I have not much time at my disposal. This is a matter in which I hope Government will be sympathetic. There may be some delay in considering what will be necessary and how far my suggestion can be accepted. With these words, I commend this resolution for the acceptance of the House.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: This resolution has reference to a provision of Rs. 2,00,000 to which reference is made on page 28 of the Budget for the employment of circle officers.

That is made in accordance with the general policy of the encouragement and development of village government. It was about two years ago that, in the old Council, I was in charge of the Village Self-Government Bill, which passed into law with practical unanimity as to its main principles. The fundamental object of that measure was to create small self-governing bodies in individual village or groups of villages by a system of union boards, and since the passing of the Act, district officers have been busy introducing this arrangement. The latest figure I have of the number of union boards now in existence is 1,639, and their formation has been greatly helped and facilitated by the presence of these circle officers. I would go further and say that the presence of these circle officers is essential to the future prosperity of these bodies. The villagers in many instances are men of little experience in these matters, and they require the help and advice of these officers, who can get into close touch with them and instruct them as to what their powers are under the law, and encourage them to make use of them. Without such an agency the history of union boards, will be the history over again of the old chaukidari panchayets, which failed largely by reason of the absence of special officers to look after them. In their absence the chaukidari panchayets were inevitably left to the supervision of the thana sub-inspector, and according to the finding of various officers who enquired into the matter—myself among them—that was one of the chief reasons why the system was not the success that Government hoped it would be. In connection with union boards we wish to avoid that mistake. At present we have 150 sub-deputy collectors specially recruited for this purpose, of whom 76 are at present working as circle officers. It is impossible to utilise a new recruit as a circle officer until he is trained, and he is not of much use until he has had at least 4 years' experience. Therefore, it is necessary to look ahead. We have now, as I have said, 150 men, 76 of whom are working, and 74 are coming on, and will be available in the course of the next two or three years. By this provision of Rs. 2 lakhs it was intended to recruit 60 more men, with the idea that they would ripen about 3 or 4 years hence, when the men whom we have now are all at work, and from that point of view this provision is fully justified. The general argument of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, is, as I understand, that we should make any possible saving in the Budget, where that can be done without absolute detriment to the administration. After talking to the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea who, as Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government, is keenly interested in this question, we are agreed that although there will probably be plenty of work for these 60 men, yet it is possible, without endangering the success of this system of village self-government, to go a little slower. If it is the general wish of the Council that we should slacken the pace we are willing to give effect to this, and to recruit 30 instead of 60 men as originally proposed, thereby effecting a saving of about a lakh of rupees. I think this can be safely done without undue risk. It is very difficult to forecast the rate of progress in the formation of these unions; this has been fairly rapid in the recent past, but this has possibly been because we have naturally been working first in those areas which lend themselves best to this form of development. When we get to more backward areas progress may be slower. It is difficult, therefore, to make an accurate forecast, but, as far as we can see, if the Council so wish, economy can be effected without much harm, and no objection will be raised on the part of Government should the Council decide to do so.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I have heard the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, and this is exactly what we want. Without interfering with the efficiency of the administration, if economy can be effected, it should be; in this, the Government and the peoples' representatives are at one. I hope the House will accept my motion and that it will be carried.

The PRESIDENT: Your original motion was that Rs. 2 lakhs be omitted. That was not the motion as accepted by Government.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: Yes, that was my original motion. I now wish to amend it.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I desire to associate myself as being the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government with the observations made by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler. We are most anxious that the experiment of union boards should be pushed on, and I have just instructed district officers to exert themselves in this direction. Eastern Bengal is, I believe, ahead of Western Bengal in this respect; there is no reason why Western Bengal should not emulate and follow the example of East Bengal. It is necessary that the experiment should be pushed on, but a provision of 30 circle officers instead of 60 for the present should suffice. It is most important that the experiment should be stimulated; 30 officers will be ample for the present. I am very glad that my Hon'ble friend has accepted the suggestion of the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler.

The PRESIDENT: I think the motion, as amended, may now be put to the vote. It will now run: "That the demand in '5—Land Revenue' be reduced by Rs. 1 lakh by the omission of Rs. 1 lakh out of the further sum of Rs. 2 lakhs proposed in the ensuing year's Budget for the appointment of additional circle officers."

The motion, as amended, was then carried.

With regard to this motion, I have a suggestion to offer. As there is another motion, under the head 'Administration' I believe, for the curtailment of the expenses for the partition of the district of Midnapore, if that motion is carried, this will go of itself. We may await the result of that motion. If my suggestion will be accepted by Government, I would ask permission to withdraw this motion."

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I understand that Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri is desirous of withdrawing this motion. He can do so with safety. There are five motions dealing with the partition of Midnapore—Nos. 153 to 157. If these motions are carried—I shall oppose them myself—then the provision for establishment in the new Hijli district will automatically drop out; no establishment will be required for a district which would then be non-existent, and no money will be spent. The Hon'ble Member is perfectly safe in withdrawing the present motion without endangering the object which he has in view.

The motion was then, by leave, withdrawn.

The general opinion of the Council is that those schemes which are urgent should be taken up, but those, which are not so, should be postponed. This scheme though remunerative will not be immediately so. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr has suggested three ways in which the deficit in the Budget may be met, first by taxation, second by curtailment of expenditure, and third by encroaching on the closing balances. This is a scheme which can be postponed. Colonisation is not a thing which should be undertaken by borrowing; we are practically borrowing the money from the reserve funds, or from earmarked grants. Borrowing is not encouraged even in ordinary household affairs. This is not a very urgent scheme. The value of land is increasing, and there is a demand on the part of rich people to get land, wherever possible, as in the case of tea gardens in Assam and the hill districts; also for colonisation and utilisation of waste lands. This may be done without incurring expenditure on the part of Government. A committee will shortly be formed and attached to each department, who will have the benefit of scrutinising schemes and deciding on their urgency or otherwise. I think that accepting the principle laid down by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, regarding curtailment of expenditure, we should wait for a year and then carry out this work. I do not mean that waste land should be allowed to remain uncultivated, but I do think that we should wait until we are able to incur the expenditure. In this view I suggest that this provision may be omitted. With these words, I commend the motion to the acceptance of the House.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: I am extremely sorry that I have to oppose my friend Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. Evidently he has very little experience of "Sunderbunds" colonisation. Much excellent work is being done, at any rate, in the Sunderbunds within the district of Bakarganj. If my friend ever goes there and sees how really a howling wilderness is being converted into smiling paddy fields, how tenants have settled there quite happily under an enterprising colonisation officer, I am sure he will change his opinion. Co-operative societies, co-operative stores have been started for the benefit of the tenantry, and there is no doubt that within a few years, the returns from the Sunderbunds colonisation scheme will be very satisfactory. Well, we are all out for retrenchment, but at the same time we should not (retrench) on projects, which are bound to be remunerative within a very few years. Work has been started, much money has been laid out, and I think it has been very prudent on the part of Government to provide this amount in the Budget, and I think my friend, without much experience of Sunderbunds colonisation cannot understand the situation. I was told by my friend that colonisation work in the 24-Parganas was not a success—well, I do not know anything about that—but I do know that the colonisation work in Bakarganj, has been going on beautifully, and I can assure the House that money spent on it, will not be spent in vain. I strongly oppose the amendment proposed by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: I am afraid that if Kishori Babu's principle of curtailment were to be adopted by this Council, he would be reducing our receipt side very much, and what is more, I don't think that the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr ever proposed curtailment of this nature, because he is out for more money than anybody else in this Council. He has got to justify his existence as Finance Member of the Government in trying to get as much money as possible for the members of this Council to spend for the benefit of this province. I cannot follow the argument that a remunerative piece of work should be delayed; I should have thought that, if it be remunerative, the sooner we can make it a paying concern, the better for the province and its revenues. But I think that a few words from me will explain what the position is, and, after the very clear statement made by the representative from the rural area of Barisal, Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta, I am sure Kishori Babu will be convinced that there is no reason to cut down this figure. The motion is that the demand for colonisation in the Sunderbunds be reduced. This amount is included in the Rs. 2,75,000 provided for outlay on improvements on page 33 of the Budget estimates. The original estimate framed by the Board of Revenue was for a larger amount, Rs. 3,25,000; the Financial Department made a lump sum reduction; it is not therefore possible to show the details of this Rs. 2,75,000. The amount includes under various items the sum of Rs. 1,72,000 provided for colonisation in the Sunderbunds. The scheme for colonisation was started in 1907 in the Bakarganj district as an experiment in raiyatwari settlement in place of the farming leases to capitalists, the failure of which in the 24-Parganas is well-known. The results have been very satisfactory; there is ample evidence in Mr. Ascoli's valuable report. I do not think I need read out any extract from the report; but from what the gentleman from Bakarganj himself has said, that this scheme has converted a howling wilderness into a smiling countryside. I do not think that any other certificate is required by the House as to what the effect of such colonisation is.

According to the original programme, the colonisation was expected to be accomplished in 50 years at a total expenditure of Rs. 25 lakhs; more than half the work has already been completed in 12 years, at a total cost in improvements of Rs. 5 lakhs and in management of a little more than Rs. 2 lakhs. During this period apart from land revenue which has amounted to Rs. 3½ lakhs, Government has obtained an income of about Rs. 2½ lakhs from forest produce in grazing rights, so that already the income is only Rs. 1 lakh less than the total capital invested in the colonisation scheme. The success of the scheme in Bakarganj has led Government to introduce a similar scheme in the 24-Parganas Sunderbunds, where a Sub-Deputy Collector specially trained under the Colonization Officer of Bakarganj has been working.

The total sum of Rs. 1,17,000 to be spent on the colonisation establishment is made up as follows:—

(i) Special grant for colonisation work in Bakarganj
Sunderbunds	80,000
(ii) Colonisation office building at Rhepupara in Bakarganj	5,000
(iii) Special grant for colonisation work in the 24-Parganas Sunderbunds, which is reclamation work in the
Saugor island	32,000

From the experience already gained, I may confidently say that the proposed expenditure will soon result in a considerable increase of revenue. That being so, I do not think that the mover of the motion will be doing either to the Government or to the province an act of service by pressing for it; and I hope that he will withdraw it.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I am sorry that these informations were not supplied in the explanatory notes either in the Budget or in the detailed accounts of expenditure. After hearing what Mr. Das Gupta has said and also in view of the fact that the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur has shown that the work is really emergent and that a large sum has already been spent and more money should be spent in order that the scheme may be remunerative, I do not think that I shall be justified in pressing this motion. I therefore ask for the permission of this House to withdraw it.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT: The next item (No. 17) has, through an oversight, been placed under the head of "Land Revenue"; but it should come under the head of "General Administration," and it will be taken up under that head.

The original demand (item No.3) of the Hon'ble Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan was for Rs. 69,32,000, of which there has been a reduction of Rs. 1,00,000. The result is that I have to put to vote the demand that a sum of Rs. 68,32,000 be granted for expenditure under the head "5.—Land Revenue."

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur moved "that a sum of Rs. 16,01,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '6 Excise.'"

I beg to move that a demand of Rs. 16,01,000 be voted by this Council as the grant under the head "6—Excise" for the year 1921-22. To take the last item, which is the smallest, first, I wish to explain that with a view to obviate the unnecessary swelling of the revenue and expenditure accounts, the Government of India have ordered that all refunds from revenue, in the Civil Estimates and in the accounts, must be shown as deductions from the actual collections. As, however, all revenue collected is deposited in full into the treasury, refunds which represent the repayment of excess amounts collected, are really expenditure which requires the vote of the Council and are, therefore, included in the demand for grant.

It will be seen that the total estimate for the expenditure of the department exceeds the revised estimate of expenditure during the current year by Rs. 4,41,000. This includes a lump provision of Rs. 3,85,000 for the revision of pay of Deputy Commissioners, Superintendents and Inspectors of Excise. In view of the increases of pay granted to other departments and to officers of similar status, it is inevitable that the pay of the superior establishment of the Excise Department should also be increased. The estimated receipts under the head "Excise" for the coming year amount to the large sum of Rs. 2 crores and 8 lakhs. For the protection of the large revenue and to ensure its regular collection, it is essential that the department should be efficiently administered. When the department was re-organised in 1915, Government aimed at securing as Superintendents of Excise, officers of the same standing and qualifications as the members of the Bengal Civil Service. Similarly, the pay of Inspectors of Excise was fixed with a view to attracting recruits of the same class as Sub-Deputy Magistrates. Government can claim that their policy has been successful. The Excise Department has secured able and energetic officers, who have proved their fitness for their duties and responsibilities, and the standard of administration in the department is a high one.

In order that there should be no diminution in their efficiency and that Government, while discouraging excessive consumption of excisable articles, should derive the maximum revenue from their sale, it is essential that the officers of the department should be contented and in a frame of mind to devote the whole of their energies to the discharge of their duties. Further, it is necessary that there should be no falling off in the standard of recruits, and that the department should continue to secure officers of the present type. The pay of the Bengal Civil Service has been substantially improved and the increase of pay of the Sub-Deputy Collectors is under consideration. It is, therefore, essential that the pay of the Superintendents and Inspectors should be revised, if the existing standard of efficiency is to be maintained and recruits of the stamp hitherto secured are to be obtained in future. The provision for this revision of pay accounts for the bulk of the excess of estimated expenditure for 1921-22 over this year's revised estimate. The balance is only Rs. 56,000 and this is required not for the introduction of new schemes but merely to meet the normal growth in the expenditure of the Department. I ask the Council to vote this grant.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR moved "that a sum of Rs. 7,51,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '7—Stamps.'"

This is one of the few heads of the Budget on which the Finance Department can look with undiluted pleasure, because for an expenditure of Rs. 6½ lakhs, we get a revenue of Rs. 3 crores. If there were a few more heads like this, our financial position would be very different from what it is. Out of this expenditure of Rs. 7½ lakhs, there is an item of Rs. 29,000 for Superintendence which represents the pay of the Probate Deputy Collector at Calcutta and his establishment. The rest of the expenditure is due entirely to the cost of the paper which we use for these stamps and which we obtain from the Central Stores, and to the discount which we pay to stamp-vendors for selling the stamps. I do not think that I need take up the time of the Council by explaining the items in further detail and I beg formally to move that the demand be granted.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: I wish to point out to members that the figures given in the List of Business are not always correct as they were taken from the old Budget Estimates. The correct figures will be found in the revised Budget that has been handed over to the Members of the Council.

I desire to congratulate members for economising the time so well, and the result is that instead of detaining you till 7-15 p.m., I am able to adjourn the Council at 7 o'clock to-day.

Adjournment.

The Council was adjourned till 3 o'clock on Tuesday, the 15th March, 1921.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

The Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Tuesday, the 15th March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 118 nominated and elected members.

Voting of Grants.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Order! Order! The Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan) moved "that a sum of Rs. 9,72,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '8 Forests.'"

I wish to explain that it is with a view to obviate an unnecessary swelling of revenue and expenditure that the Government of India have ordered that all refunds from Revenue and the Civil Estimates must be shown as deductions from the actual collection. As, however, all the revenues collected are put into the Treasury, the refunds which represent the repayment of excess amount are really expenditure which require the vote of the Council and are therefore included in the demand for grant. As there are four motions to reduce the proposed grant for expenditure on Forests, I think, I should make a few general observations. Mr. D. C. Ghose has proposed a general reduction of Rs. 4 lakhs. Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur has moved for a reduction of the conservancy and works grant from Rs. 6,06,700 to Rs. 5,98,000 whilst Maulvi Fazl-ul-Haq would refuse the demand for Khedda operations and Babu Surendra Nath Ray would refuse the demand of Rs. 37,000 for five temporary forest officers.

As a perusal of the Forest Administration will show, the work of the Forest Department is not limited to the exploitation of the Forest as a profit-making concern, but in considering the Budget Estimate it is perhaps to this aspect of Forest work that the Council will devote most attention. From this point of view it must be admitted that the figures in the Budget Estimates compare unfavourably with those of past years. In 1918-19, the most profitable year the Forests have had, a profit of over Rs. 11,00,000 was obtained, whilst the expenditure was only Rs. 8,75,000. In 1919-20 the expenditure was Rs. 9,75,000 and the profit a little over Rs. 10,00,000. In the current year, 1920-21 it is expected that the total expenditure will be a little below Rs. 12,00,000 and the profit Rs. 10,00,000. The Budget Estimate now submitted to the Council shows an expenditure of over Rs. 15,50,000 and a profit of less than Rs. 7,50,000.

The reasons for this decreasing ratio of profits to expenditure are various. The Forest Department has not escaped the force of the world-wide economic changes which have increased the cost of production; wages have increased and the cost of all work, both in labour and materials, has increased. The Forests too have been and will be affected by the general depression in trade. The high profit of the year 1918-1919 was due largely to the demand of the Munitions Board for timber, a demand which has now ceased. It can only be expected that the present stagnation of trade will result in further diminution in the demand for forest produce. On the other hand not only has the cost of everything risen but the department is faced with the necessity of making good the deterioration caused by the economy in past years which was necessitated by the war. The position is in fact very similar to that of the railways, which made large profits during the war owing to an increased traffic and enforced reduction of expenditure, but are now faced not only with higher running costs but also with the necessity of a large expenditure on making good the wastage caused by the impossibility of making necessary repairs and replacements during the war. The amount spent in the forests on Communications and Building in 1914-15 was Rs. 1,13,262. In the next five years the amounts were Rs. 67,688, Rs. 64,548, Rs. 50,625, Rs. 56,299 and Rs. 76,900. In other words, whilst according to the standard of 1914-15 a sum of more than Rs. 5,50,000 should have been spent during the five years, the sum actually spent was about Rs. 3,16,000. The consequent deterioration has now to be made good, if the value of the forests to the province is to be restored and maintained, and if permanent deterioration is to be avoided.

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINCH ROY Bahadur withdrew the following motion: "That the demand of Rs. 6,06,700 under head '8.—Conservancy and Works' be reduced to Rs. 5,98,000"

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ moved "that the demand of Rs. 50,000 for Khedda operations in Chittagong be refused."

With reference to this motion suggesting that the demand of Rs. 50,000 for Khedda operations in Chittagong be refused, I beg to submit that after I gave notice of this motion, I have had a discussion with my friends in this Council and I have been advised not to press this motion, I, therefore, beg leave to withdraw the motion.

The motion was then, by leave, withdrawn.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY moved "that the demand of Rs. 37,000 for the appointment of five temporary forest officers in the Imperial cadre be refused."

I think that by the clear exposition of the facts, the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan has made out a stronger case than I could have done in support of my motion. He said just now that we have had an income of about Rs. 7,00,000, whereas we shall have to incur an expenditure of about Rs. 15,00,000. So that in the year of present stress we are going to add the pay of another five gentlemen to the Imperial Service cadre. It may not be known to most of the members of this House that last year three gentlemen were appointed in the Imperial Service cadre and again later on another gentleman was taken in from the Provincial Executive Service. Altogether four gentlemen were appointed last year in the Imperial Service cadre, although there was sanction only for two. What was the result? The men who were appointed had absolutely no qualifications for the posts, they were pitchforked into these appointments and three of the gentlemen had to leave their posts. One of them was appointed on the 5th February, another on the 22nd February and the third on the 27th April in 1920, so that their pay for about 8 or 9 months was absolutely wasted. And why? Because men in the Provincial Service, who were far superior to them in education and in forest training were not promoted to the Imperial Cadre, but men, who had absolutely no claims for appointment, were brought in. This is what I find in the Gazette of the 9th March: "The work in the divisions was adversely affected by the loss of several officers and other changes in staff. Two Deputy Conservators resigned and a third retired. Five temporary posts were created, but the three officers appointed did not stay long enough to do useful work." So that Rs. 10,000 to Rs. 15,000 were absolutely wasted. And again: "The Governor in Council trusts that the recent reorganization of the pay and prospects of the Imperial and Provincial Forest Services will secure for the province a more adequate and less changing staff." It is well-known that members of the Provincial Forest Service are generally men, who have passed their B.Sc. or M.Sc. from Calcutta or some other University, and they get—a training of at least two years at Dehra Dun and another two years as Forest Rangers—so that they get a training for four or five years altogether before they are appointed to the Provincial Service on Rs. 150; whereas the men, who are appointed directly to the Imperial Service, get a salary of Rs. 450 to Rs. 650 as Assistant Conservators and Rs. 700 to Rs. 1,600 as Deputy Conservators. When by promoting men from the Provincial Service you can get better work, why should you bring in men from outside to fill up appointments in the Imperial Service Cadre? You say that you require only temporary men. If that is so, why not temporarily promote these Provincial Service men, and see whether they are fit or not. If, after a period, they are found to be unfit, they could be relegated to their former position, but first give them a trial. It may be asked why a Deputy Magistrate was pitchforked into the Imperial Service. Probably his qualification for the post was that he knew a little surveying. But it must be remembered that at Dehra Dun the Provincial Service men also get a training in surveying, and they are quite competent to discharge surveying duties. Under these circumstances, I would propose that Rs. 37,000 which works out at Rs. 616 per month for each man be not sanctioned. If it is necessary to have five men in the Imperial Cadre, they may be promoted from the Provincial Service.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE moved "that the demand for grant for * 8—Forests' be reduced by Rs. 4,00,000."

The reduction of Rs. 4,00,000 that I move is from Rs. 9,72,000 which the Hon'ble Member asks from the Council under the head of "Forests." It will appear from the details given in the Budget Estimates at page 38 that the proposed total expenditure in the Department of Forests for the year 1921-22 is Rs. 15,63,000. Of this amount, only items of expenditure comprising Rs. 9,72,000 have been submitted to the vote of the Council, the rest consisting of nearly Rs. 6,00,000 have been withdrawn from the control of the Council on the ground, I suppose, that the expenditure will be incurred in the excluded areas. So that out of Rs. 15,63,000 which will be spent on Forests, this House has got control only over Rs. 9,72,000. Now, Sir, I venture to think that in this year of heavy deficit the proposed total expenditure of Rs. 15,63,000 in the Department of Forests is unjustifiable. Let me give the Council the actual expenditure in the Department of Forests for a number of years.

In 1912-13 it was Rs. 6,60,000, in 1913-14 Rs. 6,40,000, in 1914-15 Rs. 6,70,000, in 1915-16 Rs. 5,93,000, in 1916-17 Rs. 6,19,000, in 1917-18 Rs. 7,39,000, in 1918-19 Rs. 8,20,000, in 1919-20 Rs. 9,72,000 and in 1920-21 Rs. 11,90,000.

Now the average expenditure of the last 9 years works out at Rs. 7,68,000. If the House were to accede to my proposition, the Department of Forests would still have at its disposal Rs. 11,63,000. This amount, I may inform the Council, is more than 50 per cent. over the average expenditure in the Department of Forests for the last nine years. I submit, therefore, that the total expenditure, which I ask the Council to allow in the Department of Forests, is by no means niggardly or unreasonable. It may be said that increased expenditure in the Department of Forests is justifiable on the ground that it will produce satisfactory financial results. But, Sir, it appears from the figures published in the last Calcutta Gazette that an increase in expenditure in the Department of Forests does not yield an increase in revenue.

There is another ground upon which I base my motion for the reduction of the grant. It will be in the recollection of most of us that many of the leading representatives of our countrymen had asked that Forests should be one of the transferred subjects. That demand has been acceded to in Bombay, where Forests is a transferred subject. But in Bengal not only is Forests a reserved subject, but what is worse, expenditure to the extent of Rs. 6,00,000 has been withdrawn from the control of the Council on the plea that it will be incurred in the excluded areas. I may point out to the Council that what is withdrawn from our control is equal to the entire expenditure in the Department of Forests five or six years ago. So that the expenditure over which we have no control is by no means small or insignificant. I am aware that Government justify the withdrawal of expenditure in the excluded areas on the ground that they are empowered to do so by a notification issued by the Government of India with the sanction of the Secretary of State. Sir, I have read this notification very carefully and I venture to think that it is extremely doubtful—

The PRESIDENT: I do not think you are entitled to question that.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I will drop the point since I am not allowed to discuss the matter which I thought was relevant. Since we have no control over expenditure to the extent of nearly Rs. 6,00,000 and since we find that the total expenditure in the Department of Forests is much too high and extravagant, I submit that the department should be content with Rs. 11,63,000 which, as I have pointed out already, is more than 50 per cent. of the average expenditure of the last nine years.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I do not know whether Babu Surendra Nath Ray has withdrawn his motion, but if you will kindly permit me, I should just like to say a word or two on his motion.

The PRESIDENT: Yes, it is a general debate. The original motion as well as the amendments are to be debated together.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I only want to mention one fact. From what I have personally observed, we find that all practical works are done by the Indian officers such as Rangers, Deputy Rangers and other people of the Forest Department. There is hardly any reason why the number of such highly paid officers in the Imperial Cadre should be increased by another four gentlemen this year. The more we can indianise the Service, the cheaper we can run the administration; and for that particular reason, I heartily support the motion put forward by Babu Surendra Nath Ray.

Babu FANINDRALAL DE: We should be very cautious in considering the motion for reduction of grants under Forests; this is more imperious in view of the prospects of permanent deficit in our Budget, as the Forest Department is certainly one of the few productive departments, where, under proper handling and careful consideration, a systematic increase in revenues can be confidently expected to relieve the situation. Indian timber is being gradually appreciated in the foreign market, and, if along with it, factories can be started to obtain forest products and bye-products as in the United Provinces and other Provinces, it will not only add substantially to the depleted treasury, but give an impetus to this neglected branch of industry. Again, on a proper upkeep of the forest depends to a great extent the distribution of monsoons, so essential to the climate and rainfall in an agricultural country like ours.

That is why I am anxious to see that the department gets its just requirements, both for its efficient working and proper development.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I have much pleasure in seconding the amendment of Babu Surendra Nath Ray. It appears from the Budget that, though the estimated increase of income is Rs. 1,00,000 and the estimated increase of expenditure is Rs. 3,37,000, I do not think we would be justified in making this increment having regard to the fact that the income is not commensurate with additional expenditure. But I am sorry, Sir, I do not agree with Mr. D. C. Ghose when he says that there should be a curtailment of Rs. 4,00,000. I am afraid that will affect the efficiency of the department.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: There are four motions with regard to the reduction of expenditure. Two motions have been withdrawn and we have, therefore to deal with the remaining two. Before I deal with the motion of Mr. D. C. Ghose—and I will deal with all the motions very briefly in any case—I propose to take up the motion moved by Babu Surendra Nath Ray. I think my friend's main objection is not so much relating to the appointment of officers in the Forest Department as to the class of officers recruited for that department, and he has based a good deal of his argument on this motion, which perhaps would have been more relevant, if a general discussion had taken place on a resolution as to whether for the Forest Department, Imperial Service Officers should be recruited or officers from the Provincial Service should be appointed. I do not propose, therefore, to go into that question but shall go largely over the motion before the House. When the department estimated Rs. 37,000 for five temporary officers sanction had not been obtained. Since then three probationers—Imperial Forest Service officers—have been appointed by the Secretary of State and therefore their pay which will be Rs. 17,100 out of Rs. 37,000 now becomes a non-voted item. Of the other three only two temporary officers have been appointed—one on a salary of Rs. 700 and the other on a salary of Rs. 650. They also will receive an allowance of Rs. 50 each a month. These officers have been appointed for a term of two years and, therefore, it is clear that for these two years we cannot turn them out. They were appointed when there was the serious shortage of officers, regarding which mention has been made by Babu Surendra Nath Ray. He said that he based his argument on the plea that the Provincial Service men were as useful, and that they could be appointed, as these officers who had been appointed had left. That is true. But the reasons that he has adduced for this departure I, on behalf of the Government, am not prepared to accept. But these sudden vacancies make it all the more necessary for us to budget for an extra number of men. That is to say, when there was this serious shortage of men, we naturally had to recruit and to get more men to carry on the normal work of the department; and, as I have explained, of the five temporary officers three have been appointed as probationers in the Imperial Forest Service by the Secretary of State and, therefore, it is a non-voted item. The other two temporary officers have been budgeted and there again we are really under a contract as we have bound ourselves.

Under these circumstances I think it is clear to the House that at the present stage it is quite impossible for Government either to accept the motion or for the House to adopt it.

I shall now go on to the more sweeping pruning of the Forest Department that has been suggested by Mr. D. C. Ghose. It is very easy to suggest a lump reduction because the difficulty to the proposer is not the same as to the person who has got to prune his Budget by cutting out the unnecessary items and leaving those that are absolutely necessary. If my friend had been in charge of the Forest Department, he would have seen how impossible it is to cut down arbitrarily Rs. 4,00,000 or any figure for that matter. But what I want to point out is this. I am sorry in one way that my friend Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq did not move his motion regarding Khedda operations because I could have shown to the Council that that was an item in point regarding which it is distinctly advantageous to the State—to the revenues of the province—to carry on Khedda operations. Now, for example, what do we gain by the Khedda operations. I would just give what was the result of similar operations in 1919-20. The cost of the operations was Rs. 52,000 in all. The result was an increase of revenue, which fetched Rs. 73,468. The net profit to the province was, therefore, Rs. 21,000 and odd. Well, having dealt with the item of Rs. 70,000 Mr. Ghose might very well say "I am quite prepared to cut down my figure by Rs. 70,000" and to this I would ask whether it is reasonable for him to reduce the Budget Estimate by Rs. 4,00,000 or it is reasonable for this Council to accept the proposal. As I have mentioned, during the war we had to move slowly. In consequence we have now got to spend more money not only to replace deteriorations that have taken place, putting in new bridges, repairing communications in the forests, because unless you have proper communications your timber cannot come in, but we have also got to lay out more to make up for the loss that we have sustained during the years of the war. Although there has been a ruling from the chair with regard to questions of expenditure relating to excluded areas and although I do not wish to disobey that, I want to mention items—

The PRESIDENT: All that I ruled was that, if any amount was not included in the demands by Government, the question whether it was rightly or wrongly excluded does not arise. Members must confine themselves only to those sums which are included in the voted items.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: What I wanted to explain was what the non-voted items represent. If we look at the Budget we find it is quite correct that on page 40 there is an item of Rs. 2,91,000 in all. That certainly does not include only expenditure in the excluded area, but also if we looked at the other items on page 41, it would be found that there is a very large amount non-voted for the simple reason that they relate to Imperial Services, and therefore I think that for a man of the intelligence of my friend here it is rather a narrow view to take that because we cannot touch Rs. 6,00,000 although we have a right to vote Rs. 9,00,000, therefore cut down Rs. 4,00,000. I say cut down any figure in the Budget, but don't cut down any figure if it is a loss to the State—to the province—to the revenue of the province. What is more? He has quoted several years' expenditure, and most of the years, which he has quoted, relate to the years during which the war was going on, but I can quote here just two figures to explain a point which has only been just touched upon by Mr. Fannndralal De. I am sorry I have not got the figures and the detailed information as to the outlay made by the United Provinces Government with regard to Forests, but I believe it is true that the United Provinces Government made a very large outlay and in consequence they have had a very handsome return in the way of additional revenue. Now, during the war in 1915-16, the total revenue was Rs. 11,45,000 and the profit was Rs. 5,51,000, the total outlay that year being Rs. 5,93,000. Now in 1920-21 the total outlay was Rs. 11,19,000 and the profit was Rs. 10,90,000. This shows that if we increase the outlay on expenditure it is bound to increase the revenue of the province, and as such I do not think that this Council would be justified in cutting down the figures in the Forest estimates, when we know that the item of Forests is really an item of revenue and a productive item to the province. I therefore hope that this Council will not accept the motion.

The amended motion of Babu Surendra Nath Ray, that the demand for the grant for the appointment of temporary forest officers (Rs. 19,900) be refused, was then put to the vote.

The Ayes being 62 and the Noes 40, the motion was carried.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

The following motion was then, by leave, withdrawn:—"That the demand for grant for '8—Forests' be reduced by Rs. 4,00,000."

The original demand, as amended, for "8—Forests" was then put and agreed to.

Minister in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION
(the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter) moved "that a demand of Rs. 16,11,000 be voted by the Council as the grant under head '9—Registration' for the year 1921-22."

I may explain that with a view to obviate the unnecessary swelling of the revenue and expenditure accounts, the Government of India have directed that all funds from the revenue in the Civil Estimates and the accounts must be shown as deductions from the actual collections. As, however, all revenues are collected and deposited in full with the Treasury, the refunds, which represent the excess amount collected, are really expenditure which requires the vote of the Council and are therefore included in the demands for grants.

The estimate of expenditure for next year has been drawn up with an eye to economy. Only the most necessary and essential developments are provided for and many desirable reforms have had to be deferred. Provision of Rs. 20,000 has been made for opening new registry offices to cope with the increasing work of the department and the small sum of Rs. 10,000 has been put down for furniture and for the binding and rebinding of registers. As explained in the Budget statement this sum will only serve to make up in part for past arrears. Owing to the enforced economy due to the war, it has not been possible to provide sufficient funds in the past for furniture and binding of books, many of the registration offices are not provided with the necessary furniture, and there has also been a very large accumulation of books and indexes in each district record room, which require rebinding. By far the most important item of new expenditure is Rs. 75,000 on account of the revision of pay of Sub-Registrars. The pay and prospects of other services have been improved, but no readjustment has yet been made in the case of Sub-Registrars to enable them to meet the increased cost of living which is one of the conditions of modern life. They are feeling the pinch, and it is recognized that an improvement of their terms of service can no longer be deferred. I have recently been considering their case, and only a few days ago received a deputation from them. I am at present not in a position to say what improvements will be made as that is a matter which will have to be referred to the Finance Department, but, so far as it lies with me, I shall certainly try for such improvements as the officers of the Registration Department may justly and legitimately ask for. In the meantime, however, the modest sum of Rs. 75,000 has been provided in the Budget so far to enable a revision of pay to be made.

I beg to move that a sum of Rs. 16,11,000 be granted for expenditure under the head "9—Registration."

The motion was then put and agreed to.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of IRRIGATION (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan) moved "that a sum of Rs. 47,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '15—Miscellaneous Irrigation Expenditure.'"

This includes just the ordinary maintenance charges of the Eden Canal together with a provision of constructing a distributor required at Godagari, which is necessary for the proper irrigation of the area commanded by the proposed distributor. There is nothing special in the provision, and I hope that the House will vote this grant.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN moved "that a sum of Rs. 1,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '16—Construction of Irrigation Works.' "

The motion was put and agreed to.

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler) moved "that the demand of Rs. 23,43,000 be voted by this Council as the grant under the head '22—General Administration' for the year 1921-22."

This grant deals with some of the higher executive officials in the province, commencing with the Governor, his staff and the expenses connected with the upkeep of his position. The Council will notice that there is an appreciable increase under the head of Staff and Household of the Governor, and this is one of the ^{unfortunate} results of the financial system under the Reforms, under which the salaries of the Military Secretary and the Aides-de-Camp, which formerly used to be borne on the Army Estimates, have now been held to be provincial expenditure which we have to meet. On the other hand, there is a substantial reduction under "Tour Expenses," due to the fact that this year we had to construct a new metre gauge saloon for His Excellency.

The next item concerns the Executive Council, including therein both Members and Ministers, and, as a result of the Reforms and the increase in the number of Members and Ministers, this shows an increase. Following that, we come to the Legislative Council, and there again a substantial rise is visible, due to the fact that we now have a paid President, a Deputy President, and the heavy expenditure connected with the enlarged Council of 139 members, compared with approximately 50 or 60 before the Reforms. The Civil Secretariat, which figures next, also exhibits an increase, mainly attributable to the fact that a fifth Secretary has been found necessary in connection with the re-organisation of the Executive Government, while the pay of the clerks in the Secretariat has been materially improved. The allotment under "Board of Revenue" and "Commissioners" has gone up, mainly for that reason also, namely, the improvement in the pay and prospects of the ministerial staff. There has been no increase in the higher personnel of the Board of Revenue and Commissioners, nor has there been any alteration in their pay. Under "Commissioners" there is a small item of Rs. 25,000 for replacing a boiler in one of the steam-launches, and I trust the Council will not think that in this year of economy we should cut this out, as I am informed that the boiler is absolutely unsafe, and that, if we do not replace it, one of our Commissioners will proceed to heaven more rapidly than he otherwise would. The Local Fund Audit establishment is also responsible for an increased allotment, which is mainly due to the improvement in the pay of the auditors.

These, Sir, are the main features of the general grant.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur moved "that the demand for the salary of the Director of Information be refused."

My task with regard to this resolution is very simple. We sometimes hear of the existence of an officer who is called, I believe, Director of Information. I, however, looked through all the lines of the Budget, but could gather no information regarding this officer. I do not know whether this gentleman is employed on some humanitarian or philanthropic work for the enlightenment of the people of Bengal about the meteorological policy of Government or the motive of police officials in taking up a particular line of investigation. If so, and, if the officer does not draw any pay from the public funds, I have not the slightest objection to all the effusions that come out from his pen from time to time to the bewilderment of the public. But, if he is a paid servant of Government, his post and the rate of pay drawn by him ought to appear somewhere in the Budget. If he is an "officer on special duty" which appears in several places in the Budget under head "22 F—Civil Secretariat," this should have been stated.

The incumbent of the appointment, if I am correctly informed, is an ex-army officer without any previous experience of Bengal or the civil administration of India. During the major portion of the war Mr. J. N. Roy occupied the position of Press Censor and performed his duties to the great satisfaction of the public and, I trust, of the Government too. I therefore find no justification for importing a stranger for such an appointment, no doubt at a very high rate of pay. In fact I can find no justification for the appointment of a Director of Information, when we have got additional Deputy Secretaries and Under-Secretaries. It can by no means be argued that all these officers are over-worked and cannot get time to draft press communiqués on subjects relating to their departments. Then, again, it cannot be supposed that any single officer can possess such encyclopaedic knowledge that he can prepare himself all the communiqués on the various subjects, which are issued under his name, without the help of the departments concerned. If this is the case, why, I ask, is this duplication of work? The duties of the appointment, so far as the public are aware, are extremely light, and any expenditure on account of the pay of such an officer is absolutely unnecessary and a sheer waste of public money. I am not aware that Madras, the Punjab and other provinces and presidencies have got their Directors of Information, and I am told they do this particular business in a popular way. If, therefore, any provision has been made in the Budget for the pay of such an appointment, I move that the amount be omitted.

The PRESIDENT: The next item on the paper is identical to one that has already been moved. The member need not, therefore, move his amendment, but he may take part in the debate.

Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: In addition to what has already been said by Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur I would like to add a few words. The post of the Director of Information is a new creation and it reminds one of Jonah's gourd, "up in one night and due to sudden sun." Before the war, the Government of Bengal had no officer of this kind and never felt the want of one. When the war broke out and the Government in England constituted a Ministry of Information, the Government of Bengal established a Publicity Board, and a special officer was appointed as Censor to advise the press of the province. With the end of the war, the post was abolished and the Publicity Board, consisting of Honorary Members was dissolved. But after this how the Government came to feel the want of an officer to be in charge of a special department, and when the office was created, is a mystery. It was only when on the 20th July last a gentleman signing as "Director of Information," served what has sarcastically been called a Purvana on the editor of the Basumatī, a Calcutta daily, requiring him to furnish by return some information, that the public became aware of its existence. Sir, every department of the Government has been in the habit of issuing communiqués, whenever necessary, and this practice is still in vogue. True, now and then, we find the Director issuing communiqués, which should be issued from some or other of the Departments of the Government. But this cannot justify us in supporting the additional expenditure incurred in the establishment of a new officer who seems to be a surplusage. As I fail to understand why the cost of administration should be further increased by the creation of a sinecure appointment, I beg to move that the demand for the salary of the Director of Information be refused.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: Probably members of this House will remember that in my Budget speech I told them that a personage of the name of Director of Information existed, but I can nowhere find his salary either in the Civil Estimates or in the Budget. I asked the Hon'ble Finance Member; he looked for it; he could not find it; then he had recourse to Mr. Marr, who could not also find it. Then on the next day it was found that on page 49 of the Civil Estimates his pay is put down, "Officer on Special Duty;" voted Rs. 600, non-voted Rs. 24,000. Then Mr. Marr told me that the pay was put down by mistake as "non-voted;" so it was with very great difficulty that we could find out the salary of this Director of Information. Everybody knows that during the viceroyalty of Lord Lytton a similar appointment was made when the Vernacular Press Act was passed; that was probably in the year 1879 or 1880, and Mr. Lethbridge, who was then a professor of the Presidency College, was taken to Simla to fill up that appointment. After a year or so that appointment was abolished, because it was not any longer useful. Then during the war time, Mr. J. N. Roy was appointed as Press Censor; of course it was absolutely necessary at that time to inform the public of what happened and what was going on. But at the present time we see absolutely no necessity for such an appointment, as we can get all the information we require from the Secretaries or Heads of Departments. They used to issue communiqués to the press on matters which it was necessary that the public should know. They used to do that before, but now we have got this officer, the Director of Information, to supply information to the public on a pay of Rs. 2,000 a month, and I think he has got an office costing Rs. 600. I do not know whether he has got an office or not, but it appears that there is another item of Rs. 600 just over his head. We have now got a Council, where every interest is represented, and we can get answers to every question from the Council. I really do not see why there should be a Director of Information, to give publicity to news in the newspapers. If the public want to know anything, they can always go to their accredited representatives and ask the Heads of Departments if this is a true fact. I really do not understand why this appointment should be allowed to remain. With these few words I beg to support the motion.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: I have not much to say in support of the resolution, but it strikes me that my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, was at great pains to get information, about the Director of Information, but, Sir, we do not want much information now. We know more than we require, and as my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, has just now said, that in this extended Council, which is a large body, the people are in touch with the Legislative Assembly and the Assembly are in touch with all the Departments of Government. Though it is now a superfluity, it was a war time necessity. I think there is no reason for continuing the post that has been created for a temporary purpose, and to burden the taxpayers with the cost of maintaining that office.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I beg to support the amendment of Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur. We have got a very active press in this country, both Indian and Anglo-Indian, and they are good purveyors of news. This appointment of the Director of Information in a peaceful country, where not much information outside what we can get from the newspaper is required, is absolutely unnecessary. We have got a very poor Budget, and it will not at all be right to burden us with the salaries of this officer and of his establishment.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I am not sorry that this question has been raised in connection with the Budget, as it gives me an opportunity of explaining certain aspects of it which do not at present seem to be clearly understood, and also of drawing the attention of the Council to certain matters in connection with the general subject which are well deserving of notice.

Before proceeding to discuss the merits of the question, I would briefly refer to the complaint which has been made in some quarters as to the difficulty of finding this particular item in the Budget. The item is shown at page 51 of the Civil Estimates as "Officer on Special Duty—Rs. 24,600," and the difficulty has consisted, no doubt, in crossing the floor of this House to ask either Mr. Marr or myself where that item was to be found. It would no doubt have been better to have specifically mentioned the item, but Mr. Kerr has already referred to the general difficulties that were experienced in preparing the Budget owing to the novelty of the form in which it was drawn up this year, and has admitted the existence of small oversights which we hope to remedy or avoid in future years.

Apart from that, this debate raises the general and very interesting question of publicity, and to any reader of the papers in recent days it will have been apparent that this subject of publicity is occupying the minds, not only of this Council, but of other Councils in different parts of India also. There have been various debates on this question within the last few days, and I cannot better define the purpose in view than by referring to the answer which was given in the Imperial Council on the 14th September last, which puts the position clearly and concisely. It was then said:—

The main object of appointing publicity officers is to provide a regular medium of communication between Government and the Public. The work of the publicity officer consists in making available to the public in a suitable form information likely to be of general interest and in supplying facts on public questions, the activities of Government and the reasons for their policy. The main channel of communication with the public is through the press, by lectures, and by leaflets.

That answer also gave figures of expenditure which other provinces were incurring in comparison with our own, which are not without interest. Thus we find that Madras thought the matter of sufficient importance to spend Rs. 66,000; Bombay Rs. 42,000; I have not got the exact figures for the United Provinces, but I know them to be high; the Punjab Rs. 1,74,000, of which Rs. 50,000 is covered by the sale of a newspaper; Burma Rs. 22,000, rising to Rs. 40,000 if it published a newspaper, about which there has been some discussion. In comparison with these sums there are the humble allotments of Bihar and Orissa and ourselves, ours being Rs. 25,000 and Bihar and Orissa Rs. 10,000. These other provinces thus thought the matter worthy of fairly heavy expenditure, and the Council will no doubt have noticed that a similar resolution to this was recently rejected in the Imperial Council and also in the Council of Bihar and Orissa. In the Punjab it was, on the other hand, passed.

Now, Sir, what is the reason that this question of publicity has attracted so much attention in recent times? In the old days it was a frequent subject of complaint against Government that their ways were ways of darkness, and that a rather unsympathetic bureaucracy, working in secrecy, never tried to explain its actions or to volunteer any information which it was not absolutely forced to give, with the result that it was generally known to the public, at best, as a spasmodic and somewhat irregularly intervening agency, whose actions were almost unintelligible, or at any rate extraordinarily difficult to follow. That was a very ancient form of criticism that was made against Government in this country, and, although I am not prepared to admit that it was true to the full, yet there was something in it. We, or our predecessors rather, were apt to prefer to blush unseen, forgetting that it might be desirable to explain to the outside public that we were blushing for our good qualities, not for our defects. The public were apt to give the less favourable interpretation to our attitude. Well, Sir, that was true even before the days of the war. The war brought this whole subject very much to the fore. It became apparent during the war, and in the light of the preceding events which the war emphasised, that publicity was a most potent agent in modern life; that if great things were to be done and popular sympathy was to be enlisted in carrying out any great movement, it was desirable that the public should know what the facts were. It also emphasised the sinister side of the question, namely, that by evil propaganda, persistently applied, in unremitting stream, enormous mischief can be done, and that men's minds can be misled to the extent of leading them to mad actions, after which the task of impressing upon them the true facts becomes most difficult, if not, for the time being at any rate, impossible. This was one of the striking lessons of the war, and it naturally drew attention to the whole question.

Publicity in this country is not an easy thing to ensure, and a great deal of the history of recent times in this connection has been one of experiment. All provinces have known what they wanted to attain, but they have found it very difficult to attain it, and their experiments have taken various forms. Thus I remember that in the early days of the war, 1913-14 or thereabouts, the Bombay Government sought to do something in this direction by putting on a special officer to, so to speak, "pot" their resolutions and reports. Resolutions often go out from the Secretariat as somewhat stodgy and lengthy documents, and the idea was that the special officer would boil them down and brighten them up. That experiment was discontinued after some time as not altogether successful. Another method of publicity is one to which we are very well accustomed, that is, the issue of communiqués, to which reference has been made to-day. It has been argued that, when there are Secretaries, why should the staff be increased by a special officer? The publication of communiqués is rather an illustration of the old saying, that what is everybody's business is nobody's business. If it is merely left as a general injunction to the Secretariat to look out for misrepresentations and misunderstandings and to correct them by communiqués, we know by experience that many items of incorrect information go unnoticed, while generally in the issue of the explanation or correction there is a regrettable delay, and everybody connected with the journalistic world and the consumption of news by the public is fully aware of the importance of freshness in anything that has to do with either a statement or its contradiction. Therefore it greatly facilitates the issue of communiqués, if there is a special officer to give the matter his attention.

Another way of ensuring publicity and the correct representation of facts was, as many of us must be aware, to encourage by subsidy the circulation of papers of a sounder type. That was fairly speedily discontinued, and I think the discontinuance met with the approval of many who are usually our critics. Another form of experiment is that which has been tried in the Punjab, the United Provinces and some other provinces, where we find that steps are being taken to issue Government newspapers. That is a form of publicity which, to my mind, is surrounded with difficulties. It is extraordinarily expensive, and it is not applicable to a province like Bengal, which already has in it a strong and active press.

Another method of publicity is the distribution of literature. That offers great possibilities, and it is one to which we resort. We are endeavouring to give a wide circulation to any pronouncement or literature of general interest; but in order that action may be effective and prompt a special supervising officer is essential.

Another old device in this province was to open a press room in the Secretariat, but for many years those who resorted to the press room were few or none. Since the time of His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay, to whom, with his experience of political life at home, this defect in our methods here has always been very apparent, we tried the experiment of deputing to the press room an officer who would be available to all and sundry, who could be consulted and give advice on any matters which were troubling the minds of the people. Unfortunately nobody came to consult him. I think he had only three visitors in about three months, so we eventually, about 9 months ago, arrived at our present method, under which we engaged a very experienced journalist—a journalist with experience not only of England but of many foreign and Eastern countries—and placed him in the Secretariat, with the idea that he would be available to the public and to the press to give information about anything on which facts might be desired; that he would superintend the issue of communiqués on subjects that were attracting the attention of the press, and the circulation of literature to our officers in the mufassal; and that, generally, he would keep in touch with all to whom his services might be useful. It is the pay of that officer and of a small establishment which appears in the Budget. As a matter of fact, our engagement with Major Story was made only for one year, and he is leaving us at the end of that period—in the middle of June, up to when we are bound to him. The Council may perhaps say: "Why not wind up the experiment after the middle of June?" but I trust that I have made it clear that there is a very real need of expenditure of this kind, and even when Major Story leaves us in June, it is the wish of the Governor in Council, in consultation with the Ministers, to whom this subject is of as much, if not more, interest than to us, to see how the money that appears under that head can best be spent in meeting this need. It is a very real need—a need for failing to meet which we have been criticised in the past, and a need which to the best of our ability we are anxious to meet in the future. We heard quite recently from Colonel Pugh an indictment against us to the effect that we are not paying sufficient attention to publicity, and the only item in the Budget, apart from this, which will to some extent meet his point, is one which figures in the Sanitation Budget and is intended for expenditure on lectures, exhibitions and the like connected with public health. The item, to which I am now referring, is of a more general character, and I urge on the Council that it would be wise to allow it to stand, in the expectation that by that expenditure both the members of this Council and the public at large will derive considerable benefit, and the actions of Government will be better understood than is perhaps always the case at present.

A division was then taken, with the following result:—

The Ayes being 71 and the Noes 36, the motion was carried.

Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: May I submit a few words in connection with motions Nos. 32 and 35? My submission is that motions 32, 35, 45, 46, 52, 53, 62, 63, 81, 82, 83, 122 123 dealing with the hill journey and Dacca allowances under different heads of the Budget, relate to the same subject, and they should therefore be taken together.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: They are in respect of different departments.

The PRESIDENT: Under rule 33, motions must be discussed in the order of the heads of the Budget to which they refer.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: There is one thing I ought to mention; it would be much better if Mr. Kerr were to separate the hill allowance and Dacca allowance and hill journey charges, because there may be——

The PRESIDENT: You cannot separate them now; you have already given notice of them in one motion.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY moved “that the demand for hill and Dacca allowances and hill journey charges in account 22 F. be refused.”

This item will be found on page 50 of the Civil Estimates, Finance and Commerce Department. Hill journey charges in the Budget Estimate for 1921-22, Rs. 6,000 and hill and Dacca allowances, Rs. 36,000, travelling allowance Rs. 25,000.

As regards motion No. 35—22 G., you will find in page 52 of the Civil Estimates, that is the Board of Revenue hill and Dacca allowances, Rs. 2,500, hill journey charges Rs. 1,200; that is all.

The PRESIDENT: I think you had better move No. 33 first, and then move No. 35; they will be put separately to the vote.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: With reference to items 33—22 F., as I have said, this relates to the Civil Secretariat, Finance and Commerce Department. You have provided for Rs. 36,000 in the Budget Estimates for 1921-22, as the amount to be spent for hill and Dacca allowances, and Rs. 6,000 as hill journey charges. We thought that after the resolution of my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, had been passed by this Council there would be no more exodus to the hills, and that this item of expenditure would find no place in the Budget. But though the resolution was passed by this House, still we find that nearly all the departments of Government are going to the hills! Well, I do not want to advance any new argument, because all the arguments that we had to advance were advanced on the last occasion. We have always said that we have no objection to His Excellency the Governor or the Members of the Executive Council, going to the hills at times, but we certainly have strong objection to His Excellency the Governor and all the Members of the Executive Council, with their offices, going to the hills and spending a good portion of the year in what has now become the summer capital of Bengal. This dislocates business; the Government does not remain in touch with public opinion, and no useful purpose is served so far as the public is concerned by this exodus to the hills.

Then, as regards going to Dacca, I really do not understand why the Members of the Executive Council, Ministers and all the offices of the Bengal Secretariat should go there, and spend two months in the year—the months of July and August—in Dacca. If respectable gentlemen of Dacca want to have an interview with the Members of the Executive Council or with the Ministers, if they want to interchange their views, well, the Members or Ministers can go there for a week or two; but I really cannot understand why they should spend a portion of the year, say two months or even a month, at Dacca. What useful purpose will be served?

My friend, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri may well say why should not these high officials spend some time at Rajshahi? And the people of Murshidabad might well say that Murshidabad was the ancient capital of Bengal, why should not the Governor and the Members of the Executive Council and the Ministers and the officers of Government spend a portion of the year at Murshidabad? My Dacca friends might well say there is a great difference, Dacca was only the other day the capital of Eastern Bengal, and they want that all the paraphernalia of office should be there. Now that the partition has been unsettled, to use a well known Bengali phrase, it is useless to tie the hair which you have already cut.

Well, I don't think my Dacca friends will take any offence at my remark, because going to Dacca means so much additional expenditure without any additional benefit to the people of the place.

Then, as regards the Civil Secretariat. As regards 22 G, I find that the Member of the Board of Revenue with his department has been provided with Dacca and hill allowances——

The PRESIDENT: You are moving now only No. 33, namely 22 F.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: Then I have finished.

The PRESIDENT: If you want to move both together, I have no objection. I thought it would be better if you moved one after the other.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I have finished No. 33.

The PRESIDENT: I now ask you to move No. 35. There will be one debate on both.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: This is with reference to the hill and Dacca allowances of the Board of Revenue, and the hill journey charges, Rs. 1,200, hill and Dacca allowances Rs. 2,500. I remember—I speak of what happened about 30 years ago—the Member of the Board of Revenue never passed more than a fortnight at Darjeeling, but now, like His Excellency the Governor and the Members of the Executive Council, the offices of the other Secretaries, the office of the Member of the Board of Revenue, also is removed there. The Member of the Board of Revenue can go to Kalimpong, Lebong, and other places, where probably he has sufficient settlement work to supervise, and where I think a new town is being built, but I really cannot understand——

This is all I have to say. [A member was seen to have a whispered conversation with the speaker.] I may tell you, Sir, that I have been asked by my friends to withdraw this motion, as there is a strong feeling against it.

The PRESIDENT: Babu Surendra Nath Ray wants leave to withdraw his motion.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I object to this motion being withdrawn. I want to move it myself.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: May I know whether it is possible to separate the two items of Dacca and hill allowances?

The PRESIDENT: They have been moved together; I cannot separate them now.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Can it not be done in this way?

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I have your permission to move only in respect of hill allowances?

The PRESIDENT: I have already ruled that you cannot separate the two.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: If that is so, I bow to your ruling, as I have no other alternative.

The PRESIDENT (to Babu Surendra Nath Mullick): Do you object to the motion being withdrawn? You can speak on that, and then I will put it to the vote.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Then I move that the demand for hill allowances in account 22 G. be refused; I also beg to move—

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I rise to a point of order. Babu Surendra Nath Mullick's name is not on the list as having given notice of any such motion.

The PRESIDENT (to Babu Surendra Nath Mullick): I told you that you could speak in support of your objection and then I will put the motion to the House, and if leave be given it will be allowed to be withdrawn; otherwise not.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I beg to oppose the proposition of my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, to withdraw these two resolutions which he has formally proposed, and my grounds are these: I do not find any reason why, he should at the last moment say that there is a strong feeling, and should therefore, withdraw the motions. To my mind there is a strong feeling, which is the other way about, and that is the reason why I oppose the withdrawal, and, in doing so, I wish just to make a few observations, and the first of them is this: that it is not a matter of little surprise to me—indeed I am perfectly surprised at the barefacedness of the demand. In spite of the resolution which was passed the other day on my motion here against the exodus, which was accepted by the Council, and before the very ink of the resolution is dry, there are these demands being made! This is co-operation and responsible government indeed! The time has now come when the Government must realise that we are determined to set our face against such an irresponsible waste of money as this. No doubt, it is a very nice thing to enjoy a picnic at other people's expense, but this we are not going to permit, if we can help it.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I wish to say a few words with reference to the application made by Babu Surendra Nath Ray for withdrawal of his motions. We had no idea that Babu Surendra Nath Ray would withdraw his motion at the last moment. I understand that there is a feeling amongst the Eastern Bengal members that they do not like that the item, so far as Dacca is concerned, should be cut out. Can it not be made in this way? If this resolution is carried, surely any member hailing from Eastern Bengal may at a subsequent meeting move that the travelling charges so far as Dacca is concerned be restored, or that a certain grant be made for the travelling charges of the officers who may be required to visit Dacca or any other place in the interest of Government. I submit that that can easily be done; and if the members are of opinion that the resolution which they passed on the last occasion that the expenditure in connection with the exodus should not be incurred, be given effect to by voting against the withdrawal of the motions of Babu Surendra Nath Ray, they may move at a subsequent meeting that a certain sum of money be granted for the journey to Dacca.

The PRESIDENT: The position is that the mover, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, wants leave to withdraw his motion. There appears to be some objection to such a course. I have already allowed two members to speak, and in such cases, except with the leave of the President, there can be no discussion. I will now put the motion to the vote.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I only wish to say a word by way of personal explanation, because I was one of the members who advised Babu Surendra Nath Ray to withdraw his motions. I will not take up more than a couple of minutes. A sort of insinuation has been made by Babu Surendra Nath Mullick in opposing this application for leave to withdraw these motions. Just about half an hour before we met in this Council we had an informal discussion as to what resolutions we ought to support and what resolutions we ought to withdraw. It is true that this resolution was one of them.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I rise to a point of order. Is Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq entitled to refer to a matter which happened outside this Council chamber? Is that a personal explanation?

The PRESIDENT: I have given him permission to offer an explanation.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I hope I shall not be interrupted any further. At that time, most of the members from Eastern Bengal had not come, and, although it was decided by a majority that these resolutions should be supported, it now seems that there is a strong feeling amongst us, the members from Eastern Bengal, that the provision for Dacca allowances should not be curtailed. It is not a mere sentiment, and I may tell my friends from Western Bengal that the people of Eastern Bengal demand that the Governor and high officials and the other Heads of Departments should spend some time of the year at any rate at Dacca. That is a thing which we have been demanding for some time, and at this moment we cannot allow any curtailment of the charges for the Dacca allowance, as it is a necessary essential, and it is not a sort of picnic.

The PRESIDENT: Now that Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq has explained his position, I will put the question to the House.

The question is whether leave be given to Babu Surendra Nath Ray to withdraw his motions Nos. 33 and 35.

The question was put and agreed to.

Motions Nos. 33 and 35 were then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA moved "that the grant for the travelling allowance and the establishment of the Lady Adviser to the Court of Wards be refused."

Originally my proposition was aimed at the absolute abolition of the post of the Lady Adviser to the Court of Wards, including her establishment and travelling allowance charges. It now appears that the neighbouring Government of Bihar has kindly taken her over and we have been saved the situation of making payments of her salary. But the other thing remains, and it amounts to Rs. 23,500; that is the amount in question now.

I urge this motion for the acceptance of this Hon'ble Council on three principles, namely, necessity, utility and retrenchment.

The first point is—Is there any necessity for entertaining a Lady Adviser to the Court of Wards, who would now and then be required to pay some occasional visits to certain estates, entertain an establishment and just be paid to the extent of about Rs. 23,500? What we understand by the administration by the Court of Wards is in its practical aspect administration of the estates of minors and disqualified and incapable proprietors, male or female, under the Court of Wards Act. The very first premise is that they are incapable, and therefore Government, in the shape of the Court of Wards, administers their estates; and we know, from the Board of Revenue downwards, the Commissioners, the Collectors, the managers appointed under the Court of Wards Act, in fact all Government officials of ripe training and experience and trusted Government servants have got to manage the properties under the Court of Wards. They are also assisted, when difficulties arise, by the very highly efficient Law officials of Government, viz., the Advocate-General down to the Government Pleader of the district. As a matter of fact they are always there to advise them. Where then is the room just for a Lady Adviser to the Court of Wards? So far as I have been able to gather, some sort of an apology for entertaining her and her department was tried to be based upon the requirements of some of our female wards because of the system of purdah. So far as I know, this necessity has only been created for the purpose of maintaining and entertaining that department. I can speak with some amount of experience, so far as Hindu wards are concerned, that such a Lady Adviser is not at all necessary—not only redundant but sometimes perhaps absolutely undesirable, as has already been explained: I cannot go further. So far as Muhammadans are concerned, who are supposed to be very keen in maintaining their purdah system, I have got the assurance from some of the Muhammadan leaders, that as a matter of fact there is absolutely no necessity for this sort of a Lady Adviser, at least the creation of a sinecure post for her. I have never heard of the Lady Adviser paying visits to the female Muhammadan wards in my part of the country—so far as the whole of Chittagong and Mymensingh districts is concerned. Well, in a sense, it appears it is admitted that there is no further necessity of entertaining this officer, as there is no provision in the Budget itself to engage somebody else in her place now that she has gone over to the Bihar Government. Therefore, considering all circumstances there is no necessity for a Lady Adviser. So long she is not allowed to acquire practical experience of law courts, as you all know well, her book knowledge or theory is absolutely futile, and perhaps one would like to be at a safe distance from her.

Now, coming to another aspect; a bit of advice about matrimony, about adoption by Hindu widows, about personal health, comforts, etc., may be obtained from the Lady Adviser. Does the Court of Wards, which represents Government, really feel that there is any necessity of having a special post created and entertained for such purposes? Well, if there is any special necessity or a special occasion, are not the local authorities, the Collector, the Commissioner, perfectly equal to the task of finding out some special means just to tide over the difficulty that arises? I do not know what utility can there be in such an officer. I think that I have been able to convince the Council that there is no further necessity of the Lady Adviser and of paying for her establishment.

Then, comes the question of retrenchment. I am not for cutting down everything. I am not for cutting down every item. What I mean is that it will be simply foolish on the part of any one to spend a pice where he can spare it. And I have already shown to you that as a matter of fact there is neither any necessity for, nor any utility of, a Lady Adviser. In my opinion, her services are no longer required, and I hope and trust that this Council will accept my amendment.

Babu JATINDRA NATH BASU: I think it incumbent on me to place before the Council some facts about the post of the Lady Adviser to the Board of Revenue. Now, it has to be remembered that the purdah system in this country is still prevalent. We do not object to lady doctors. We think that lady doctors are necessary. In the case of the Lady Adviser in legal matters, there is no reason why we should object to the appointment. It is in matters of law that it is necessary that a person should have free and frank consultation with his legal advisers, and it is sometimes not possible for ladies, who require legal advice, to have that free and frank consultation with male legal advisers.

There is another fact, which my friend perhaps does not know, that the Lady Adviser does not confine her activities to Court of Wards' cases and I have known of cases, in which ladies were concerned and her services were available without the payment of any fees, because she is paid by Government. I have had occasion to avail of her services in important transactions, and I have always found her services to be of very great value. I submit, therefore, that the Council will not decide this matter in a hurry, but will carefully consider the matter, so that the ladies who have had an opportunity of consulting a trained legal adviser, to whom they can open out their minds, should not be debarred from that advantage.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: I am sorry that Babu Annada Charan Dutta should have moved this motion at this stage, for the simple reason that the general question as to whether the post of Lady Adviser to the Courts of Wards should be retained or not would have come up better in the form of a resolution, specially as the mover knows that owing to the Lady Adviser's salary being non-voted, we arrive at a very small figure which will have to be voted. As long as the post is retained, it will be impossible for the Lady Adviser to carry on her work unless she were given the necessary establishment. And what is more, let us look at the total Budget figure itself: the figure is Rs. 23,500; and if we deduct Rs. 14,400 from it, we find that the Lady Adviser's salary amounts to Rs. 9,100. If we looked at the Budget again we would find that the Bihar share of Rs. 23,500 is Rs. 13,500 and, therefore, Bengal's share is Rs. 10,000. Therefore, on a fraction of the amount which is votable, Bengal's share comes to Rs. 3,870. The general question of the retention of the Lady Adviser's post will be taken up by Government next year when Miss Sorabji is due to retire. For these reasons, I think it would be advisable for the mover of the motion to withdraw it and to allow Rs. 3,870 to stand in the Budget. There will be ample opportunities for the members of this Council to discuss this question hereafter.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: From what has fallen from the Hon'ble Maharajadhiraja Bahadur, I am led to enquire, before I take the steps suggested by him, whether it is not possible to make her retire this year on the pension she may get next year.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: That cannot be done, as the Government of Bihar is also concerned.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I beg leave to withdraw my motion, but I shall bring it up later on.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: Having regard to the communication which was made on behalf of His Excellency the Governor intimating that His Excellency is desirous of consulting eminent counsel in England on the question of the Ministers' salary, I beg leave to withdraw this motion.

The following motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn: "That the demand for grant for '22—General Administration' be reduced by Rs. 54,000."

The PRESIDENT: I have now to put the following motion to vote, viz., that the grant for expenditure under head "22—General Administration" as amended in Council be passed.

The motion was put and agreed to.

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim) moved "that a sum of Rs. 1,15,40,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '24—Administration of Justice' for the year 1921."

The Council will see from the details, which are given in the estimates, that under this head are included demands for the High Court, the Law officers, the offices of the Administrator-General and the Official Trustee, the Presidency Magistrates' Courts, the Coroner's Court, the Civil and Sessions Courts, the Criminal Courts, the Court of Small Causes, and the Pleaders' Examination charges. As regards refunds, I need not explain what is the meaning of it, as that has been explained several times before.

There has been a considerable increase of expenditure under this head, which is mainly accounted for, as will appear from the estimates, by the fact that the pay of the Provincial Service and of the Imperial Service has been revised. There has also been an increase in the cadre of Munsifs and Sub-Judges. These are really the main heads of increase. There are also some small increases, for instance, there is that much disputed item, which is classed under paper-book, but which is inaccurately classed as such, because it represents not merely the expenses of the establishment of the Paper-book Department, but it represents the expenses of the reorganisation of the offices of the High Court mainly on the Appellate Side. During the general discussion of the Budget, I had to say something about this item, and I find from the agenda paper that quite a number of members of this Council want to move for reduction of this grant.

As regards that matter, I may state generally at this stage that the establishment for preparation of paper-books was sanctioned at the instance of the High Court by the Government of India, and we acted under the orders of the Government of India in finding the money for this expenditure; and we have therefore made a provision for it in the Budget. I may point out—and doubtless most of you have noticed already—that while Rs. 1,30,000 is put down under the expenditure head, there is a corresponding item on the revenue side, so that so far as the provincial revenues are concerned, no sort of burden is imposed on these revenues. Nor need I point out that the Government does not intend to make any income out of this establishment. All that we require is that the cost of the establishment should be paid by the litigant public, who require paper-books for the use of their appeals. It will be evident that the High Court does not make any income by this establishment. I do not want to anticipate the nature of the objections that will be urged against this item of expenditure, but, so far as the economic side of it is concerned, there is no additional charge on the revenues of this province. So that cannot be the objection to this item.

I may also point out that there has been a considerable confusion, if I were to judge from what I see in the papers, between the establishment of the Paper-Book Department and certain rules which, I understand have been framed by the High Court for the purpose of conducting their business on the Appellate Side. This Government is in no way concerned with these rules. We know nothing about them, and this Council is not now called upon to consider the advisability or the propriety of these rules. I shall therefore ask the Council, when this question is discussed to separate the question of the necessity or propriety of this establishment from the question of the propriety of certain rules framed by the High Court.

Another thing I ought to point out to the Council is that this item of Rs. 1,30,000 is merely an approximate figure, as it is not yet known exactly what the printing of paper-books is going to cost. It was also under the consideration of the High Court—whether there should be a similar establishment for the Original Side. So far as the Appellate Side is concerned, the estimated cost of the Paper-book Department proper—and it is only a provisional figure as the details are still under consideration—is about Rs. 78,000 in round figures. I explained on a previous occasion that the learned Judges of the High Court know best how these paper-books ought to be prepared. What they found was that the paper-books latterly were not properly prepared; and I need hardly point out to the Council that it is very essential that the record on which the Court has to decide cases should be accurate and legible. If the record is defective in these respects, there is likely to be miscarriage of justice. The learned Judges also found that there was considerable delay in the preparation of the paper-books. As some members of this Council are aware, there was very severe comment made by the Privy Council in a number of cases on the delays in the prosecution of appeals; and in the opinion of the High Court, who again, I say, is in the best position to idge of these matters, the delay was at least partly due to the fact that the paper-books in the first appeals were prepared in the office of junior vakils.

There was another matter of which the High Court complains very strongly, and that is that a considerable amount of unnecessary printed matter is included in the paper-book. That, of course, swells the cost of the appeal to the litigant, and the appellant or the respondent, as the case may be, has to bear this unnecessary cost. The High Court thought that some portion of this evil was due to the fact that the junior vakils have charge of the preparation of the paper-books and there might be a tendency, in some cases at least, to print unnecessary papers—at any rate there would not be a keen desire not to print unnecessary papers. As regards the cost of the new scheme, naturally there will be a certain increase of cost over the old rates which were fixed in 1881. Since then, prices of everything, materials and labour, have considerably gone up, and it is really a matter of surprise how the vakils managed to prepare any paper-books at all during recent years. Of course the result in many cases was that the work was very unsatisfactorily done. The High Court took the precaution of consulting many printing establishments—I think about eight printing houses here. Seven of them under the conditions of labour and fluctuation of prices now prevailing refused together to have anything to do with the printing of these papers. Only one firm gave quotations, and those were much in excess of the revised rates as laid down by the High Court. I may say in this connection that the vakils themselves found it very difficult to go on printing the old rates, and shortly before the new rates were promulgated, they had applied for a considerable increase in the rates which they were allowed. I do not think I need say anything more at this stage. I shall hear what the objections are to this charge, and then I will give my explanation.

As regards the increase in the Subordinate Judicial cadre, I might point out that no less than 68 Munsifs have been officiating for several years. That could not be a desirable state of things. These gentlemen could go to one district and officiate for a few months, come back and go somewhere else. It became necessary, therefore, to increase the cadre. The proposal was that as many as 40 Munsifs and five Sub-Judges should be added to the cadre, but we did not find it possible owing to want of funds this year to add more than 20 Munsifs and three Sub-Judges.

Objection has also been taken to the appointment of the Additional Legal Remembrancer. As regards that, all I wish to state at this stage is that in an answer to a question put by a member in this House, I pointed out that the Government is considering the question, whether at the end of the present term, the office would still be required or not. But I may tell you generally that I have looked into the matter with considerable care, and I do think that, if there be a sufficient number of important and difficult criminal prosecutions in this province, it is extremely desirable from every point of view that there should be a special Law Officer to deal with those cases. I must ask the House not to confuse this office with that of the Legal Remembrancer. Their functions are wholly different. What the Additional Legal Remembrancer does is what in England is done by the Director of Public Prosecutions. He may otherwise be called Criminal Solicitor to the Government.

The Police are not able to deal satisfactorily without proper advice and supervision with important cases of commercial fraud or other prosecutions of that nature, and it is as much in the interest of economy as of efficiency that there should be a Law Officer of this kind to supervise and advise and direct the action of the police in these cases.

There is also another item, and that arises out of the amalgamation of the offices of the Administrator-General and the Official Trustee. The word "amalgamation" is not perhaps very happy in this connection. It was found necessary not only to amalgamate but to reorganise these two offices, and I may tell you generally that since the reorganization, the offices have improved considerably in efficiency. There is a surplus now, where there used to be a heavy deficit before. I would also like the House to remember that no charge under this head falls on the general revenues of the province, but it is borne by the estates under management. I now move that the demand be granted.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ moved "that the demand for Rs. 1,30,000 for provision for preparation of paper-books in the High Court be refused."

It is not as a selfish defender of vested interests that I rise to make this motion. I propose to rest my case on much larger grounds and I am willing to concede that if I cannot make my case stand on its own merits I will admit at once that my case stands self-condemned, and I will not even ask this House to go into a division over this matter. I have consulted many of my Indian non-official colleagues in this House and I have been able to find out that, so far as the majority is concerned, they are practically of my opinion in this matter. I say this, because at the present moment I wish to confine my remarks to the point which I consider to be of some importance, not merely to the Indian members of this House, but to the European members also. I feel, therefore, that resting my case on its own merits and on considerations of justice, I hope to win not simply on the votes of Indian non-official members only, but I hope to be able to get the support of my European colleagues also. It will not be the first time that I have got it. On one occasion at Dacca—although there was an impression that European members always voted on the side of Government—I carried a resolution in Council against Government. I hope to be able to get that support this evening also.

So far as the High Court is concerned we all know that there are two divisions of the work that is performed there, namely, the Original Side and the Appellate Side. It is with the Appellate Side that we are concerned to-day, not with the criminal branch of that side, but with the civil branch of the Appellate work in the High Court. The High Court in its Appellate Side disposes of appeals and, I think, it is generally known that there are two kinds of appeals which come up to the High Court. There are appeals from appellate decrees which are known as second appeals or special appeals and there are appeals from original decrees and original orders which are known as original appeals or first appeals. Now, the High Court Judges always insist that vernacular papers should be translated into English. It is a matter of complaint to us, but it is irrelevant to the present point at issue that even the High Court Judges do not take the trouble of becoming acquainted with the language of the country. However, vernacular papers have got to be translated, and not only translated, but the Judges insist that, except in very few cases, these papers must also be printed, as if manuscript papers would offend the judicious majesty of the Judges of the High Court. In the case of the paper-books for second appeals, it is the High Court and the offices of the High Court, which are charged with the duty of printing them. It is only in the case of the paper-books for the hearing of the original or first appeals that the High Court allows the vakils of the High Court to prepare the paper-books in their own offices and to make their own terms with the clients. This system was introduced by the late Sir Ramesh Mitter in the year 1883, and I claim that it has worked most satisfactorily during the last 40 years. At any rate I am confident that nothing new has happened within these years. I am confident that no case has at all been made out by the advocates of change to convince the members of this House that a practice which has behind it the sanction of 40 years should now be done away with in the face of the united protest of the vakils of the High Court, and, let it also be said, of the representatives of public opinion in this Council.

Various points have been raised by Sir Abd-ur-Rahim not merely in the course of his speech to-day, but also on the previous occasion when he was speaking on the Budget. His first point is that this provision is being made at the instance of the High Court Judges and also of the Government of India and that we have only been asked to find the money. I say in reply that if the suggestion has come from the Judges of the High Court and endorsed by the Government of India, let the High Court or the Government of India, find the money. I say it is no business of theirs to call upon the provincial Government at a moment of financial stress to finance them to the tune of Rs. 1,30,000, not merely as a preliminary measure, not merely as an initial expenditure, but, let me say, as a sort of recurring expenditure year after year. It is true that most of this money is proposed to be realized from the litigants. But this will touch the poor tax-payers and the poor litigants and on this I will have to say something hereafter. I will only say now that this is the thin end of the wedge and that this demand will be followed by a demand of nearly Rs. 7,00,000 for the establishment of a new building in the High Court to house the extra establishment that is going to be set up for the preparation of paper-books.

The PRESIDENT: Your motion only refers to the grant of Rs. 1,30,000.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: Yes, but I am referring to the point in passing.

It has been said that this question is somewhat separated from the question relating to the new High Court rules. But this is not justified by facts. This proposal of establishing a Paper-Book Department is part and parcel of that rule. But it is not as a protest against these rules generally that I have come here to-day, but it is with reference to the particular question of paper-books that I am making this motion to the Council. It has been said, and perhaps it has been thought by some, that the Privy Council have left the High Court or the Government no option but to institute this Department for the preparation of paper-books. But so far as the Privy Council judgments are concerned—and we have the privilege of reading those judgments in print—we are not aware that beyond what the judgments have expressed—we do not know whether there has been a confidential communication—the Judges of the Privy Council have not communicated anything which cannot bear public scrutiny. At any rate, nothing has been made public in the matter. We have got the judgment of the Privy Council and the observations of Their Lordships, so far as this particular matter is concerned. I would ask the House to remember that, if the Privy Council has made adverse remarks as regards the manner in which paper-books are printed, it cannot be said that the High Court vakils do not come in at all for any share of that criticism. But it may not generally be known to this House that after an appeal is disposed of by the High Court and after leave is granted for appeal to His Majesty's Council the matter goes out of the hands of the vakils and the parties and the paper-books are printed in the High Court offices. If there have been defects, it is the High Court offices which are to blame. If there are matters to which the criticism of the Privy Council relates, it is not the vakils who are responsible, but it is the High Court and the High Court alone who is responsible and who is to bear the burden of that criticism.

Then, Sir, it has been said that the High Court is in the best position to judge and it is not for us to make any comments but that it is for us simply to pay. I certainly challenge that position. As members of this Council we have got the right to examine any proposal for the expenditure of public money and, unless and until any new expenditure can be justified with the strongest reason, I submit we have got every right to object to any recommendation, even though it may come from Judges of the highest court in the land. I hope it has not been put forward as a threat, for I cannot think that it was an argument meant to be seriously put forward for the consumption of this House. It has been said that unnecessary printed matter is introduced by the vakils in the paper-books. As regards this matter, as soon as an appeal is filed a plaint has got to be prepared by the vakil of the appellant and it is scrutinized by the vakil of the respondent. In most cases the matter is discussed in the presence of the vakils of both parties, and, if necessary, contentious matters are even discussed before the Court. I submit that, if these safeguards are not sufficient, nothing that the imagination can conceive would be sufficient to correct any abuses in that direction.

Now, Sir, we come to the real point at issue. Why is it that we object to it? We object for the following reasons:—First on the question of cost. It will throw an unnecessary and heavy burden on the litigants without any commensurate advantage. I will give the House certain figures. I have got some paper-books in my hand. I have collected them for this purpose. Not that these paper-books were prepared by the vakils, but they were prepared on the cases I was personally interested in. These paper-books are prepared in the offices of vakils and the charges are as follows:—Translation of vernacular words at the rate of 150 words per rupee, printing charge Re. 1-6; maximum and maximum g charge 8 annas per page. Now, Sir, the High Court proposes to establish a Paper-Book Department, and this is the scale of cost, which it proposes to levy:—Translation, 150 words per rupee as against 200 words of the vakils; printing not 24 copies, but 64 copies, which is absolutely unnecessary, at Rs. 2-1 for the next six months and then Rs. 3-2; and editing at the rate of Re. 1 per page, as against the vakils' 8 annas. May I tell the House how the charges would work? There are paper-books consisting of 1,000 pages, 300 pages 400 pages, 600 pages, and so on. In the case of a paper-book of 300 pages, the vakil would charge Rs. 375, but if it is prepared in the High Court the charge would be Rs. 875, that is to say more than double. For a paper-book of 400 pages, the vakils' charge would be Rs. 750, and if it is prepared in the High Court the cost would be Rs. 1,450. For a paper-book of 600 pages, a vakil would charge Rs. 1,125, while the High Court would charge Rs. 2,475, nearly Rs. 1,300 in excess. And the poor litigant will have to pay all this excess money. It is not a matter for the litigant to pay so much more for his paper-book. The other day I heard Sir Abd-ur-Rahim say when he sat down that it was at the cost of the paper-book that falls heavily on the litigant, but that is the high fees charged by lawyers. Sir, it is rather a delicate matter to be discussed—not that I have ever had the good fortune to pay heavy fancy fees myself, but I know that members of the legal profession to which I belong do not charge fancy fees. Heavy fees are charged by members of the profession from which Sir Abd-ur-Rahim comes—but their number is only a few. And most of the members of the legal profession only charge fees which under the present circumstances are not even sufficient for bare subsistence. And it is an extremely cruel remark to make that the members of the legal profession, who have the interest of their clients at heart, usually make their charges so heavy as to tell hard on poor litigants who may come to them for professional work. Sir Abd-ur-Rahim knows very well that with a very few exceptions, the members of the legal profession do not charge such fees as tell heavily on poor litigants, and it is adding insult to injury to suggest that the vakils of the High Court, as a body, charge such fees from litigants as could be made a subject of public complaint.

Now, Sir, I ask, is all this extra cost justified? Government say “yes.” And why? One of the reasons given is that the paper-books are badly prepared. But are they really badly prepared? I have argued hundreds of regular appeals and I challenge any one to say that the paper-books, which are prepared by the vakils, contain errors of which any mention need be made. They might contain one or two printing mistakes, but do they really hinder the administration of justice? If a little printing mistake hinders the administration of justice then it is high time that persons who are charged with the administration of justice should pack and bolt, leaving the administration to other hands. Then it has been said that the paper-books are inordinately delayed leading to a delay in the disposal of cases. I would ask my friends on this side of the House to bear with me for a minute while I make it clear to them that it is not the vakils who are responsible for the delay but the High Court Judges themselves who cannot dispose of more than a certain number of cases because it is beyond human capacity to do so, and that is the reason why there is delay in the disposal of cases. Human beings have got a limited capacity for work. You cannot expect human beings to exert superhuman effort. It is on that account that I objected to the reduction in the number of Ministers. I remember once being told by a friend of mine that, if you want a vessel filled with water it does not matter if you dip it in a pond or in an ocean; the result is the same. Every human being has got a limited capacity for work, even if he is paid half a lakh of rupees a year.

As I have said before, paper-books on second appeals are prepared in the High Court. In the case of paper-books on special appeals, which I have in my hand now, one is numbered 2646 of 1913. In this case the appeal was filed on the 14th of August 1913 and it was not disposed of till the 31st of March 1915, that is, two years after, and would the Council be surprised to hear that the paper-book in this case contained only 14 pages of printed matter?

The PRESIDENT: I wish just to remind the member that he has only got a few minutes more, and the House will then adjourn to enable Muhammadan members to offer their prayers.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: The House can adjourn for prayer at ten minutes past six when my time-limit will expire. I think I am entitled to half an hour under the rules.

In the case, which I have cited, the paper-book was prepared in High Court offices. In another case an appeal was filed on the 9th of July 1912, and it was not disposed of till November 1915. Here the vakils do not come in at all. In another case the appeal was filed in August 1911, and it was not disposed of till the 27th of July 1913. The paper-book in another case was filed in 1914, and the case was not disposed of till June 1916. In another case the paper-book was filed on the 17th of November 1913, and the case was disposed of on the 14th of March 1916. So much for the second appeal papers. As regards the first appeal cases in the case numbered 18 of 1917, the paper-book was ready in 1918, and the case was disposed of on the 7th of February 1918. Such is the case not only with this appeal, but also with other original appeals, because it is not a fact that Judges have to sit down idle and wait for paper-books to be prepared for them. They are prepared in due time, but the fact is that the Judges cannot take up these appeals. At the present moment some original appeals filed in 1919 are still undisposed of, and I challenge Sir Abd-ur-Rahim to contradict this statement, though the paper-books have been prepared long ago. And to whom is this delay to be attributed? Certainly not to the vakils who prepared the paper-books long ago. Then, Sir, it has been said that the number of Privy Council appeals is over 55 per cent. So far as I am aware there must be some error in calculation. The appeals that really go up to the Privy Council are, I think, much smaller in number. Then, Sir, this proposal for a separate establishment in the High Court would entail an additional cost to the litigants. We say that this additional cost is not justified, first, because we are not able to spare the money, although we have been given a promise that the money would be returned to us after realization from the litigants; secondly, because we do not feel that this additional cost thrown on the litigants is at all commensurate with the advantages that will accrue. We object to being told that the vakils of the High Court prepare paper-books carelessly. We object to being told that the paper-books are prepared in a manner which hamper and delay cases. We protest against the suggestion that it is the vakils who are responsible for the delay that may occur in the hearing of appeals, and we also protest against what I may call an insinuation that it is because some of the vakils make a portion of their living by preparing paper-books and that these vakils would be hard hit by the discontinuance of the present practice—therefore, this motion has been brought forward in the interest of such members of my profession. Before I sit down I wish to say that it is not in the interest of vakils that I have brought this motion. The vakils, I hope, can take care of themselves, but it is in the interest of the dignity, the prestige and the honour of the High Court that I wish to have this matter debated in Council. I have brought forward this motion not in the interest of any branch of the profession, but in the interest of poor litigants who cannot bear the burden of costly litigation. It is in the interest of such members of the public, who have occasion to have recourse to the highest court of justice in the land, that I bring forward this motion, because by the rules of our profession the interests of this section of the public are our most sacred task.

[At this stage the House adjourned for fifteen minutes].

After the adjournment.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I do not want to mar the effect of the speech already made by my friend, Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq, on this important subject by taking up the time of the House and of the members. All that I can say is that, personally speaking, I have no sons and relations who are vakils of the High Court and who will be benefited if the work of translation remains in their hands. I myself have never undertaken the preparation of a paper-book during my career as a vakil for more than 35 years, but I must say that the work of the preparation of paper-books has been of some help to the junior members of the Bar. There have been struggling juniors, who have risen very high, and, if it had not been for the preparation of paper-books, which they had in their early career as vakils, they would probably have not remained in the High Court and met the bare expenses of Calcutta life. The young vakils of the High Court have done their work exceedingly well. I may tell the members of this House that some years ago the High Court Judges ruled that the work of translation of the vakils should be revised by an editor—by an expert. After a few years it was found that there was absolutely no necessity for having these experts to examine the translations of the vakils, because they did their work exceedingly well. That shows unmistakably that the High Court Judges, at least then, thought that there was no necessity for interfering with the work which was then going on. The High Court Judges have the absolute power of removing the name of a vakil from the list of those who undertake preparation of paper-books, if they think that the work which he has done is not up to the mark. I would ask the members of the House if they have ever heard of a name of any vakil being removed from such a list. If that is not the case, has a case been made out by the Judges of the High Court to frame new rules for the preparation of paper-books and to take away the work from the vakils? As I have said, I do not want to take up a long time, but I must tell the members who are sitting opposite and who represent the mercantile community of Calcutta, that they must consider the matter very carefully. To them it is a matter of academic interest I know, because litigation to them does not cost more than Rs. 50 or Rs. 60. Their cases are disposed of by arbitration and so they are not at all interested whether litigation is cheap or expeditious to the poor people. I got the figure of Rs. 60 myself from the Secretary of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, when I moved my resolution for the establishment of a City Court in Calcutta. I think litigation must be cheap and must be expeditious, and I have seen that, whenever there has been an order for expedition in the cases of paper-books by the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court, the vakils of the Court have found themselves equal to the occasion and they have prepared paper-books of 400 to 500 pages in the course of a fortnight or a month, thus showing that in urgent matters they are quite capable of carrying out the orders of the Court. We must see that litigation must be cheap, so that the doors of the poor people may not be shut to them, but, if the present rules be enforced, as they are intended to be, then I think, very few people would come to the High Court, as it would be to them as costly as the Original Side of the High Court.

With these remarks I beg to support the motion.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I do not think I shall be justified in detaining the Council after the lucid and illuminating speech of my friend, Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq. When I was very closely following the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim, it appeared to me that he was trying to find out some good arguments in favour of this change, and I found that he was not in his best mood and he could not find any arguments, except that the Privy Council had found fault with some of the paper-books. But that argument does not stand, because the paper-books for the Privy Council are not made by the vakils, but are made by that very Department of the High Court, into whose hands, the whole thing is now going to be placed. Therefore that is an argument which has absolutely no value.

Then comes the question of delay. It is a fact well known, I suppose, to all of us, who have to deal with the High Court and to the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim that, whenever there are extraordinary delays in getting up paper-books, it has generally been the practice to take the work from the office and to make it over to the vakils for the purpose of getting it done expeditiously. I ask anybody to challenge this. Therefore, there is absolutely no reason why the existing system which has been going on for the last 38 years should be done away with, especially when this system was introduced by the late Sir Ramesh Chandra Mitter on the lines of the procedure that was followed in England. I find that in England also it is the parties who pay the actual expense of printing, binding, etc., and the preparation of the paper-books is left to the parties; and I find that the ordinary rate is 1½d. per folio and that even during the war it did not go up more than 2½d. per folio. Under the procedure that is now suggested by the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim or by the Honourable the High Court, I find that the expenses are to go up 220 per cent. In the place of Rs. 373, it will go up to Rs. 885; in the place of Rs. 750, it will go up to Rs. 1,650; and in the place of Rs. 1,125, it will go up to Rs. 2,475. Is there the slightest justification for this enormous increase? Now, to look to the other side of the picture, the Hon'ble Member has said that only a certain part of this amount is necessary for the preparation of paper-books, that is about Rs. 273 he said, and the remaining Rs. 52, which is to be gathered from the litigants in the name of making paper-books, is to be spent for some other purpose. It is unlike the High Court, and I am very sorry that the High Court could have made any such recommendation.

Then there is another thing, and that is this. I think it might be said—and it has been said—that the present system has not worked well. But it has been working for the last 40 years, and there has never been any complaint, till all on a sudden this change was proposed. There is another point of view which I would suggest. It has been said that some junior vakils earn a considerable portion of living from this paper-book making business. I quite admit it; but is it not a very desirable thing? Anybody who has ever practised in a court of law knows that to get your paper-book properly made is of great help to the young men who are in charge of those appeals, inasmuch as they can have everything on their fingers' ends, when the argument is proceeding, they can help the seniors by referring them to certain pages as to the facts of the case. I do not think a more useful service could be expected from the juniors. In the sister profession amongst the Barristers it is well-known that in the beginning of their career they have got to live possibly by being receivers of estates and all that. That is the stepping stone. I know of a man who began life preparing paper-books as a junior vakil, afterwards became a Judge of the High Court and has now left the High Court. It is part of the duty of juniors, and I find the same is the practice in England. I am afraid that this is the thin end of the wedge. I am not in position to say whether the High Court have already sent proposals to the Government of India asking for another Rs. 6 lakhs—and that will perhaps come to us next year, and therefore I think we must be on our guard to see that next year we are not told that it is already there and we cannot do anything with it. I do not think that it is proper in the interests of the litigants in general. I strongly protest against this innovation, which admittedly raises the cost by 200 per cent. The Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim has said that no printing house in Calcutta would undertake the printing of these papers. Quite so. The market rate is there—the market rate is Re. 1-6 per folio, and what the Government demands is Rs. 3-2. Is that fair? Is that proper? When this could be had for Re. 1-6, why this additional taxation on the poor people, who do not come to the High Court as a matter of luxury, but mostly to fight against their landlords? The result of this additional taxation will be that many people will run away and there will be by far a small number of appeals, and therefore it will tell very hard on the people.

For these reasons I would ask the House to support the motion.

Mr. S. R. DAS: I did not at first intend to intervene in this debate because, so far as the members of this House, who are connected with the High Court are concerned, we have discussed the matter over and over again, and I certainly am in sympathy with everything that has fallen from the mover of this amendment and from those who supported him. I feel that the new rules are likely to create great hardship on the litigants and I certainly was prepared, so far as I had heard up to that time, to vote in favour of the motion, but a matter has been brought to my notice only within the last hour which has placed me in some difficulty in supporting this motion, and I desire to place that before the members of the Council. It appears that it is the Privy Council which has directed that the High Court should prepare all paper-books in cases which are appealable to the Privy Council, that is over Rs. 10,000 in value, in the same manner as they now prepare the paper-books in appeals which actually go up to the Privy Council; that is to say, although the present practice is for the High Court to prepare paper-books only in those cases which go up to the Privy Council, according to the orders of the Privy Council the High Court has got to print not only in cases which actually go up to the Privy Council but in cases which may go up to the Privy Council. The Privy Council has directed that a sufficient number of copies should be struck off in all these cases, that is in cases above Rs. 10,000, and if there are appeals to the Privy Council, in those cases, a sufficient number of copies of the paper-books should be sent on to them. It appears to me that the order of the Privy Council is likely to create a good deal of hardship, because, although an appeal may not go up to the Privy Council, the appellant will have to pay the cost of preparing paper-books not only necessary for the High Court, but also for the Privy Council. I fully realise that the order itself is likely to create a good deal of hardship, but the position is this: we are not in a position to say that that order should not be carried out. The High Court, so far as I am aware, is bound to give effect to the orders of the Privy Council, for the obvious reasons that the Privy Council may refuse to entertain an appeal which has not been printed in the form and in the manner they have suggested. Whatever hardship it has created, I feel that we must resort to other methods for the purpose of inducing the Privy Council to withdraw that order; but, since that order has been made, how can the High Court avoid having an establishment for the purpose of carrying out that order? That is the difficulty that I feel in supporting the motion for refusing the whole of the demand for Rs. 1,30,000.

Now when this matter was brought to my notice, I immediately spoke of it to those friends of mine, who are supporting this motion, and I was told that there was no such order from the Privy Council in this direction. Upon that I asked that the original letter or rather a printed copy of it should be put in my hands, and I find this is what the Privy Council has stated.

I read from this letter:—

Their Lordships further agree with the suggestion that the records in all appeals to the Appellate Courts in India of Rs. 10,000 (appealable amount) in value, where the record is ordinarily printed for the Appellate Court, should, unless the Court otherwise directs, be printed in Privy Council form and should be arranged in the manner set out below, so as to avoid reprinting the book if the case comes before the Privy Council. A sufficient number of copies should be struck off to meet the requirements of both the Appellate Court and the Privy Council.

In connection with this alteration in practice their Lordships are of opinion that all paper-books should be prepared under the direct supervision of officers of the Appellate Court, as they understand, is the practice in the Calcutta High Court in the case of second appeals . . . Their Lordships therefore desire that the Appellate Courts should be asked to frame a rule giving effect to the suggestion in all appeals of Rs. 10,000 appealable amount in value.

As I have said, it appears to me, as at present advised, that this is an extremely hard order on the litigants, but there is that order, and the High Court is bound to follow that order, and in order to follow that order it has got to keep an establishment in order to carry out that order. I have also been informed that the number of appeals of Rs. 10,000 and above is 55 per cent. of all regular appeals, but the whole of this 55 per cent. does not go up to the Privy Council.

This figure has been challenged. I am not in a position to state whether that figure is correct or not because I have not looked into it myself. Therefore I do not propose, in the remarks that I am going to make, to attach the slightest importance to that figure. Whether it is 45, 55 or 65 per cent. an establishment has to be kept for the purpose of printing these paper-books. I suggest that the best course would be to—and I do not know why the members of the legal profession should not—represent to the Judges of the High Court that at least a percentage of appeals, whether 45, 55 or 65 per cent. which are for values of less than Rs. 10,000 should be printed as they are being printed now by the vakils. Whether the Judges of the High Court will agree to that I cannot say, but what makes it difficult for me to support this amendment is the fact that an establishment is to be kept for this, and, if the establishment has to be kept, I am not in a position to ask for the reduction of the whole grant of Rs. 1,30,000 to the High Court for this purpose. I would be prepared to support any resolution which would have the effect of reducing it to such an amount as would be required for the preparation of paper-books of cases of value of Rs. 10,000 and above. Under these circumstances it is for the members of this Council to consider how far our sympathy with the litigants should carry us. I think it will make appeals difficult and help the rich litigants at the expense of the poor ones. I am of opinion that the best and most practical way is to work these things in a direct way; and I leave it to the Council to judge how far they will be justified in supporting a resolution which prevents the High Court from carrying out an order which has been passed by the Privy Council.

The PRESIDENT: I may mention here that I have a long list of speakers.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I desire that this matter should be voted to-day.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: I am to support this amendment, but I am sorry I have not been called upon to do so.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: May I now speak?

Sir, it has been admitted that it will be a great hardship on the people of this country if the cost of the preparation of the paper-books is increased nearly three times. What is the justification for it? Mr. S. R. Das comes and tells us that he has only got the facts to-day and upon that knowledge he opposes this resolution. He says he knew this information only half an hour ago, but I knew it 12 months before. The pleaders also knew it very well and, if the other speakers did not refer to it, it was an oversight. The Privy Council no doubt has said that for any appeals for Rs. 10,000 and upwards in value the paper-books should be printed by the office. It is absolutely absurd to suppose that 55 per cent. of the regular appeals are for Rs. 10,000. I make bold to say that the figure is not more than 10 per cent. Now, what justification is there for 90 per cent. of the paper-books being printed by the office? And as regards this 10 per cent. also, the remedy is quite clear. Mr. S. R. Das thinks that there is no other way except these being printed by the office, but the way is clear and it was pointed out to the High Court that they have only to select a few from among the pleaders and entrust them with the preparation of the paper-books for appeals of Rs. 10,000 and upwards. The said remedy they would not accept. That letter of the Privy Council everybody knows is an excuse. The High Court wants to take away the work from the pleaders and appoint their own men. Before I go into that question I want to ask the High Court that although Rs. 78,000 is required for the cost of establishment, why do they ask for Rs. 1,30,000? I think the extra Rs. 52,000 is for improving the pay of the staff. Have they got any right to exact this sum as taxes from the litigants for the improvement of the pay of the staff and can they take it as a cost of the preparation of the paper-books?

Now, Sir, I come to my last point. People are very diffident of speaking of self-interest but self-interest rules the world. More than 100 vakils of the High Court make a living by the preparation of the paper-books. Why take it away from them? The pleaders, by a majority of 75 per cent., have resolved that they should strike if this privilege is taken away. I would not say whether they are right or wrong, but they would be an addition of strength to Mahatma Gandhi and it would be an act of extreme folly to allow them to strike. What is the justification for taking away this privilege from the vakils? The only justification there may be is that the work will be a little better done; but I have been long in the High Court, and I can most emphatically say that the work has been hitherto well done. For the simple reason that this work may be a little better done, are these young men, who are making an honest living by the preparation of the paper-books to be deprived of their means of livelihood? I say it is neither politic nor humane, and I trust that no member of this Council would support the proposal for the grant of this amount.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: The speakers that have preceded me are members of the High Court, and now a mufassal member has been called. I do not know if that is the reason why I am called so late, though my name stands second in the list of motions for amendment. Sir, I think that the preparation of paper-books by the High Court—a demand for which has just been moved by the Hon'ble Judicial Member—is a great hardship upon the poor litigants. The work of the preparation of paper-books is to be divided into two parts. The first part is a translation of the vernacular papers. Sir, everyone in this Council will bear with me that the translation from the vernacular papers done by the vakils is much better than the translation done by the translating department of the High Court. There are very many vakils; I do not say that they make an honest living by it, but this employment is a necessity. I beg to submit to this House that the employment of so many vakils in the High Court is a necessity for translating vernacular papers. The translation of the vernacular papers, which contain many legal terms, cannot but be done by special men who are trained in law. Therefore, I say that it is a necessity. I say, if the High Court want to have a good translation of the papers from the Lower Court, it can only be done by means of employing vakils in the High Court who know the legal terms, legal phraseology and the countrymen with whom they come in contact. I therefore submit that it cannot but be done by the vakils practising in the High Court. The junior vakils make an honest living, no doubt, but I say that it is a necessity. If the High Court want to alter that practice, it would be detrimental to the administration of justice. The second part concerns the printing a mechanical and not a judicial work. I do not think that the High Court should be provided with a printing press to compete with the hundreds of presses in this country. I think, therefore, I can say that it should be done, as it has been done for the last 40 years. Mr. S. R. Das has said that the paper-books on appeals of the value of about Rs. 10,000 are to be printed, and they can be printed by the present method that is prevailing in the High Court. But I beg to submit that claims of over Rs. 10,000 are done by the High Court in their office. Therefore it does not come for our decision. Under these circumstances I move that the grant be refused.

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: The time-limit has not been reached and I do not think that the question should be put.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I desire to say a few words with regard to the demand of Rs. 1,30,000 for the preparation of paper-books in the High Court. I have followed very closely the impassioned speech of my friend, Mr. A. K. Fazl-ul Haq, and while I congratulate him upon the zeal and eloquence with which he has advocated the cause of vakils, I confess I am unable to say that his remarks have dissipated my doubts and difficulties regarding the question of our interference with the demand for the provision of Rs. 1,30,000 for the preparation of paper-books in the High Court. I may say at once that nobody is more anxious than I am that the vakils should have justice, if they think that justice has been denied to them, in the matter of the preparation of paper-books. But I submit that the proper forum for them to appeal to is not this Council but the Judges of the Court where they practice. I will explain briefly why I say this. Sir, we are here not as champions of any particular section of our countrymen but to protect and safeguard the interests of the general public. The Judges of the High Court by virtue of the right they possess under the Charter have framed a rule by which paper-books will now be prepared in the office of the Court. Their object in making this rule is that the ends of justice will be better served by having the paper-books speedily and efficiently prepared in their own office. The vast litigant public is not before us complaining that any wrong has been done to them by this new rule. If their complaints were before us we might have considered whether we ought to interfere in this matter. But so far as I know they have not complained. The vakils of course are complaining. The question, however, is whether in the interest of the vakils we should interfere with the internal administration of the High Court. Remember that any reduction of the demand for Rs. 1,30,000 will amount to an interference with the internal administration of the High Court. Is it right that we should interfere, unless there are very great and overwhelming reasons? Remember also that no Parliament, or Legislature can assume the functions of administration. The proper functions of this Council is to criticise and guide the policy of those who are carrying on the administration. That is our normal function. I submit therefore that we should not lightly take upon ourselves the responsibility of interfering with the internal administration of the High Court. I say again that, if the vakils think that justice has been denied to them, the proper course for them is to appeal to the Judges and seek redress of their grievance.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I am exceedingly thankful to you for giving me a chance of speaking on the subject when unfortunately I was not in the room. Mr. S. R. Das has to a great extent anticipated me and therefore I do not desire to go over the same ground. So far as I can understand, this matter has caused a great deal of feeling in certain quarters. There is a feeling abroad that in this matter the

VOTING OF GRANTS.

Judges of the Privy Council have perhaps gone mad, and the speech that have fallen from some of the members of this House seem to create the impression that the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court have also gone mad, that they have leagued together and conspired against poor litigants, and that they have no interest in the welfare of the litigants in this country. So far as I could understand from the speech against the motion for this grant, the objection rested on two grounds viz., that the cost of printing the paper-books had gone up three times and the junior vakils of the High Court are going to be deprived of their honest living. I am in a position to make the statement that Hon'ble Judges of the High Court have selected 40 vakils for appointment for this very purpose, and, if the department grows, more vakils will be appointed. It is simply because the rules that have been framed by the Judges of the High Court are in suspense for the time being that the letters of appointments have not been issued. As regards the cost I may be permitted to put in one or two remarks. As one who was a printer for five years and who is in close contact with printing presses for at least 25 years, I may say that, if the cost of printing of paper-books has gone up, the Judges of the High Court are not responsible for it. The prices of paper, stationery and ink have gone up and 20 or 30 vakils have petitioned the High Court Judges to increase the rates substantially. The request has gone up from the vakils to the High Court Judges. If it is going to cost the litigants more, the High Court Judges are not in the least responsible.

I understand that under the Letters Patent the High Court Judges are the sole judge of deciding as to how the paper-books should be prepared. I do not know whether this House has any jurisdiction to coerce the High Court to act against their own discretion. What power has this Council to compel them to do so? I do not think they are in the least competent to compel the High Court to act against their wishes. At this late hour of the day I do not like to take up any more time of the Council.

Maulvi FAZL-UL HAQ: I move that the question be now put.

Adjournment.

The PRESIDENT: I must give the Hon'ble Member in charge of the department the right of his reply. The Council stands adjourned till 3 P.M. to-morrow.

COMMUNICATIONS TO THE PRESIDENT. [16TH MAR.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council assembled at 3 P.M., on the 16th March 1921, in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 122 nominated and elected members.

Communications to the President.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda):
Before commencing the business of the day, I desire to read out two letters which have been received by the Secretary to the Council:—

NARAJOLE PALACE,
Midnapore, the 10th March 1921.

SIR,

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 23rd ultimo, conveying me and the other members of my family, at the direction of the Hon'ble the President, an expression of sympathy of the Council in the sad bereavement which befallen us. I write to you at once that we feel extremely grateful to the Hon'ble the President for his sympathetic reference to the Council on the occasion of the death of my father, as well as to the members of the Council for their message of condolence. I may, however, say that we are sustained in our bereavement by the thought that our loss is shared by the colleagues of my father and a large circle of friends, and shall feel obliged if you kindly place this letter before the Council.

Yours truly,
(Sd.) DEBENDRA LAL KHAN.

The other letter is as follows:—

Dated Calcutta, the 15th March 1921

SIR,

I beg to acknowledge with thanks, your letter No. 752 L, dated the 11th March, conveying to me and to the other members of the family, the deep sympathy of the Council in our grievous loss and enclosing a copy of the reference made at the meeting of the Council held on the 28th February last, to the death of my late father, Sir Rash Behary Ghose. I should feel much obliged by your kindly conveying to the Hon'ble the President and the members of the Bengal Legislative Council, our deep sense of appreciation of the feeling terms in which reference was made in the Council, and our grateful thanks for their kind message of sympathy in our great bereavement.

Yours truly,
(Sd.) BAPIN BHARAT GHOSH.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Before the discussion is taken up, may I venture to ask you a question? I understand certain leaflets were printed by the department concerned, the Judicial Department, and were given to some of the members of this Council, but not to all. They were printed at public expense and were given only to certain members and not to those who moved motions in this particular respect.

The PRESIDENT: We have nothing to do with that.

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): Government are not aware of the distribution of any leaflets; the Judicial Department have certainly not distributed any.

Voting of Grants.

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! The discussion on the motion to refuse the grant for "paper-books" will now be resumed.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: Some objections have been raised as to the propriety of our interfering with this provision. As regards the question of delay it has been discussed at length by my friend, Mr. Fazl-ul Haq. As regards inaccuracy, I think necessary arrangements for checking can be made; as regards efficiency, I hear, only a year ago the practice was that translations used to be examined in the office, and that was dispensed with, simply because the work done by the vakils was thought sufficient. If it was done away with only a year ago, where is the necessity of starting it again? I notice that my friend, Mr. S. R. Das, has been taken into confidence by the High Court, and as Standing Counsel he can well defend the actions of the High Court, but at the same time what he has said is, I think, quite sufficient to convince us, that the very idea of the circumstances from which the idea originated, shows that the system which has been working well for the last 40 years should not be discontinued and the revelation that it was on account of the suggestion of Their Lordships in the Privy Council the introduction of the rules was necessitated, is a condemnation, a sufficient condemnation, of the rules. So far as I understand, Their Lordships suggested that something should be done to reduce the cost of appeals. The Lord Chancellor is reported to have said that the cost of litigation must be reduced as well as the intolerable prolongation of the hearing of appeals. Here, Sir, is a distinct pronouncement that the cost of appeals should be reduced as far as possible; but instead of that, under the new arrangement, as has been shown by my friend, Mr. Haq, the poor litigant is going to be involved in the payment of three times the present cost! The present system is, that in Privy Council appeals a fresh paper-book is prepared necessitating double cost. But, as now arranged, instead of reducing they are going to increase the cost of the steps, by which justice is to be secured, to an orbitant amount. And then, why should not this be adopted in cases the Original Side? Why this differential treatment? Is it because High Court Judges are afraid of the stronger brethren of the Vakils, mean the Barristers? I understand, Sir, some of the High Court Judges, have decided to bring about this change; but I am also told that some of them are opposed to it. It would not be out of place to say that, Mr. President, when you adorned the High Court, you were opposed to such a procedure. Mr. Das says that some other means should be adopted for improving the administration of justice. This is an admission that something is wrong, and there is a good cause for our interference, because there is no justification whatever for increasing the cost of paper-books; it is, to my mind, irregular. If there is any special necessity for this, and any provision is necessary, then a fresh proposal should come up in proper form, and may be considered later on. At present in the form in which it has now come, it cannot be supported.

There are many things which I would like to say, but as the time at my disposal is very short, I am obliged to be brief. A suggestion has been made that junior vakils will be hard put to it if the present practice is done away with! Well, Sir, the prosperity or otherwise of the vakils is not our concern so far as the present resolution is concerned; we are not here to safeguard any particular interests; we have come here to dispense patronage to our beneficiaries. It is for the public interests that we are here, and what we have pledged ourselves to see that the welfare of the public as a whole does not suffer, and that the good of the general community is not sacrificed for the whims and conveniences of vested interests.

With these remarks I beg to commend the resolution to the acceptance of the House.

MR. R. M. WATSON-SMYTH: I must oppose this motion. We have heard a good deal about the preparation of these books from the point of view of the lawyer; may I put forward the point of view of the ordinary but necessary litigant? It seems to me that he is at the moment like a frightened sheep standing and watching a quarrel between two shepherds, as to which is going to fleece him. It does not much matter whether his fleece comes off by the sharp and efficient shears of the rules of the High Court, or is torn from him by the clippers of the layman; but what does occur to me, is how all this affects this Council. It seems to me that as the tax-payer has not got to pay, or rather, as the provincial Government has only got to put up the money for the tax being and get it back later, it is not a matter over which the Council considers economy, or the defenders of the tax-payer may wax eloquent. It seems to me to be much more a matter for the High Court to settle themselves, and that this Council should not be dragged into

As I understand it, the old procedure of 40 years ago, as Mr. Fazl-ul Haq has told us, has apparently broken down, and the Privy Council will have no more of it, and the alternative seems to have been presented to the Judges of the High Court either to have two procedures, one for the first appeals and one for the second, or to allow the old system to go, and to have one procedure for the lot. I understand after due consideration the latter alternative has been decided on. The Chamber have considered these rules, which were made in consequence of this decision last November, and have come to the conclusion that what the Judges have decided constitutes a useful and salutary reform, and that it would be likely to lead to efficiency, possibly economy—if such a word can even be used in connection with litigation—and certainly despatch.

I am perfectly well aware, that the printing rates are now higher, but I understand that a great deal of extraneous matter which used to be introduced into the paper-books under the old régime in order to bring prices up, can now be cut down. These new rules did not please everybody. There were certain vested interests which were up in arms at once, and I understand a petition was presented to the High Court, considered by them and rejected; and so it is, I suppose, rather as a continuation of this petition that the matter now comes up in its present form in the Council.

It seems to me that, if this item is expunged from the Budget, I suppose it is hoped that the new procedure in the High Court will be rendered impossible and therefore that the old régime will be renewed. I very much doubt whether this will be so; the rules have been made by the Judges of the High Court after very mature consideration, and, if by some manœuvre on the part of the opponents of this resolution, this Council can wipe out the money with which to carry these rules out, I cannot see any result except chaos. Is it to be supposed that the Judges of the High Court will accept this resolution and recede from the position which they have taken up, and thereby practically admit that they are subservient to the members of this Council? It may be so; I do not know. If it is so, then I must say that it will come as a very great surprise to anyone who knows the traditions of the High Court. It seems much more likely that chaos will result and that the poor litigant will suffer. The vakils will not get their paper-books, the Judges cannot print theirs, because there is no money, and the litigant will suffer. And worse than that, it seems to me that this Council will be brought into direct conflict with the High Court, a thing which, at any rate, at this stage of its proceedings, a sane man would avoid at any cost. I hope the good sense of the Council will prevail, and that this amendment will be thrown out.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: I regret, having listened to all these speeches since yesterday, that several false issues have been raised in this matter. We may have misunderstood, at any rate, the learned members of this Council who have addressed you; they have not pointed out as to how the Privy Council came to make this suggestion. The Privy Council complained that there were delays, threw the burden on the High Court, and said that the High Court was responsible for these delays. The High Court, in answer, said they were not responsible for these delays; books had to be reprinted in cases of appeals over Rs. 10,000 to satisfy the requirements of the Privy Council; this takes time. The Privy Council then said that with regard to appeals over Rs. 10,000, it would have to be arranged in this way; do not have new books printed, but print them in such a manner that the litigants may be spared fresh cost of reprinting. The idea is that these books should be printed in conformity with the directions of the Privy Council. Lord Birkenhead pointed out that the cost to the litigant must be reduced. That is so far as the administration of justice is concerned. It was to remove a hardship and not to create one that the Privy Council made this suggestion. That is the first thing I want to place before the House.

The next thing is this: The Privy Council has given these directions; the Privy Council is only concerned with appeals over Rs. 10,000; it has nothing to do with appeals below Rs. 10,000. We will accept the figure given, that 55 per cent. of appeals are over Rs. 10,000; appeals to the value of Rs. 10,000 may be about 50 per cent. or, if we take the official figures, 55 per cent. It may be less. I have been handling these figures for over 30 years, and I know what the value of these figures is. So far as the Privy Council is concerned, it has only given directions with regard to the books in cases which go right up to them. The books may be printed, and a certain number kept in reserve.

Then comes the question of the direction from the Privy Council, which we ought not to ignore. As a matter of fact it is not a direction, it is merely a suggestion as to what is to be done. The Privy Council cannot direct us in this matter. The Privy Council has written a letter to the Government of India and the Government of India communicated it to the High Court, and there is correspondence going on. This is a matter of arrangement between the High Court and the Privy Council.

It has been said that this is an interference with the administration of justice by the High Court. How is that so? It is the privilege of this House to consider the matter, when you ask for money, and it is for you to decide whether you are prepared to give the money or not. It is only a question of ways and means as far as we are concerned. It is a power given to this House to control expenditure. The question then arises: What about the half of those appeals, which are not required to be printed according to the directions of the Privy Council? As has repeatedly been pointed out, the question of efficiency is not before us; the system has been in practice for 40 years, and translations made by vakils were found to be adequate; in fact, they said it was beautifully done, and now we are told that the system has hopelessly failed. How? Hopelessly failed, after 30 years! Marvellous! Therefore I submit to you that these false issues ought to be removed. It is an admitted fact that the cost to the litigant is being increased.

Then, again, with regard to the junior vakils: this House is not at all concerned with them, though there may be a certain number of them present here who practically live on the money realised from these translations. It being an admitted fact that the cost to the litigant is going to be high, Lord Birkenhead, the Lord Chancellor, said that this cost must be reduced. Having regard to the fact that this practice has been in existence for 40 years, and that no urgency has been made out now to abolish it in this manner, I support the amendment.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I beg that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: A similar motion was made yesterday, and I thought that it would not be proper to accept the motion, because the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim had not been given an opportunity to reply. I will now call upon Sir Abd-ur-Rahim to reply. After he has replied, I will then consider a motion to this effect.

Maulvi FAZL-UL HAQ: I rise to a point of order. I do not think that the Government Member has a right to reply.

The PRESIDENT: It is Sir Abd-ur-Rahim's motion to which amendments have been moved; he has, therefore, the right to reply.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: With reference to the motion before this Council, I quite agree with the learned mover, Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq and with Sir Ashutosh Chaudhuri, that we must deal with the question from the point of view of the general public and carefully consider how far public interest is going to be affected by the question before this Council, and not from the point of view of any individual professional gentlemen, however much they may be affected by the operation of the rules laid down by the High Court.

I must make a complaint as regards what Mr. Fazl-ul Haq suggested about myself, that I have been rather cruel and hard on the pleaders. Certainly I do not remember having said anything which could possibly be construed in that light. As a matter of fact, if I may be permitted to say so, I have always tried to uphold the cause of the profession whenever the chance arose. And, Sir, I studiously used extremely moderate language when I stated the general position with reference to this question. I will now refer the Council to the reasons which the High Court have given for instituting this establishment. In September last, this is what the High Court said:—

In reply I am to say that the important questions raised in this correspondence have received the careful consideration of their Lordships. The whole subject of the preparation of paper-books has been brought under examination, with the result that it has been decided that paper-books in all appeals from Original Decrees (called Regular Appeals), irrespective of the value of the appeals, should be prepared under the direct supervision of officers of the High Court. The objections to limiting such a rule to appeals of the minimum value of Rs. 10,000, as suggested by the Privy Council, are, first, that vakils filing appeals might be tempted to undervalue them, and, secondly, that some paper-books in appeals from Original Decrees would be prepared in the offices of the vakils, while others would be prepared in the Court's office. In that case two sets of rules would be required, which would be confusing both to the public and to the office and difficult to work in actual practice. Moreover any regular appeal, even if it be below Rs. 10,000 in value may form the subject of appeal to the Privy Council either on an important point of law or by consolidation with other appeals. In such cases, the High Court would be technically responsible for the accuracy of the Privy Council record, although, in practice, it might have been impossible to exercise any control over its preparation. In view of the above considerations and the fact that paper-books prepared by vakils have frequently left much to be desired, the Hon'ble the Acting Chief Justice and the Judges have deemed it expedient finally to adopt the principle that all paper-books should be prepared in the office of the High Court, it being provided that paper-books in urgent cases may be prepared out of Court, upon good cause being shown.

Their Lordships' decision on this subject, together with the adoption of the instructions of the Privy Council as regards the arrangement of the record, have necessitated an extensive revision of the Appellate Side rules. In framing the necessary amendments, the Judges have examined the existing rules as a whole and have revised any rules which they found to be out of date or capable of improvement.

Then, in December last, the High Court were even more emphatic as to their requirements in this respect. They say:—

In practice, the majority of such paper-books were actually prepared in the offices of the vakils and printed in a number of small private presses selected for this purpose by the vakils undertaking the preparation of the paper-books. The printing rate sanctioned by the former rules of the Court for work of this nature was 14 annas a page. This rate has remained unchanged since 1886 when it was probably sufficient in view of the economic conditions then prevailing to meet the cost of printing work suitable for the purpose, but the steady rise in prices during recent years without any corresponding modification of the sanctioned rate for printing has resulted in the steady deterioration in the quality of the paper-book work entrusted to vakils. Generally speaking, such paper-books are badly printed and badly arranged and, as stated in paragraph 4 of the Privy Council's letter, dated the 27th November 1919, the necessity for some radical modification of the Court's former procedure was emphasised in the Court's letter, dated the 7th February, 1917, in which it was stated that "a reason for the present delay is the haphazard manner in which paper-books from which appeals to the Privy Council arose are prepared by the vakils, with the result that the sworn examiners have, in a large number of cases, practically to prepare a new paper-book and to refer to the original documents." The disadvantages of the former practice were, in fact, so many and so great, that the Judges were of opinion that it was a source of considerable danger and might result in a serious miscarriage of Justice.

Then they say :

It will be seen that in accordance with note 3 to rule 24 of Chapter VI and rule of Chapter IX of the Revised Appellate Side Rules, every paper-book must be printed in the Government Press, unless the Registrar shall otherwise direct. This provision was considered necessary in view of the inadequacy of the printing arrangements in the presses patronised by vakils, the general bad quality of work in those presses and the constant delays in the preparation of paper-books, the printing of which was undertaken by them. It was found, on the other hand, that the quality of work in the Government Press left little to be desired and that all details regarding the preparation of paper-books received the most careful attention in that Press.

As regards the instructions of the Privy Council, Sir Ashutosh Bhattacharya is wrong. This is what the Privy Council laid down. I think it was read out by Mr. S. R. Das yesterday. This is what they said in this connection :—

Their Lordships are of opinion that all paper-books should be prepared under the direct supervision of the officers of the Appellate Side as they understand it to be practice in the Calcutta High Court in the case of the second appeals.

They then say :

Their Lordships therefore desire that the Appellate Court should be asked to frame a rule giving effect to this suggestion in all appeals of Rs. 10,000 (appealable amount in value).

This really amounts to a direction by the Privy Council which the High Court are bound to carry out.

What then is the position with regard to this matter? The High Court, I submit to the Council, are the best judges as regards the internal arrangements to be effected for the disposal of their business. They found it absolutely necessary that the old practice, which had come down from a very long time, must now be changed under the altered conditions. Several members of this Council have emphasized the fact that the practice has continued for the last 40 years, as if that was a strong argument why there should be no change. I submit that it is the strongest argument against the continuance of the practice, that it originated in 1886—as the condition of things has altered considerably; and we are face to face with the fact that there is considerable trouble in finding adequate labour and in keeping it when you get it. The prices of materials have gone up considerably; and, as the learned judges pointed out, it would be a precarious state of things if they had to rely on small printing presses, to which the vakils have necessarily to resort, in getting paper-books printed for the disposal of their business. We all know what was the state of things in May last when there was a strike in the printing presses. Surely, there is a greater guarantee that in the Government Press there would be a steady outturn of work than in the smaller presses. As has been pointed out by Mr. Watson-Smith very correctly, the position is that, if this Council comes to the conclusion that this grant should not be voted, things will come to a stand-still. The High Court, as I made it clear from the two letters, which I read out, entertain a very strong opinion that the present arrangement cannot be continued. It is not the case that the question was decided by them in an impulsive moment, they have in fact repeatedly considered the position. They have received representations from the vakils; they have held more than one meeting in order to consider these representations; and they have come to the conclusion that the time has come when there must be some radical modifications in the arrangement.

One member of the Council has suggested that there has been a difference of opinion among the Judges of the High Court. I know absolutely nothing about it, and I do not know how the member came to know anything about it. Even if there was a difference of opinion among the Judges of the High Court, that does not make the slightest difference in this respect; we have to consider the action of the High Court as a whole. It would be impossible for any corporate body to carry on business of any sort if we always required unanimity of opinion among the members. The same principle applies to the High Court. We have to see what the collective opinion of the High Court is; and there cannot be the slightest doubt that they entertain a very strong opinion on this subject. Their position shortly is that they cannot rely upon a proper preparation of the record if the arrangements which they have suggested are not carried out.

Then, as regards the delay, it has been suggested that the Government Press itself is guilty of much delays. One member stated that in the case of a second appeal in which a few pages were to be printed, it took the Government Press nearly two years to print them. Does anyone seriously believe that the Government Press could not promptly print a few pages of a second appeal. Surely, as the professional members of this Council well know, the delay even in second appeals is often caused by the death of parties or causes of a like nature. On the other hand, we have got to consider the opinion of the High Court and of the Privy Council, that at least the main cause of the delay in the hearing of first appeals is that paper-books are prepared in the offices of vakils.

Then, as regards the rates, considerable arguments have been addressed to this Council that the High Court is charging unnecessarily high rates for the preparation of the paper-books. I should like the members to consider the matter in this light. The High Court are not going to make any profit; nor are the Bengal Government making any profit out of the paper-book establishment. The litigants will be required to pay for the preparation of the paper-books and not the general public, as you will find that against Rs. 1,30,000 on the side of expenditure we have provided the same amount on the side of revenue. The High Court considered this question. They sent for estimates from a number of printing houses; and I have got the quotations from some of them. They asked for more than what the High Court propose to charge. The Caledonian Press want Rs. 4, Messrs Lall Chaud & Sons want Rs. 5 per page and even the lowest quotations, which is of the City Press, namely, Rs. 2-8, is still higher than what the High Court propose to charge. The High Court propose to charge Rs. 2-1, exclusive of any charge for supervision. So far as the litigants are concerned, they will really be profiting by the arrangements proposed by the High Court. The old arrangements broke down completely. I have got petitions filed by the vakils asking for a considerable increase in the rates allowed to them for the preparation of the paper-books. They point out, and rightly so, that the prices of materials have gone up in some cases more than 200 per cent., with the necessary result that they would have to charge much more than the old rates if they were to prepare paper-books properly and in time.

Mr. Fazl-ul Haq gave us some figures last evening as regards the different types of paper-books and the charges for preparing them. I understand his calculation is based on 14 annas per page—

Maulvi FAZL-UL HAQ: Re. 1-6 per page.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: But as I have shown, it does not seem possible for any printing press to do the work properly and in time at anything less than what the High Court charge. There is not the slightest reason to think, as has been suggested, that the High Court will gradually increase their charges, and I have already pointed out to the Council that, as regards the details of the establishment, the matter is still under consideration; and if the High Court find that a smaller establishment than they have started will be sufficient, they are quite prepared to reduce the rates. In fact, they have, since the department was first instituted, made substantial concessions, in view of the representations made by the vakils of the High Court. I will just refer to one or two of them.

As regards second appeals as the Council is aware, they were all printed at the office of the High Court, and the Court levied certain fees, as costs from the litigants. They have now waived printing in the case of these second appeals; they are quite satisfied to deal with them on typed paper-books.

Then, as regards first appeals, all the first appeals used to be printed under the old rules. Now, the High Court have gone so far as not to require printing in the case of first appeals below Rs. 5,000 in value, if they are not very bulky, not covering 40 or 50 pages. These may be type-copied. These are, I submit, substantial concessions; and I am prepared to state to the Council that the High Court would still be prepared to consider whether any further concessions are possible consistently with the efficient discharge of business.

Colonel A. J. PUCH: Will the Hon'ble Member please explain why the High Court only allows a rate of Re. 1-2 per page to the Attorneys for printing paper-books in appeals from the Original Side, when it charges Rs. 2-1 per page for printing paper-books on the Appellate Side?"

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: I do not know anything about the Attorneys' charge for preparation of paper-books. But, as I have told the Council, the vakils themselves say that they cannot prepare paper-books at Re. 1-6 per page.

Then one member of this Council was under the impression yesterday that no instalments would be allowed under the new rules. This is not so. I understand that the High Court have permitted payments being made in instalments. I submit to the Council that this is really a very important matter with far-reaching consequences. The position is that the Privy Council requires the High Court to alter the practice and have paper-books prepared in the office of the High Court; and the learned Judges themselves are strongly of opinion that the paper-books should be prepared in the case of appeals above Rs. 10,000 in value in the office of the High Court. The Government of India have got administrative control over the High Court and the Government of India have issued orders.—

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: I rise to a point of order. Is there no time-limit in the case of Government Members?

The PRESIDENT: Yes, there is.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: As I was stating, the Government of Bengal are bound to carry out the orders of the Government of India, and I submit that if this amendment is carried, it will lead to considerable complications.

Maulvi FAZL-UL HAQ: Have I the right of reply?

The PRESIDENT: I do not think so.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I move that the question be now put.

The motion that the question be now put was put and agreed to.

The original motion that the grant for paper-books be refused (No. 38), was then put.

The Ayes being 71 and the Noes 35, the motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: Before I call upon Dr. Haridhan Dutt to move his amendment I want to mention one point of procedure. It is this. It often happens that a member rises from his place and, without giving any indication whether he moves his motion or withdraws it, goes on making general observations. In such a case a difficulty arises. If a motion is withdrawn without a discussion, it need not be put to the House at all, but if anything is said which has the effect of moving the motion, it cannot be withdrawn without the leave of the House. I would, therefore, request members to make up their minds, and to state at the very outset whether they want to withdraw their motion or whether they are moving it. Then there would be no difficulty in determining whether a motion for leave to withdraw should be put to the House or not.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur moved "that the demand under '24—Administration of Justice' be reduced by the amount provided in the Budget for the continuance of the post of Additional Legal Remembrancer and his staff, etc., by the omission from the Budget of the provision shown in the detailed account, '24 B—Law Officers,' under the item of Legal Remembrancer."

The post of the Additional Legal Remembrancer is a temporary one. It was created on 1st February, 1916, for one year, at Rs. 2,500 a month, to cope with a large number of political cases cropping up at that time in connection with political détenus and suspects.

As the Bengal Government have not the power to continue a temporary post for more than two years and as they have not the power to increase the pay of a temporary post for more than the sum of Rs. 2,500, naturally they went up to the Government of India and to the Secretary of State for, probably, permanent sanction of the post. As the matter now appears to stand, I conclude that both the Government of India and the Secretary of State have declined to make the post permanent, and only have allowed its continuance for a year more from 1st February, 1921, at Rs. 2,900, the date on which the last sanction elapsed—more, as I take it, as a matter of form and evidently as they were not convinced of the necessity of making it permanent.

In the meanwhile, as we all know, the release of the détenus, etc., on a general amnesty by His Majesty the King-Emperor took place. The altered policy of Government following that gracious order has led to the removal of any congestion of work, so much so, that this temporary special officer is now being employed for ordinary criminal cases, as admitted by the Member in charge of Judicial Department in reply to my question on 28th February, 1921. I find he is now being employed, evidently for want of any legitimate work for which he was originally appointed in 1916—in cases of the Excise Department in mufassal District Courts and some commercial cases. On the other hand, we find a sum of Rs. 1,20,000 is provided under the sub-head "Fees to Pleaders"—page 60 of the Budget—an item under which all the expenses incurred for these ordinary criminal cases should be met.

Then, Sir, from the information kindly supplied to me I find that the total number of criminal cases dealt with by the Legal Remembrancer was, in 1913-14, 2,067; in 1914-15, 2,163; in 1915-1916, 1,850; but since the creation of the post of Additional Legal Remembrancer the number fell down to, in 1916-17, 1,402; in 1917-18, 1,600; in 1918-19, 1,288, and in 1919-20, 1,294.

From another statement supplied to me, I find that the Additional Legal Remembrancer dealt with in 1916-17, 20 political cases and 21 non-political cases; in 1917-18, 41 political cases and 31 non-political cases; in 1918-19, 45 political cases and 31 non-political cases; in 1919-20, 12 political cases and 48 non-political cases and in 1920-21, 7 political cases and 67 non-political cases.

From a study of these figures it becomes quite clear that we have to maintain a costly post with its attendant establishment, etc., for no adequate work done. Certainly it cannot be contended that 7+67 or 74 cases a year will justify the expenditure of Rs. 84,600 a year or nearly Rs. 60,000 if fees to pleaders be excluded. I have been supplied with a list which shows that we are asked to provide for—

	Rs.
Additional Legal Remembrancer ...	33,600
Establishment ...	12,500
Hill journey allowance ...	300
Charges for conducting law suits ...	3,500
Fees to pleaders ...	25,000
Postage and telephone charges ...	200
Books ...	2,000
Rents, rates and taxes ...	3,000
Office expenses and miscellaneous ...	2,000
Total ...	84,600

By dividing Rs. 84,600 by 74, we find that we have to spend on an average Rs. 1,143 per case.

After what I have pointed out I need hardly say anything more in favour of my motion.

I of course understand and appreciate the difficulty of the authorities who made the appointment. Possibly they did not foresee the effect of the sudden disappearance of the political cases under Royal Clemency and probably made the appointment on the understanding of a permanent basis. It is also not unnatural that the present incumbent accepted the temporary post on some such understanding. But circumstanced as we are, we are compelled by the financial exigencies to disregard all such delicate and personal considerations. We cannot afford in the present stringent condition of our finances to disregard any practical proposal for securing economy, and I believe my colleagues will agree with me that this is an item in the Budget to which the pruning knife may be safely applied.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: It is in the fitness of things that the motion has come from a doctor instead of from a lawyer or a political leader. We are told that since the Reforms people are contented; then why this post? These two cannot go together. If it is true that the Reforms have brought peace to the country, then this post should be abolished.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: After what has fallen from the mover, I do not think I can add anything useful. So I just support the resolution.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: The mover of the resolution is wrong in thinking that this post was created only to deal with political cases. I will just state to the House the objects which the Government had in view in creating this appointment. The Additional Legal Remembrancer is to be in charge of political cases from start to finish, but no prosecutions are to be undertaken without the sanction of Government. He is to take charge of cases of organized crime and commercial fraud of an intricate nature made over to him by the Criminal Investigation Department, to take charge of such intricate Excise prosecutions as might be made over to him by the Collector of Calcutta or the Commissioner of Excise, Bengal, and to take charge of all cases made over to him by the district authorities, of an intricate nature. It is a mistake to suppose, and I suppose the mistake arises from the fact that the officer is called the Additional Legal Remembrancer, that so far as the duties of the office are concerned, they are the same as those of the Legal Remembrancer. The Legal Remembrancer's duties are principally of an administrative and advisory character. His opinion is sought by the different heads of departments in matters of law. He does not take charge of any prosecution whatever. He engages in proper cases vakils and barristers and lawyers generally, but he never takes charge of the conduct of any prosecution. He has got enough to do of his own in advising the Government and in generally looking after the administrative aspect of the legal business of the Government. The idea at the time the post of Additional Legal Remembrancer was created was that he should be an officer something like the Director of Public Prosecutions in England. The members of the House are aware that that is an important office and the Director of Public Prosecutions discharges very responsible duties. In this country the prosecuting agencies are mainly Police Inspectors and we also have Public Prosecutors who are pleaders. In ordinary police prosecutions they are quite competent to conduct the cases without difficulty, but in difficult and important cases, it must be said, without doing any injustice to police officers, that they are not able to deal with those cases properly. We have had sometimes cases of a very intricate and difficult nature which, from the very inception, required the supervision of a lawyer of considerable experience to guide the police in the investigation and prosecution. The ordinary machinery for conducting prosecutions was found insufficient not only in political cases but also in other cases of importance such as cases of commercial fraud. There are sometimes excise prosecutions also of a very difficult nature. In these cases it was found absolutely necessary that there should be a lawyer to help the police in conducting the investigations and in preparing the case. The post was really created in the interests of economy. Some of the more important and difficult prosecutions used to cost a considerable amount of money to the Government in their initial stage, e.g., the Gopalpur dacoity case. In that case a barrister had to be engaged from Calcutta during the stage of investigation in order to advise the prosecuting police, and his fees amounted in that case to more than Rs. 3,000. The case, as it happened, never went to the court at all. Then in the Alipur bomb case, one distinguished barrister of the High Court had to be engaged in order to advise Government from time to time. What do you think his fees amounted to? They amounted to Rs. 39,630. In addition to the barrister, solicitors had to be engaged in order to prepare his brief and to instruct him. Their fees amounted to Rs. 36,170. I will give another case— the Barisal conspiracy case. A solicitor had to be engaged for the work in the lower courts and his fees amounted to Rs. 28,927. In the Alipur bomb case the bill of the solicitor amounted to Rs. 92,952. It was expected that, if we had an officer, an experienced barrister competent to take charge of these cases at the very inception, then a great saving of public money would be effected. Not only the interests of economy required that such an office should be created, but it was also thought advisable that in important and difficult cases the police should not be left without proper legal assistance. What would be the result without such assistance? There would be a number of futile prosecutions, which, in the interests of the public, cannot be good for the country. The post was created as an experimental measure, and it was found by experience that during the time it has been in existence there has been a considerable saving of money to the Government. That is why the post has been retained, but Government has not finally decided whether they will make it permanent. The matter is still under the consideration of Government. The post has been sanctioned for another year. If during the course of the year we find sufficient reasons for thinking that the post will no longer be required, we shall be prepared, as I said in answer to a question put by Mr. Dutt, to drop the appointment. But at present it would not be advisable to abolish the post.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: I have heard what has fallen from the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim and I do not find any justification for withdrawing my motion.

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): May I supplement the remarks of the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim by a few words in support of an arrangement which tends to ensure the efficient conduct of public prosecutions and, more particularly, prosecutions instituted at the instance of the Police. As Sir Abd-ur-Rahim has stated, the fallacy underlying the speech of the mover is that of thinking that this appointment was created solely for the supervision of political cases. His argument is that, since political cases have for the moment disappeared, the appointment should disappear along with them. The appointment, however, is justified by wider considerations. It is true that certain defects were emphasized a few years ago in a few political cases which attracted much attention, but those defects existed quite independently of any particular cases. In the absence of legal advice and superintendence in important cases investigated by police officers, who, naturally, are not posted in all the technicalities of the law, it was found, and will be found, that sometimes cases are instituted when they should not be instituted, and at other times, in the institution of cases, technical defects and omissions are made at the earlier stages, as a result of which the proceedings eventually break down and justice is frustrated. It is that defect which we have been trying to remedy.

Another error, into which the mover fell, was in giving the Council to understand that, as the Government of India had only sanctioned this appointment temporarily, they were not convinced of the necessity of this post. But the reason for this temporary sanction was far otherwise. For some time past, the Government of India, who were as much impressed as we with the flaws in our arrangements by which our cases so often failed on technical points, have been urging us to create a post on a far wider scale than this, a post more akin to that of the Director of Public Prosecutions at home. The post of the Director of Public Prosecutions in England is a very important one. It is held by distinguished lawyers who have very extensive and wide powers. The Director has an expensive establishment under him, and he has authority to interfere directly in prosecutions of specified kinds. The Government of India have been urging us for some time past to create an expensive and far-reaching appointment of this kind. We, on the other hand, have been rather diffident as to whether an arrangement which may work successfully in a small country like England, where means of communication are excellent, would work equally well in a vast province like Bengal, where it is impossible to maintain the personal touch which is feasible in England. That is why the Government of India maintained this appointment on a temporary basis only.

The Ayes being 62 and Noes 33, the motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT called on Maulvi Muhammad Abdul Jubbar Pallowan to move his amendment, but, as he was absent, the motion was deemed to have been withdrawn.

It was as follows: "That the demand for hill and Dacca allowances and hill journey charges in account No. 24 B be refused."

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I am afraid there is some mistake in the wording of my motion, as account No. 24 B does not relate to Dacca allowances.

The PRESIDENT: Permission is given to you to amend your motion.

The motion was then moved in the following form: "That the demand for hill allowances and hill journey charges in account No. 24 B be refused."

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: It appears from the Civil Estimates that the amount is very small—the amount is Rs. 600. I have just now been told by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr that the appointment of the Additional Legal Remembrancer will be dispensed with from the 1st April next, and so the allotment of Rs. 600 will be reduced to only Rs. 300 for the Legal Remembrancer, Mr. Gupta. So I move that this amount of Rs. 300 be not allotted. The Judges of the High Court do not go to the hills and still they carry on their work satisfactorily, and I don't think it is necessary for the Legal Remembrancer to go to the hills.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: In connection with this amendment I would like to explain our general position, which is equally relevant to the amendments which were withdrawn yesterday after having raised something like a storm in a tea-cup, and to other amendments of a like nature which appear in the subsequent portions of the agenda, to the extent that they have a bearing on the whole question of the exodus to the hills. Now I do not wish to recapitulate the arguments which I only recently detailed at length on the general question, and would start from the position where I left it, though I must advert to the vehement attack made in connection with a previous amendment by Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, that we are purposely flouting the Council by the retention of provisions of this kind. He cries "What is the use of discussion if this expenditure still goes on." The explanation is surely simple: our last discussion took place in February, while the Budget was prepared in December on the old lines. The actual expenditure under this head would, of course, be affected by any change in the procedure relating to the exodus to the hills which may be adopted by Government as a consequence of that debate.

Well, as I explained the other day, and was admitted yesterday by Babu Surendra Nath Ray, we start from the position that the Governor must go to the hills, although the Secretariat, as such, will not. But the Governor must have a free hand in keeping in touch with his Government, which will mean that in the course of the hot weather Members, Ministers, Secretaries and some of the Heads of Departments will, on occasion, go to the hills. We propose that the stay of Government will be for a shorter period than has hitherto been the case, while the office, as such, will not move, but the exact duration of such visits cannot be defined now. In so far as these officers do go to the hills it may be necessary that, for the period of their stay, a small clerical staff, such as personal shorthand writers and a few clerks to look after the receipt and despatch of letters, etc., should go too, while in the case of the Chief Secretary, it will be necessary that he should have a clerk or two to get out orders which may be of absolute urgency. For these reasons the small provisions which appear in connection with different departments in respect of expenditure on clerical establishments going to the hills will remain, though in a minor degree. Until we have had one year's experience of the working of the system in this new form it is very difficult to fix an exact figure, and, as I have said, the figures in the Budget are based on the old system which is all we had before us when we prepared the Budget. But the provisions will not be worked up to, and I put it to the Council that, rather than excise them altogether, it is simpler to reduce them in conformity with the discussion of February and the assurance which was then given by Government. On a rough estimate I should imagine that we might safely be able to reduce the different provisions for Heads of Departments by about two-thirds. If the member who moved this resolution cares to accept a compromise on these lines, no objection will be raised by Government. I do not intend to repeat these arguments in connection with each of the other similar motions: the argument is general, and my proposal to the Council is that they should be content to reduce these different provisions by two-thirds.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I accept the compromise.

The original motion was then amended as follows: "That the demand for hill allowances and hill journey charges in account No. 24 B be reduced by two-thirds."

The amended motion was then put and agreed to.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY moved "that the demand for Rs. 24,000 for amalgamating the offices of the Administrator-General and Official Trustee be refused."

With reference to this resolution I think I ought to state at the outset that I had a talk with the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim, and he has given me the assurance that, before any portion of this amount is granted—that was my suggestion also—he would appoint a committee to examine the working of the offices of the Administrator-General and Official Trustee to see what organisation is necessary, what appointments are necessary and he also promised to me—at least so far as I understood him—

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: What I said was that the matter would be examined by the Ministerial Officers' Salaries Committee and not by a particular Committee to be appointed for this purpose.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: By the same Committee which is now sitting, consisting of Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur, Mr. McAlpin and Mr. S. N. Roy?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: I do not know the names of the members, but the name of the Committee is the Ministerial Officers' Salaries Committee.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: If that Committee examines these two offices, and then reports that this amount is necessary for the amalgamation of offices of the Administrator-General and Official Trustee; I have no objection to the grant.

The PRESIDENT: I cannot allow you to attach any conditions. You will either have to withdraw your motion or go on with it.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: It is not merely for amalgamating these two offices, but for considering the question of the organisation and the salary of some of the ministerial officers and some other appointments that the Committee has been appointed. The question has not been finally decided, and it will be investigated by the Salaries Committee, and that is the assurance that I can give the hon'ble member.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: On the assurance given by the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim I withdraw the motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED moved "that the demand for Rs. 1,33,000 for addition to the cadre of the Provincial Judicial Service be refused."

It is an ordinary principle of economy that, when a man is hard up, he does not indulge in the luxury of employing more servants than he can afford. We have been confronted with a deficit of more than Rs. 2 crores and a half, and the proposal is that we are going to spend Rs. 1,30,000 for employing more judicial officers for dispensing justice. Is it not better to defer the employment of more judicial officers at a time when we are confronted with a deficit? We should consider how to reduce our expenditure and put our house in order. We are to consider how to find ways and means, by which we can meet the deficit. Therefore my proposal is that this is not the time when we are to spend Rs. 1,33,000 for employing more judicial officers. I beg to submit that the number of officers we have already got for dispensing justice is sufficient for the time being, and litigation has not increased to such an extent all over Bengal as to necessitate the employment of more officers than there are at the present moment. We can do without them for one or two years more, when our income will be sufficient to meet the expenditure. I think that the officers, who are already employed, if they do their work efficiently, if they do not give more postponements, if they do not strike off cases on flimsy grounds, and if the officers are wholly employed in their business as they ought to be, then they would be quite sufficient to cope with the judicial work which they have in their hands. Therefore my motion before the House is that this is not the time when we are to spend Rs. 1,33,000, especially when we are confronted with a deficit. Therefore I move this motion and I hope the House will accept it.

The PRESIDENT: Item No. 49, which stands next, is identical with the motion that has just been moved. I therefore call upon Shah Syed Emdadul Haq to move the amendment standing in his name.

SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ delivered his speech in Bengali in support of his motion, which was as follows:—"That the demand for Rs. 1,33,000 for the addition to the cadre of the Provincial Judicial Service be reduced to Rs. 50,000."

Mr. S. R. DAS: About half an hour ago—perhaps a little earlier—I received a written communication from 35 members of this Council, which has been circulated to other members, I believe, stating that they had made up their minds to vote solemnly in favour of the motion without giving the slightest opportunity to those who may be against that motion to express their views on the subject. If work is to be done in this Council in that manner, then it is impossible for us to justify our existence. It is extremely surprising that a motion like this should be supported by 35 members, all of whom have made up their minds to vote solemnly in favour of it, whether they have reasons for this motion or not. They are not even prepared to remain inside the Council Chamber to hear the other speakers, but they are prepared to vote for it. I should have thought that this was a subject on which there could be no difference of opinion. We all know that in the Judicial Service Subordinate Judges and Munsifs have extremely hard work. At least from the little experience I have got of them I have found them working from 10 o'clock to 7 in the evening, and sometimes later, and surely a grant for the purpose of relieving them—and after all they are our own countrymen—and adding to their cadre, should, I think be welcomed by all the members of this Council.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I have heard Mr. S. R. Das on the subject of the notice that has been circulated to some of us—I believe to the non-official members. I also received a copy of that notice just before I entered the Council. But I must say this: although I do not bind myself to vote according to the direction contained in that notice, it is an outcome of the discussion of Mr. Das himself at an informal meeting held the other day, where I insisted that not only a few non-official members, but all the other members should be invited, and those who cared to come should be permitted to come and discuss which items they should support and which items they should oppose. Therefore, I think I must say that, although I do not associate myself with the notice that has been circulated, I consider it fair to mention that it was one of the suggestions of Mr. S. R. Das.

Now, I desire to make one or two observations on the merits of this motion. I find that this motion is made with a view to cutting out the provision of Rs. 1,33,000. The facts which have been placed before the House, I regret to say, do not convince me that we would not be justified in omitting this item altogether. What are the facts? I think that it is a great pity that the House seems to be divided, as Jumna and Ganga are divided near Allahabad. Why should it be so? The Budget is placed in our hands for eight days only. We are not omniscient that we should know all the details of it. I understand that there are 68 Munsifs now toiling and drudging as officiating in the Judicial Service, and am I to understand that these men shall to the end of their life toil as officiating Munsifs or officiating Subordinate Judges without being confirmed and without being allowed to enjoy the graded pay and the leave allowance which all other Munsifs and Subordinate Judges are entitled to enjoy?

It was found after a careful enquiry by Government that the people do not get speedy justice, that justice is delayed, that cases are indefinitely delayed, and they found that additional hands were required in order to expedite the administration of justice. In this matter these officers are not imported from England but our own countrymen, and they have been toiling for over four years without being confirmed. Am I to understand that my friends, the movers of the resolutions, do seriously think that these officers should be thrown out of their appointments altogether, and the administration of justice still further delayed? I do not think so. I quite understand that there is a craze for economy—it is natural—and I am one of those who are bent upon cutting down expenses here and there in order to improve our depleted balance. We are struggling as it were—a drowning man catches at a straw—and in the present state of our finances we must try to effect some reduction in our expenditure under certain items. I do not think that the facts that have been disclosed will warrant us in making any reduction in this item. It will be directly against the interests of the people to cut down any amount from this head, and I am sure the movers will consider the question seriously before they press their motions for the acceptance of the Council.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: The only argument that has been brought forward by the Hon'ble Member in charge is that the number of cases have really so increased that an additional staff of Munsifs and Subordinate Judges is necessary for the dispensation of justice. He has said that the High Court wanted a large number of Munsifs and Subordinate Judges, but that he cut down the demand by half. Sir, I should like to point out some facts before this Council, which will show that the number of cases is not likely to increase during the coming year. First, Sir, a movement has been set on foot in this province for referring cases to non-official arbitration boards and not to judicial courts. I do think that this movement is bound to have some effect on the number of cases, at any rate. Then, Sir, it is perhaps not unknown to some members of this Council that the Union Boards, that have been established in some parts of the country, are going to be empowered to try petty cases and petty money suits to the value of Rs. 50 and less. This will take away a large number of cases from the courts of Munsifs. From a reference to the Report of the Administration of Civil Justice in the presidency of Bengal for 1919, I find that 45·5 per cent. of the suits instituted for money or moveable property were for sums of less than Rs. 50. If these are taken away, I am sure, Sir, that the number of cases will not go on increasing, as has been suggested by the Hon'ble Member. Then, Sir, from a reference to the Civil List, which was recently handed over to us, I find from the list of Subordinate Judges that two posts are remaining vacant for a long time. From the list of Munsifs we find that there are 20 posts remaining vacant, four in the first grade, two in the third grade and 14 in the fourth grade. I submit, Sir, that, if really cases have gone up, as has been suggested, what is the use of keeping these 22 posts vacant for such a long time? I submit that these 22 posts should be filled up at once before this Council is asked to vote for 20 new posts. As has been pointed out by the gentleman who moved this amendment, our financial position is very difficult, and we should think twice before we can vote for some extra posts, and no substantial case has been made out for this increase. It is the quality of work, that requires improvement and not the quantity of officers. During the last year, a large increase of pay was given to these officers and we would like them to show that they are doing good work and a larger outturn of work before we sanction these additional appointments. With these words, I beg to support the motion.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I am surprised at this motion. Whether there should be five Subordinate Judges and 20 Munsifs is a question for the High Court and the Judicial Department to decide. It is an undoubted fact that the Munsifs and Subordinate Judges are hard-worked; so hard-worked that their lot is pitiable. To relieve them a little five Subordinate Judges and 20 Munsifs have been appointed, but what grounds are there to turn these men out? It is said that a certain number of pleaders only will be appointed. We do not want any pleaders, but we are only concerned with the convenience of the public and of these judicial officers, who are overworked. It has also been suggested that the village committees will try and decide some petty cases, but I know that 75 per cent. of the people do not want these village committees to exercise judicial powers, where pleaders will not be allowed to appear under the law. Now, Sir, we have come up with motions against the best interests of the country, against the educated community, against pleaders and against the Subordinate Judges and Munsifs. What is this? It is worse than anarchy. I say this motion cannot be supported on any ground whatsoever. I know of a fact; an execution proceeding of mine has been awaiting decision for some months, because the Munsif has no time to attend to it. This is the experience of everybody. I ask those gentlemen who have brought forward these motions whether it is a fact or not. The people generally do not realize the pitiable condition of the Munsifs, and how their sheristas are overflooded with cases. We want to save money, but money is required for good government, and, if good government can be secured, money does not matter in the least.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: The only argument put forward by the learned gentlemen who proposed these amendments is economy, and on this ground they urge the House to refuse the motion for the grant of this amount. I do not understand what they mean. The other day, when the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan moved for a grant for the Forest Department, we opposed it on the ground that, if the grant was sanctioned, officers would be imported from England to increase the cadre of the Imperial Forest Service and our own countrymen would not be benefited. Now, when the government requires a grant for the appointment of our countrymen, are we to oppose them? We should not sacrifice efficiency for the sake of economy. Everyone, who is in charge of some responsible work, knows that our first duty is to see that efficiency is maintained and then to think of economy later. Some days ago we heard in this Council a complaint that there are no openings for the young men of our country, and that they are going astray for want of proper openings. I do not think that it is a consistent and justifiable policy to refuse a grant, which aims at providing our young men with appointments. I, therefore, appeal to my friends to withdraw their amendments.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: I must express my surprise at the amendment that has been just moved before the House. The Munsifs and Subordinate Judges are very deserving persons; they are extremely hardworked, and we cannot give them leave, when they need it, because the service is undermanned. I will give you some startling figures; no less than 68 Munsifs have been officiating from time to time since 1914. In 1914, six temporary Munsifs were wanted; in 1913 another three more were demanded by the High Court; six Munsifs were wanted in connection with the settlement proceedings and 21 Munsifs are wanted for leave reserve. Many Munsifs do not get leave when they want it, with the result that many of them break down in health. There is a clear necessity for increasing the cadre of Munsifs and Subordinate Judges by the creation of some additional posts. The High Court, who ought to know much more about these things than any member of this Council, have asked for 40 Munsifs and five Subordinate Judges. We are going to provide for 20 Munsifs and three Subordinate Judges. If that is not enough, we shall have to appoint more men next year. I submit that the ground of economy should not stand in the way of carrying out these necessary administrative measures, and I would protest against cutting down a demand of this nature, as it is likely to impair the efficiency of administration of justice. If any member of this Council moves amendments of this nature without seeking information he alone is responsible. One member said that litigation is not increasing. He is quite wrong.

There has been a considerable increase in litigation, and it is absolutely necessary that these additional Munsifs and Subordinate Judges should be appointed.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I want to ask a question of the Hon'ble Member in charge, viz., whether these appointments are to be permanent appointments or only temporary appointments.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: These are permanent appointments.

The following amendment proposed by Maulvi Yakuinuddin Ahmed was then put to the vote and lost: "That the demand for Rs. 1,33,000 for addition to the cadre of the Provincial Judicial Service be refused."

The following amendment of Shah Syed Emdadul Haq was then put to the vote and lost: "That the demand for Rs. 1,33,000 for the addition to the cadre of the Provincial Judicial Service be reduced to Rs. 50,000."

The PRESIDENT: The original motion has been amended by the vote of the House. I now put to the House that the demand for expenditure under the head "24—Administration of Justice," as amended by the Council, be granted.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM moved "that a sum of Rs. 40,05,000 be granted for expenditure under head '25—Jails and Convict Settlements'"

In this connection there has been a certain increase in expenditure owing to the revision of pay of the officers. So far as the motion is concerned there is no objection to sanctioning the demand for any of these items of expenditure.

As regards the hill and Dacca allowances, I do not think I should take up the time of the Council in saying anything before I hear what the movers of the amendments have got to say. The considerations in this connection will be the same as with respect to other similar items.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: With reference to this item may I ask the Member in charge whether this grant will be so spent in course of the year as to enable the Government to carry out the improvements recommended in the recently published Report of the Jails Commission.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: No, no, not at all. It is simply the expenditure according to the present arrangement, and there is no provision for any improvement recommended by the Jails Committee. Those recommendations, I may tell the Council, if they are to be carried out, will cost very considerable sums of money.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: After the assurance given by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler that the hill and Dacca allowances will be reduced by two-thirds I do not wish to move my amendment. I beg leave to withdraw it.

The following motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn :—
“ That the demand for hill and Dacca allowances and hill journey charges in account No. 25 be refused.”

The original motion of the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim was then put and agreed to.

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler) moved “ that the demand of Rs. 1,75,00,700 be voted by this Council as a grant for expenditure under the head ‘ Police ’ for the year 1921-22.” As regards the minor entry of refunds, the explanation in connection with the police is similar to that which has already been given relating to other departments.

In connection with the general question of the increase in police expenditure I spoke only the other day, and I trust it will not now be necessary to repeat in detail the line of argument which I then took. I admitted that the increase in expenditure on the police was regrettably large, but I endeavoured to show that the maintenance of a police force was an unavoidable necessity in every civilised country at the present day. Further, that, judged by the test both of theory and of experience, the strength of the police force in Bengal was not excessive. In fact it was otherwise while judged by the rates now current in the market for labour of the description which we recruit for the different grades of the police, the rates of pay which we give to our police officers at the present time were not excessive. Therefore this increase in expenditure, much as we would like to avoid it, is unfortunately, in a great measure, inevitable. I also tried to explain to the Council that in the nature of things, looking at the lines upon which the province was developing, it was inevitable that a high proportion of its revenues would have to be devoted to the maintenance of the police in an efficient state, partly by reason of the fact that enough money has not been devoted to the department in the past, and partly because conditions are altering so rapidly in various ways, rendering additions to the police imperative. More particularly is that true in the large industrial areas which are now springing up all round.

With regard to this point of the regrettable necessity of heavy expenditure on the police, I would like to give the Council some figures which I did not quote the other day, with the view of showing that far from it being the case that this Government votes the bulk of its revenues to the police, leaving the rest of the administration to scramble for the balance, we habitually do not allot to the police anything like the expenditure which we are told by the departmental heads is necessary for the department, and should be allotted if the force is to be maintained in a satisfactory state.

Now taking one head—improvement of district police buildings—which, judging from the number of amendments, is likely to come in for considerable criticism in this Council—at the moment we have in the Secretariat schemes administratively approved, schemes that have been sent up by responsible officers and examined and admitted by Government, amounting to some Rs. 80,00,000; compare that with the provision we are making for them. In connection with the Budget for next year, the Inspector-General, who knows that it is useless to ask for every thing, wished us to allot Rs. 6,13,000, but we propose to give him Rs. 2,00,000 only. We are, therefore, cutting him down in a very arbitrary way. Turning to personnel, we have at the present moment schemes, either approved or under examination by Government, for alterations and changes connected with the personnel of the district force, which will cost us Rs. 11,97,000. Against that, in this present Budget, we are proposing to make a provision of Rs. 5,83,000 only. In regard to the Calcutta police, I referred the other day to the most unsatisfactory state of buildings now occupied by them. I mentioned that owing to a lack of foresight in the past many unsatisfactory buildings were hired, and at the present moment we have to pay an annual rent bill of over Rs. 3,00,000. The position is eminently unsatisfactory. We cannot get long leases of these buildings, and when the old leases fall in, our rents are raised. It would be wise economy, even at a considerable cost, to acquire these buildings rather than keep them on this unsatisfactory system of renting. But on a rough estimate we made the other day, the cost of acquisition of the buildings now occupied by the Calcutta police worked out to the very heavy total of over a crore. We have at the moment urgent schemes pending for Rs. 16,15,000, while we are proposing in connection with our present Budget to give, as a new scheme, only the one provision for the acquisition of land for married sergeants' quarters. As regards personnel, we have schemes relating to the Calcutta police, which total Rs. 4,39,000, though in the present Budget we are proposing to give only Rs. 2,17,000. I trust, therefore, that it will be clear that, far from thrusting money into the hands of the departmental heads, we are depriving them of a large proportion of the sum which they tell us they really require.

There is another point. There seems to be an impression, which has been voiced in some quarters, that we are simply going on increasing and increasing our expenditure on the police, without ever endeavouring to effect any reductions. May I give some figures showing what we have done, in connection with the Intelligence Branch, thanks to the improved conditions which prevail in the political world. In 1919 our temporary force in the Intelligence Branch, that is, the branch on which we rely for the supervision of these matters, was costing us Rs. 3 78 000.

But last year, owing to improved conditions, it seemed possible to effect a saving, and we spent only Rs. 2,55,000. This year we hope only to spend Rs. 1,65,000, thus saving nearly another lakh, although, to be on the safe side, we are asking for a provision of Rs. 2,74,000. These are substantial economies, and show that we endeavour to curtail expenditure on the police whenever we see an opportunity of doing so.

So much for the general question. I will now only refer very briefly to the new schemes which will be found on page 59 of this grey-covered book in respect of which amendments have not been moved. It is only fair that we should let the Council know what the general nature of each is.

The first item is connected with the police force in the Chittagong Hill Tracts. This is a non-voted item, but this force is being thoroughly reorganised in accordance with the general action that is being taken to bring the administration of this district up to a higher level.

The second entry is for raising the rate of house-rent for the sergeants of the Calcutta police. These sergeants now get an allowance of Rs. 50 per month, when they are not given free quarters. This is entirely inadequate, and there have been cases in which men are actually paying out of their own pockets, though nominally entitled to free accommodation. We propose to raise the rate to Rs. 90 a month.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Is this for married or unmarried sergeants?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Both.

Then we come to the supply of furniture, etc., to the new Calcutta police hospital. This is for the furniture in the new building which is rising at the southern end of Pora Bazar, and which must obviously be furnished.

The next three items are too small to deserve notice, and the next one is the subject of an amendment.

The additional police force for the Public Vehicles Department is for the better control of Calcutta traffic, about which we are likely to hear a good deal in a short time, when the report of Mr. Beadel's committee is received.

The next is a small item—purchase of cots for the Calcutta police. We could not provide as many as Mr. Clarke wanted, and had to cut this item down.

The next four items are all concerned with various resolutions.

The next item is machines on account of the river police—Rs. 35,000. This is the direct outcome of the closure of the Government dockyard by the Government of India, a measure which has put the provincial Government to considerable inconvenience, as we used to be able to get our repair work done there. Now we shall not be able to do so, and as we have a number of launches, we are putting up a small workshop at Narayanganj in order to save the expense and delay involved in sending these boats down to Calcutta. The cost of sending these boats down would, I am told, be almost equivalent to the money spent on this machinery.

The revision of boat establishments for circle inspectors, etc., is due to the economic conditions of the present day, under which boats cannot be got at the rates previously sanctioned, and we know quite well what happens when we underpay our men. We want to be able to pay the fair market rate of the present day.

The launch Juliet is the subject of an amendment.

The last item is similar to the first, viz., in respect of the police establishments in the Chittagong Hill Tracts.

I will not detain the Council longer, except, with reference to the various amendments that are about to be moved, to ask the Council to regard the police not so much as an enemy of mankind that must be starved at all costs, but as an integral part of the provincial machinery, which it is eminently to the interests of the members of this Council, as much as to the interests of Government to maintain in an efficient state.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: May I speak a word? Maulvi Muhammad Abdul Jubbar Pahlowan is absent. I wish to move the resolution which stands in his name, if I can have the permission of the House to do so.

The PRESIDENT: I would like to ascertain the pleasure of the House in this matter. Is it the pleasure of this House that Babu Annada Charan Dutta should be allowed to move this motion in the absence of Maulvi Muhammad Abdul Jubbar Pahlowan?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I do not mind.

(Several other members nodded agreement.)

The PRESIDENT: Very well, you may move this motion.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: The motion that I have been kindly permitted to move runs thus: "That the demand for Rs. 2,57,000 for sergeants in the Calcutta Police be reduced to Rs. 2,07,000, or, in other words, a reduction of Rs. 50,000 is only being moved."

I shall be very short in pressing this motion to the acceptance of this honourable House. It will appear from page 74 of the White Book, the Civil Estimates, under the detailed accounts No. 26A, that in 1919-20, the Budget amount under this head was Rs. 1,23,330; that of 1920-21, Rs. 2,07,300, though the revised estimate shows Rs. 2,16,000; and this year we have all on a sudden the figure raised to Rs. 2,57,000, that is practically by Rs. 50,000. Indeed, the only reason which I can gather from page 33 of the other book is that this increase is due mainly to the revision of the pay of the sergeants; of course, in a very general way, constables, head constables, etc., etc. But it is very difficult to find out from these scanty details given in these two books whether, as a matter of fact, this Rs. 50,000 is meant only for an increase of pay of the sergeants or not, or whether there would be any increase in the number of sergeants. So far as I have been able to gather, the whole amount will not be necessary only for the revision of pay of these sergeants, and, if so, there is hardly any necessity for increasing the pay of these sergeants, so far as Calcutta is concerned. We are now, if I can say so, after the war in peace times. If, during the war a certain number of sergeants could do the work, is there any necessity in these times that their number should be increased? Well, if this is so, I think the House should not grant this amount of Rs. 50,000.

Then, again, if it is only due to some increase of pay granted to these sergeants, I, for myself, do not know on what scale that has been fixed, whether there also the question of practical non-voted items comes in, but, as it has been shown as a voted one, and a motion allowed, I for myself, cannot see why so much increase should be granted, and, if any increase should be granted at all, it should be done within the amount of Rs. 2,07,000, which still remains after deducting Rs. 50,000.

With these few words, I beg to commend this motion for the acceptance of this House.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I shall try to give the hon'ble members the information he wants as shortly as possible. The European sergeants in the Calcutta police are a small body of some 152 men. They are an essential part of the police administration in a large city of this kind, and in connection with goondaism, to which I referred briefly the other day, one of the requests recently put before me by the Marwari Association was that we should have more European sergeants in Burra Bazar. This very small force in 1919 was paid at the rate of Rs. 125, rising to Rs. 175. That rate was fixed in 1919 and has since been found to be hopelessly insufficient. As the Council is doubtless aware, the pay of the British soldier has been considerably improved during and since the war, and we cannot, on this pay, attract the class of man we want, men of a steady sober type, preferably married men, who have given up the army, and are willing to settle down in India and do good work in the Police Department. That type cannot be procured on the present rate of pay, and in August last year, Mr. Clarke wrote and informed us that he had had to discharge 23 men for unsatisfactory work, while he had 23 vacancies which he could not fill. For this reason, in October last, we raised the pay from Rs. 125 rising to Rs. 175, to Rs. 150 rising to Rs. 200, and it is on account of that enhancement of pay, that there is this extra provision in the Budget.

The men are actually being paid at this rate now, and if this provision disappears, we shall have to put them back to the old rate of pay, with what consequences the Council may well imagine. As a matter of fact, within the last fortnight, we have had a further request from the Commissioner of Police asking us to put the pay up still higher, as he is finding it very difficult, even at this rate, to get the men he wants.

I urge therefore, that the provision is thoroughly justified and should stand.

The motion was put to the Council and lost.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: With reference to this resolution, there is another motion in the name of Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur. It would be better if you could see your way to ask him to move his resolution first.

The PRESIDENT: Nos. 56, 57 and 58 are all three alike. I call upon Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur to move No. 58.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I would have been in a better position if my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, had moved his motion with his usual eloquence and mastery of facts. However, as he has asked that this task should devolve upon me, I bear him no grudge.

At the outset I desire to say that I have no antipathy, against the Calcutta Police service as a whole. As a law-abiding citizen and one who has some stake in the country, I am naturally anxious that the police force should be maintained at its proper strength to ensure the security of the life and property of the people. Sir Henry Wheeler, on the last occasion, if I remember him aright, said that this was a subject upon which boys should be encouraged to write a thesis, because it was so much talked, and written about. What is the reason for people constantly opposing any proposal for increased expenditure on the police for its improvement? In the first place, I see that the people are divorced from the Government. Looking at the figures, you will find that three years ago, or rather two years ago—we are in the second year now—the cost of the police administration of the whole province was Rs. 1,43,00,000. This year's estimates are a little over Rs. 1,90,00,000, roughly speaking, this is an increase of about Rs. 50,00,000 within three years, and naturally, people are inquisitive and are rather prone to criticise this inordinate increase of expenditure, and, unless they are satisfied and taken into the confidence of Government, I am afraid this sort of criticism will go on from year to year.

Well, turning to my motion, I wish to draw attention to some particular facts. The total expenditure proposed on account of the presidency police for 1921-22 is Rs. 36,37,000, of which only Rs. 96,000 is indicated as non-voted. For the year 1919-20 the figure is fixed at

Rs. 23,26,000. A tremendous stride seems to have been taken in the matter of the expenditure on the presidency police in the space of three years, a stride from Rs. 23,00,000 to Rs. 36,00,000, or an advance of Rs. 13,00,000!

Coming to further facts, I find that a provision of Rs. 1,50,000 is made in the Budget, and a demand is made for the revision of the higher subordinate executive staff of the Calcutta police. No explanation is given in the Budget of what this higher subordinate executive staff means. Some facts, however, may be gleaned from the Police Administration Report of the town of Calcutta and its suburbs for the year 1919. The total numerical strength of the executive staff of the Calcutta police is indicated as follows:—

Commissioner	1
Deputy Commissioners	6
Assistant Commissioners	10
Inspectors	37
Sub-Inspectors	117

Which of these officers may be designated as belonging to the higher subordinate executive staff? Do all the officers under the Commissioner of Police fall under this category? According to the latest information I have obtained, I am informed that the subordinate higher executive is included in these two items, 37 inspectors and 117 sub-inspectors, total 154 men. Assuming that the higher subordinate executive staff consists of 160 men, to provide Rs. 1,50,000 for the revision of their pay and prospects, is to allow an increase of about Rs. 1,000 per head, or perhaps a little less. In other words, an increment of about Rs. 80 to Rs. 85 per month is allowed for each of these officers. I do not know whether this is a recurring expenditure, or whether this is an increase of pay or not, but at the same time, I may say, that, while I do not grudge a reasonable increment to these officers—it may improve the morale of the service—I may say that, if the public were taken into confidence, they would urge the strengthening of the lower rungs of the ladder more than the strengthening, the fattening of the higher rungs. As a citizen of Calcutta I may inform the Government that the city of Calcutta is not as well policed as it ought to be, and what is the reason? The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler will remember, I believe, that I was one of those who were associated,—in fact I was asked to accompany a number of leading residents and citizens of Calcutta belonging both to Marwari and Bengali communities,—to represent to Government the insecurity of life and property due to the inadequacy of the staff of constables in this city. In our interview with the Commissioner of Police (Mr. Roddis, I believe) I was told that the total shortage of constables was 300 to 400, and now, almost every day of my life I am approached by my friends and neighbours who ask me to represent to Government that there is practically no police to protect them if there is any dacoity or organised crime in the northern part of the city.

Now, it will be clear from my observations that I am not opposed to the police; I am their friend, in that I want the force strengthened. What steps have been taken to strengthen the lower rungs of the ladder? So far as I know, no attempt has been made to strengthen the bottom, all the strengthening is at the top! with the result that no one living in the north of Dharamtala can do so in peace and security. I think, therefore that, if the Government had taken the people into their confidence they would have received good advice, and not unending carping criticisms; they would have got real co-operation from the people. I speak on behalf of the people; I am afraid that in this respect the Government have failed, and that is why there is opposition in and out of season.

Sir Henry Wheeler has placed before the House some estimates prepared by the departmental heads of the police. I regret with him that there was a want of far-sightedness on the part of the executive, either Government or the police; I quite agree that house rent has increased to such an extent that the provision of house rent has had to be increased accordingly, and Government has also been put to considerable trouble in securing leases of premises for the location of their thanas. As regards the acquisition of buildings and lands for police purposes, I am sure there would be no difficulty if Government had taken the public into confidence. As soon as owners come to know that the land or buildings are required for police purposes, prices go up at once. I know that the demand of the executive is very much exaggerated. I have not examined the figures, nor the estimates or plans myself, but from my experience as a municipal commissioner, I may say that when our officers, highly paid officers, prepare plans they prepare them on a considerably more expensive scale than if they had to prepare them for their own houses and pay for them out of their own pockets. If they want the public to build houses for them, they want palaces, and therefore, generally speaking, these amounts are susceptible of considerable improvement and reduction. If the Government will associate themselves with the people, they will find that a considerable reduction will be effected in the police charges without impairing efficiency in any way.

With regard to this item, I think it is a recurring charge; it ought not to be allowed, but it can be examined by the Standing Committee appointed by the Council, and I am sure we will not be unreasonable and will grant the necessary sum. The Standing Committee has sufficient authority to restore such sum as may be deemed necessary in consultation with the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I should like to speak, if at all, after I hear the reply of the Government Member, because I have nothing to add to the speech of the Rai Bahadur.

The PRESIDENT: I think you must speak before the Government Member has spoken by way of reply.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: Of course, with due deference to the ruling from the chair I only ask for some information, and nothing else.

The PRESIDENT: Do you want to speak?

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: Yes, as I had not the opportunity—my speech will be something like the beautiful performance of one groping in the dark.

Complaints after complaints have been made that practically we have no information or details about these big amounts, which are being demanded from us. Well, if I cannot properly understand what officials are being included in the subordinate executive staff, that requires a greater enquiry on our part to find out later on. As I now understand that these people are poor sub-inspectors and inspectors, who are receiving less pay than even what you have granted to the police sergeants, though these people are called upon to discharge much more onerous duties, I feel almost inclined to withdraw my motion and support the demand—that is by way of contrast—and before I get any further information I do not like to add one word more.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: We have heard many speeches on these motions as well as the most friendly speech of the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, who was friendly from the beginning. I shall try to reply as far as practicable. I do not say that my ground for opposing these motions is that there is a strong feeling amongst the police officers that the amendments should not be considered; that is not my ground. My ground for opposition is this: these subordinate executive staff consists of 11 Assistant Commissioners and about 60 inspectors and sub-inspectors, most of whom are graduates of the Calcutta University, while others are M.A.'s and so on. We often allege on public platforms and in the Press that Government do not give sufficient openings to our young men befitting their education in the administration of the country, and so our young men of about 20 are going astray and joining the anarchist party. And yet, when Government offer them some appointments in the Police Department, we come forward and say that we will not increase the pay of those appointments. This is the peculiar way of action of the leaders of our country—we always try to put obstacles in the way of Government. Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur says that we are almost without any police, we are undefended, so to speak. How can you get the proper service of the police, unless you pay them adequately? Then the Rai Bahadur says that the estimates prepared by Government and the Calcutta Corporation are always bad. With due deference to the Rai Bahadur,

I may say that personally I have some experience of municipal administration, being a commissioner of the Howrah Municipality, and I say that, if these estimates are bad, it is the leaders who are responsible for it.

We are passing through hard times, and the cost of living has gone up considerably; and the pay of all the higher services has been increased; the pay of the Indian Civil Service, the Subordinate Judges, Munsifs, Deputy Magistrates; and the pay of the Sub-Deputy Magistrates is going to be increased; Rs. 75,000 has been provided in the Budget for the improvement of the pay of the Sub-Registrars; the pay of the constables and head constables of the Calcutta police has been increased; the pay of domestic servants has been increased; and last but not the least, the pay of even the sweepers of the Calcutta Corporation has been increased. Is the case of these police inspectors so weak as not to deserve any consideration from us? They have all got a social status; they have to live respectably; they have got to educate their children and marry their daughters; and if Government want to pay them anything, I don't think we should stand in the way.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I am only too anxious in connection with these amendments to give the Council all the information relative to them that I can.

Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur has made some general remarks on the subject of the police, and with reference to them I do not wish to repeat what I have already recently said on two occasions. His general complaint is that the cost of the Presidency police has risen, and his second major suggestion is that, instead of squandering money on the higher paid posts, we should, first of all, tackle the case of some of the humbler members of the force. I admit that it is perfectly true that the cost of the Presidency police has risen, and on comparing the figures for 1919-20 and 1920-21 with those of 1921-22, we find that the total increase amounts to about Rs. 13 lakhs. But, if the member will examine the figures, he will find that out of that total increase of Rs. 13 lakhs, roughly about Rs. 10 lakhs is on account of the improvement of the pay of the subordinate members of the force—the very point which he has been arguing before us.

The facts are these with regard to the history of recent times. In March last, the Commissioner of Police pressed upon us the urgent need of the improvement of pay, practically throughout the ranks of the Calcutta police, from Assistant Commissioners down to constables. We examined the matter then and we decided to deal first with the lower ranks, and we then made proposals which covered the case of constables, head constables and sergeants. What is known as the higher subordinate executive force comprises the ranks of Assistant Commissioners, inspectors and sub-inspectors, and we practically told them last year that we had no money to deal with their case then and that they must wait till next year. It was hard on them, but we had no alternative. However, this did almost amount to a promise that we would take up their case this year; and in redemption of that promise we have made this provision. The provision, as it stands, is for Rs. 1½ lakhs, but the scheme which Mr. Clarke has sent up is for roughly just under Rs. 2½ lakhs; and again we shall have to cut down this scheme in order to get it within the measure of our resources.

In outline, his proposals are these, though again I may say that these proposals may not be ultimately sanctioned in full, as we shall have to try to effect economies; but we shall not probably be able to make great retrenchments. In this connection I may mention that, at the time this case is ripe for disposal, the standing police committee to which His Excellency invited this Council to elect members, is in being, when this case will go before that standing committee. Mr. Clarke's proposals deal with the three ranks of Assistant Commissioners, inspectors and sub-inspectors. The permanent Assistant Commissioners number 11, and they are descendants of the old superintendents of police who preceded the days of the Police Commission. The old superintendents used to get a pay of Rs. 300 rising to Rs. 600, and when they became Assistant Commissioners, their maximum was cut down to Rs. 500, and they were given Rs. 400 rising to Rs. 500. In Bombay, they get Rs. 500 rising to Rs. 800, and Mr. Clarke's proposal is to put them on the footing of Bombay.

Turning to inspectors—their number is at present 39. The Commissioner's proposals with reference to them are twofold: one concerning the number and the other concerning the pay. At the present moment, in Calcutta, there are 19 investigating sections, each of which is in charge of a sub-inspector. That is a state of things which did not exist before 1906 in Calcutta, and does not exist anywhere else. It is not right that an important section of that size should be in charge of a sub-inspector. The Commissioner of Police wishes to put them in the charge of inspectors. He first asked for 31, but knowing that money was short, he has cut down the number to 14. That is one part of his proposal, and the other portion is in relation to the pay, which at present is in three grades of Rs. 200, Rs. 250 and Rs. 300, or the same as was recommended by the Police Commission 17 years ago, thus taking no account of the large enhancement of the cost of living in recent times. Mr. Clarke's proposal is to put inspectors on the Bombay level of Rs. 300 rising to Rs. 400.

Lastly, as regards sub-inspectors, Mr. Clarke hopes to make a retrenchment in their number as a set-off against the addition in the number of inspectors. But he wishes to raise their pay, which now is Rs. 125, Rs. 140, Rs. 150 and Rs. 175—rates which were sanctioned in 1905, more than 15 years ago—on the analogy of Bombay, to Rs. 150—200.

These are the proposals, and I trust that the Council will realise that they are not in themselves extravagant, although we contemplate a certain degree of retrenchment in order to bring the scheme within the provision of Rs. 1½ lakhs.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: In view of the assurance given by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler that before the scheme is given effect to, it will be placed before the Finance Committee about to be appointed, I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

The motion was as follows: "That the demand under head '26-A' for hospital charges, Presidency Police, for Rs. 55,000 be reduced by Rs. 13,000."

The PRESIDENT: Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur is unwell and asks for permission that the motion standing in his name may be moved by another member. I think that, in the special circumstances, there is no objection to such permission being given.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY moved the following motion, standing in the name of Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur: "That the demand under head '26A—Presidency Police' be reduced to Rs. 31,37,000."

He read out the following speech:—

The first Budget review stated the revised estimate of Police expenditure as Rs. 28,10,000 and the sanctioned estimate as Rs. 30,16,000 and then went on to account for the increase. I failed to understand how the increase could occur. I tried to find out the cause and learnt that the sum of Rs. 5,00,000 provided for the Alms House project was not spent, and by way of correction the second review says that the increase might have been larger but for some concessions granted to constables and sergeants. The Alms House project fell through, and the money was appropriated for other objects. This principle of freehand in spending public money is bad; and it should be discouraged by all means. Unless there be some effective control over the spending departments, the officials would be tempted to spend whatever money they could lay hands upon.

I find, there is a sum a little less than Rs. 6,00,000 in the Presidency Police Budget, page 75, for "non-contract" charges. But what these charges are has not been mentioned. No details have been given. Are these charges too well known to be given in details? Or am I to conclude that the sum of nearly Rs. 6,00,000 is an insignificant amount? This system is bad. The public have every right to know, especially when the Government is threatened with a huge deficit, for what object this big sum is going to be spent. The framer of the Budget should be prepared to satisfy the public, otherwise this head should be considered practically non-voted.

The public outside is intelligently watching and scrutinising our action in this Council. Their confidence in us in future and the nation's faith in the Reforms depend on our successful mode of handling the public money. They want to know whether the old tale of waste of public funds or the injudicious expenditure for objects unknown or almost unknown is also going to be repeated under the new régime.

However, I am told by the Hon'ble Member in charge that a sum of Rs. 5,00,000 has been proposed to be spent for the new Alms House project. If it be so, I wonder why the new scheme is going to be undertaken this year? The Alms House of Amberst Street is certainly a good building, and the locality can by no means be condemned. In answer to my question it may also be suggested that we are going to sell the site to the Improvement Trust at a sum of Rs. 3,00,000. Yet, we have to spend Rs. 2,00,000. We should not spend the amount in these days of financial stringency. I, therefore, propose to withhold our grant for the new Alms House project.

Babu FANINDRALAL DE: I realise the position of the Government. There is no denial of the fact that some of the demands, such as increase in salaries, are extremely urgent in these days of high prices and so concessions must be made in these; but there are others for reorganisation, improvements and addition, which, although important, can safely be postponed till our finances improve. Already the Police is taking the lion's share of the revenue, while Education, Sanitation, etc., are getting disproportionately less; further additions to it must be made very cautiously in the face of the deficit Budget. I believe it will be more judicious to defer fresh grants till our financial relations with the central Government be readjusted; only then we will know our position and can safely distribute our resources to the various departments.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: It may be my fault, but I confess that I found it a little difficult to grasp what the amendment of the Rai Bahadur meant. But, as far as I could make out, it is connected with this provision of Rs. 5,00,000 on account of the Alms House. That is to say, the present provision for the Presidency police is Rs. 36,37,000, and the Rai Bahadur wants to make it Rs. 31,37,000 by a reduction of Rs. 5,00,000, while I gather that his real grievance is about the Rs. 5,00,000 for the Alms House. If he wishes, we will explain the facts; but I put it to him that, as the same issue is raised in amendment No. 73, it will be simpler for him to withdraw his present amendment and to let the matter be debated on the specific amendment No. 73. If, however, he prefers to go on with his own motion, Mr. Stephenson will explain the matter.

At this stage, on Mr. Stephenson rising to speak, the Rai Bahadur expressed his desire to withdraw his motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur moved "that the demand for Rs. 2,75,000 for the revision of the rates of pay of the inspectors of the Bengal police be refused."

In this connection I just wish to say one word. During the discussion of my last motion, I was not a little amused by the speech of Babu Nitya Dhon Mukherjee, but I must say that he entirely missed my point. It was far from my intention to stand in the way of improving the pay of the police inspectors. All that I wanted was that these proposals might be postponed for a time with a view to their being considered by the Finance Committee or the Standing Committee and their specific recommendations might then come up before the Council and the Budget grant made with effect from the 1st April 1921. Perhaps my friend did not pay sufficient heed to my speech. But still I am glad that he amused us not a little by his performance.

With regard to this item I have just had a conversation with the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler and I was told that a standing committee would be appointed to consider all these police charges. The committees would go into the schemes again before Government gives effect to them. That is the point which I wanted to urge when I gave notices of my motion. But it was only announced the day before yesterday that standing committees would be appointed. I am glad to have this opportunity of eliciting the information from a Member of Government, and as that point has been made clear, I am very glad to withdraw my amendment.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Babu Surendra Nath Ray was to have moved "that the demand for hill and Dacca allowances and hill journey charges in account No. 26 be refused."

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I have already said that after the assurance given by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler that the motion will be reduced by two-thirds under the head "Hill journey allowances," I beg to withdraw the motion.

The resolution was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur moved "that the demand for Rs. 80,000 for the reorganisation of the town police in the 24-Parganas be refused."

I hope I am correct in my anticipation that this item will be examined by the Standing Committee before effect is given to it, and so I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Perhaps it is just as well that I should explain the position regarding these standing committees in order to save misunderstanding in future. As the Council is aware, His Excellency has asked them to submit names for election to the standing committees to be attached to different departments. Among the first, the Police Department is one, and to the Police Department a standing committee will be attached in due course. That committee will be consulted about schemes of major importance and all information will be placed before them. The two schemes just discussed, and the two that follow, undoubtedly come within the category of major schemes, and therefore the standing committee will be consulted about them. But I should like it to be clearly understood that we are not bound to follow implicitly what the standing committee say. We will consult them, lay all the information before them, but the ultimate decision will, of course, rest with the Executive Government.

The PRESIDENT: Are you prepared to withdraw your motion?

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I have already agreed to withdraw the motion. But I hope that the consultation with the committee will not merely be a complimentary one—of which we have had enough for the last 50 years—but that there will be a whole-hearted consultation and co-operation, which will be the very reverse of Gandhism.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Is my friend in order, Sir?

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: The motion that stands in my name is “that the demand for Rs. 45,000 for the reorganisation of the town police in the Hooghly district for six months be refused.”

For the reasons already given by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur I beg to withdraw the motion because I understand that all these matters should come before the Standing Committee.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: The motion that stands in my name is “that the demand for Rs. 20,000 for strengthening the emergency force at Asansol for six months be refused.” But I should like to withdraw this motion and in doing so, I would just point out how very reasonable and accommodating the Indian members are and how when an opportunity for co-operation occurs, they whole-heartedly co-operate.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: My next motion is “that the demand for Rs. 20,000 for the increase in the river police contingents be refused.” I beg to withdraw it.

The motion was withdrawn.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI moved “ that the demand ‘ 26—Police ’ be reduced by Rs. 5,00,000 by the omission from the Budget of the provision for payment to the District Charitable Society acquisition of land and building for the proposed new Alms House.” This is not a new matter. The proposal has been brought from time to time. There is no hurry about this matter and the market value of the land is very high at present. My object is not to reject it altogether, but that it can be done later on when we have more funds at our disposal. It is no use spending money upon the acquisition of land now. I have written to Colonel Pugh about the matter, and he says that he is ready to buy up the land, if we do not do it. I do not know if there is any improvement in the land. I think it can be done later on when the market is more favourable owing to the extension of Calcutta by the Improvement Commission. I hope, therefore, this motion will be accepted.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I wish to say a few words regarding this. As I said at the beginning, it is due to our ignorance of the figures that all these motions have been brought in. It is no fault of mine or of my friend or of anybody. I may, however, give some information to my friend as regards this item. There was an Alms House in Amherst Street. The plot of land, where it stood, has been sold as not being available. This Alms House was built in 1840 or earlier—there are very interesting records about it, which can be suitably kept in the Victoria Museum—the land was given by Government and vested in the District Charitable Society, and in the records you will find signatures of such persons as the late Prasanna Kumar Tagore, Ram Gopal Ghose, Ram Prasad Ray and others. That land has been disposed of. I think it has fetched Rs. 4,20,000 and more for the materials. Government, I believe, wants to utilise a portion of the land for locating a police station and a workhouse. So I do not think that Government is contributing very much to the District Charitable Society. In fact they are giving back what they had taken. If you omit this item then those who are accommodated there will be thrown out into the streets. Having regard to this fact, I hope my friend will withdraw his motion.

Mr. H. L. STEPHENSON: I do not think there is quite the same case for groping in the dark about this amendment, inasmuch as the old case was fully debated just a year ago in the old Council on a motion moved by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur. The actual facts are these. In 1840, a plot of about 10½ bighas of land was made over to the District Charitable Society by Government, on condition that it could be used for purposes of poor relief. The Alms House was built on it, and it was administered by the District Charitable Society. When the European Vagrancy Act was passed in 1874, after some negotiations with the Society, the European Workhouse was moved from the Presidency Jail to the same site in Amherst Street on certain conditions. Since then these two institutions—the Alms House and the Workhouse—

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Perhaps it is just as well that I should explain the position regarding these standing committees in order to save misunderstanding in future. It is no fault of mine or my friend or of anybody. I may, however, give some information to my friend as regards this item. There was an Alms House in Amherst Street. The plot of land, where it stood, has been sold as not being suitable. This Alms House was built in 1840 or earlier—there are very interesting records about it, which can be suitably kept in the Victoria Museum—the land was given by Government and vested in the District Charitable Society, and in the records you will find signatures of such persons as the late Prasanna Kumar Tagore, Ram Gopal Ghose, Rama Prasad Ray and others. That land has been disposed of. I believe it has fetched Rs. 4,20,000 and more for the materials. Government, I believe, wants to utilise a portion of the land for locating a police section and a workhouse. So I do not think that Government is contributing very much to the District Charitable Society. In fact they are giving back what they had taken. If you omit this item then those who are accommodated there will be thrown out into the streets. Having regard to this fact, I hope my friend will withdraw his motion.

Mr. H. L. STEPHENSON: I do not think there is quite the same excuse for groping in the dark about this amendment, inasmuch as the whole case was fully debated just a year ago in the old Council on a motion moved by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur. The actual facts are these. In 1840, a plot of about 10½ bighas of land was made over to the District Charitable Society by Government, on condition that it would be used for purposes of poor relief. The Alms House was built on it, and it was administered by the District Charitable Society. When the European Vagrancy Act was passed in 1874, after some negotiations with the Society, the European Workhouse was moved from the Presidency Jail to the same site in Amherst Street on certain conditions. Since then these two institutions—the Alms House and the Workhouse—have been in Amherst Street side by side. In 1915 a Committee was appointed to enquire into the future management of the Alms House. This Committee reported in 1916 that there were very strong objections to having the Alms House and the Workhouse on the same plot and under the same management. For several obvious reasons it was desirable to move the Alms House, and further that that portion of Calcutta was not a suitable place for it. It should be moved further out where land was less valuable and more space was available. The Committee therefore approached Government with a view to Government taking over this land and giving the Committee the value of the land and the buildings. The Government demurred on the ground that the Society had no clear title over the land. It was only there for certain purposes. After some bargaining, however, the Government finally made an offer which the Committee did not consider was a generous one—that we would pay them Rs. 5,00,000 and take over the land. The Society agreed to that, Rs. 5,00,000 being the estimated cost of transferring the Alms House to a more suitable site outside and erecting suitable buildings. Government propose to take over the land. They have already sold the northern half of the plot to the Improvement Trust for Rs. 2,88,000, and the Public Works Department estimate that another Rs. 20,000 or Rs. 24,000 can be realised from the materials on that land. A portion of the southern half is kept for the purpose of a new police section house, the estimated value of that portion being just under Rs. 1,00,000. That gives us something over Rs. 1,00,000, and in return for the remainder, which is something under Rs. 1,00,000, we have the existing Workhouse. I do not think that the Council will feel that Government have been in any way remiss in looking after their own interests. As we have already sold half the land to the Improvement Trust, we stand committed and therefore we cannot postpone payment for the Alms House. And unless we pay, the Alms House cannot be removed. I hope the Council, after this explanation, will pass the grant.

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to 3 p.m. on the 17th instant at the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Thursday, the 17th March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 110 nominated and elected members

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda) Order! Order! Gentlemen, it has been brought to my notice that, in spite of what I said at an earlier stage of the sittings of this Council that it was improper to canvass inside the Council Chamber the same practice was repeated yesterday. As I have said, it is improper to do so, and it is still more objectionable, when done in a way calculated to disturb the other members of the Council. I should like to say that, if this occurs again, I shall have to take such notice of the matter as I think fit in order to maintain discipline in the Council Chamber.

Voting of Grants.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED moved "that the demand under head '26 Police' be reduced by Rs. 23,32,700, the excess over the original Budget figure of 1920-21."

I think having regard to the income and demands on the provincial revenue the police ought to be satisfied with what was budgeted for in the year 1920-21. I am alive to the fact that since then some increments have been sanctioned and some of these are most reasonable and proper, but I think that they ought to provide by curtailing from other heads and by abolishing some posts in the upper ranks. The posts of the Deputy Inspectors-General and Deputy Superintendents may safely be abolished. Union Committees are being formed all over the province and they will afford much relief to the police. The Bengal Alluvial Act has been passed and char areas, which engaged much attention of the riparian police, will cease to give them much trouble. So the number of police officers may be reduced. The causes for which increments have been granted are general, and they have equally affected the Government servants as well as the public at large. People of moderate and fixed incomes have had to curtail their expenses, and have to suffer for the dearness of the necessities of life, and there is no reason why the Government servants should not suffer the same inconveniences as the public. Moreover, in allowing increments on grounds of hardship, it should be taken into consideration what portion of an officer's salary is actually spent in meeting the barest necessities of life, and increment should bear a proportion to that portion of the salary only. A gentleman has remarked that Municipal sweepers have been allowed an increment of 25 to 30 per cent. Are the Sub-Inspectors and Inspectors lower than the sweepers that they should not get the same increment? I confess I could not follow the logic there. The former salaries of the sweepers were scarcely sufficient to keep them body and soul together, and under the present state of things they are far below what is required. So they highly deserved increment and in a higher ratio. In case of officers of higher rank I think they do not spend more than half their salaries for necessaries of life even according to their own standard of living, and the balance they expend in luxuries or lay by for the future. Can they claim increment at the cost of taxpayers, whose income has not increased but have to share the burden of higher cost of living. I want a curtailment on another very important ground. The extremists from the very beginning are crying down the Reform Scheme and they are impressing on the people that Reforms without giving any real power to the people have become a potent means of grinding their bones with the help of their own brethren. Government has gagged some of the leaders by offering high salaries and others by allowing seats in the Council without allowing adequate powers in controlling the affairs of the country. The non-co-operators are crying out from the house-tops that the Reforms have brought nothing but miseries in the shape of increased expenditure and consequent unbearable taxes. What has been taking place for the last few weeks in the Councils and the Assembly are corroborating their statements. Although Mr. Kerr has steered clear of Scylla and Charybdis, Mr. Hailey is not equally fortunate. He, by suggesting increased rates of postage and import duties on some of the barest necessities of life, has made the Reforms felt by the humblest dwellers of the cottages. He has placed a very powerful lever in the hands of the non-co-operators. The people at large are keenly watching the proceedings of the Council, and in every defeat of the non-officials they see a clear indication of the future fate of the country under the Reforms. I do not mean thereby that non-officials should succeed in every thing, but I hope and trust that officials instead of presenting a bold front to non-official demands should make concessions. In moving for reduction of the grant I do not intend to minimise the importance of the department, but on the contrary I am fully aware that on their good work depends the safety of the person and property of the people, but at the same time I am convinced that the rate at which the expenditure is increasing requires immediate check and there is room for curtailments. I am also of opinion that economy can be effected by supplementing the stipendiary police by honorary organisations. The present police arrangement for prevention of crime is anything but satisfactory. It cannot effectively restrain the activities of the ruffians. In Calcutta, notwithstanding a properly equipped staff, the police cannot trace the goondas in their dens, though I have reason to believe these are known to many non-official gentlemen of the town. They do not render any help to the police in the task, as the police never approach them in a spirit essentially necessary for getting such assistance. I think it would serve an eminently useful purpose, if gentlemen both in towns and in the mufassal were made interested in the maintenance of the peace of the country. Like honorary magistrates the post of honorary inspectors, sub-inspectors and constables can be created, and some functions of the ordinary police—such as watching the movements of the bad characters and suspects, the checking of rounds of constables, chaukidars and dafadars can safely be entrusted to them. They, being fully acquainted with local circumstances and having known most of the people in the locality, can discharge these duties with greater advantage. Arrangements can be made for training of these honorary workers and they may be encouraged by rewarding their good works, such as recruiting constables and assistant sub-inspectors from among them on the recommendations of the honorary inspectors. Even their presence in the mufassal will serve to check the activities of the badmashes. When properly trained they can effectively prevent rioting, murders and other grave crimes, as they are sure to get scent of the smouldering fires before they are ablaze. Preservation of honorary inspectors and sub-inspectors in the locality will serve as a check on the work of stipendiary sub-inspectors in the matters of investigation as well, for they will think twice before they do any improper things. At present the reserve police force enjoy a sort of sinecure post. Their services can be utilised in training up the honorary staff and in doing some other useful purposes, such as hunting down wild boars. As you are aware I am concerned with one of the biggest co-operative central banks in India. In 1917, when the price of jute abnormally fell, the mufassal banks could not pay interest, and I was thinking to find out some means to improve the resources of the cultivators. The increased price of sugar and molasses suggested to me that cultivators might with advantage substitute sugarcane for jute, and I accordingly sent for some members of the mufassal societies and I made proposals to them. They replied in a body that formerly they were in the habit of growing sugarcane in high lands, but now it has become an impossibility as, since the troubles over the partition agitations, almost all the guns in the mufassal have been forfeited and destroyed. The number of wild boars has risen high, and they are causing havoc to their crops and they are quite helpless. On this I wrote a long letter to the District Magistrate suggesting, among other things, that the reserve police may be engaged in batches to hunt down the wild boars' and I sent a copy of the same to the Registrar. Mr. Donovan was kind enough to make certain suggestions, but the Magistrate took no action. I think he could not do anything without the orders of the Inspector-General of Police. I think it quite reasonable that a set of officers who fatten themselves out of the public revenue should do something for the public good and protect the crops of the helpless cultivators. It will serve as well a diversion to the reserve police while doing immense good to the country. I make bold to make these suggestions in the hope that the authorities will consider the same and see their way to give them a trial. I earnestly request the official members to see if it is not possible to make some concessions in order to show it to the world, if not for anything else, that ours is not a cry in the wilderness.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: When I saw so many motions standing in the name of experienced Councillors I naturally thought that the Budget must be quite a rotten thing. But when I saw even veteran warriors of the Council merely withdrawing their motions I thought I should modify my motion. We have accused the Executive Council, the Government and the Ministers for not having a definite policy of their own. But what do I find of the members present here? None of the members seem to have a definite policy, which will enable us to steer the Reforms to a successful issue—to make the Reforms a success.

In order to make the most important departments such as self-government a success, in order to make it possible for the Council to enable the country to realise their own rights and responsibilities, it is absolutely necessary that this Council should find out means to provide for compulsory education and also for uplifting the masses by bettering the conditions of the peasantry. But the provisions which have been made in this connection are so scanty that it can well be said that no provision whatsoever has been made. The attempt which has been made by my friend Khan Bahadur Maulvi Wasimuddin Ahmed means to effect some saving at least and taking this saving along with the other savings, we should form a nucleus for doing things, which we ought to.

Looking to the Budget we find that the expenditure on police stood in the year 1919-20 at Rs. 1,43,00,000 but in the year 1920-21 it went up to Rs. 1,50,00,000, there was a difference of Rs. 6,36,000; but in the same year the revised Budget went up again, and it stood at Rs. 1,63,00,000. So the difference between the estimate of 1919-20 and that of 1920-21 was Rs. 19,29,000. Not satisfied with the great expense that we made in the year 1920-21, this time we have been called upon to give an additional grant of Rs. 27,00,000 and odd. The resolution as it stands asks for a reduction of Rs. 23,00,000 only. So here too we are giving a margin of extra Rs. 4,00,000 to the Government to spend on the various improvements it likes. Objection could be raised against this curtailment in lump from the grant, but we are to remember that this curtailment though it is in lump, leaves the discretion of the members of Government unfettered, and they will be able to apply the pruning knife to those departments where they possibly can. Further we have been told that we are going to have a committee of non-official members of the Council. This Committee along with the members of Government could undoubtedly find out the departments, from which a curtailment could be made. I must here thank the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler for telling us frankly that, though the Committee will be there, it will be of a consultative character, and any decision that the members of the committee may arrive at will not have a binding effect on the Government. So when we consider this fact, it seems that it should be our bounden duty to exercise our own rights, and we shall do so when we find that by so doing we are not going to harm the administration. We have to remember that, in case the Government find that by the reduction of Rs. 23,00,000 which this amendment proposes to make, they are not in a position to carry on the administration. The Government as well as the members of the Committee will be within their rights to place their difficulties before the Council, and as the Council does not like to fetter the work of the administration, the Council must give them the demands wherever necessary. The power of this Council and of us, the Councillors, lies in our rights, and as we have the right, I hope that the members of the Council will not hesitate to exercise this right, and leave the members of Government to point out the difficulties that they will have to face, and on looking into them we shall be able to modify our views.

With these remarks I strongly support the motion.

Rai JOCENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: Yesterday I was not quite well and therefore I left the meeting before the amendments in the police grant were discussed. I was surprised to find that everyone had been withdrawn, and then I knew that the object of the combination was simply to defeat the survey and settlement proceedings, the addition to the cadre of munsifs and deputy magistrates and the abolition of the post of Additional Legal Remembrancer, Mr. P. L. Roy. This increasing expenditure on police is a sore point with the people of this country. It is well known that the people of this country are not in great love with the police. I know very well that without the police our lives and properties are not safe. The first great recommendation of the British Government is to restore peace and order in a country which never knew them before, but the police unfortunately has become unpopular and the increasing expenditure on it is greatly disliked by the people of this country. Before an increased expenditure is sanctioned it is the bounden duty of Government to satisfy the people that without that increase peace and order cannot be restored. There was a time when anarchy was rife and one could understand that there should be an increase in the establishment. But now there is profound peace in the country notwithstanding Mahatma Gandhi and the non-co-operators. Our Government is deceived by the police; never fancy for a moment that in Bengal there should be any breach of peace or any anarchical crimes again. Why should there be this extraordinary increase in the police expenditure? You have given us some sort of representative Government. You have allowed the people to select their representatives to help you in the Government of this country. Please give them a chance and see whether they can be of any help to you in keeping the peace of the land. Now, if we, the representatives of the people, sanction this increased expenditure we shall certainly be very unpopular. We want to be in the confidence of our people, and therefore I think that this increased expenditure should not be sanctioned. Government will have to make a very strong case for it. Every year increased expenditure on the police cannot be tolerated, especially when we find that we have got no money for medical help to the poor, when we have no money to pay to the gurus and priests, when we have no money for pure, impure or any sort of drinking water in the land. This increase in the police expenditure cannot be tolerated. We shall try our best to cut down the expenditure so that we may get money for medical help, for pure drinking water and for gurus and priests. We are bound to have these things, and, if we cannot so curtail our expenditure as to get these things, I think our presence in this Council is simply superfluous. I therefore submit that this money of Rs. 23,32,700 should be struck out.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I had no mind to speak on this motion, but after the suggestion that has been made by my friend Maulvi Ekramul Haq I think I ought to support his suggestion. He has referred to what the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler said yesterday as to the appointment of a police committee to examine the details of police expenditure. It is said that if the members of the proposed standing committee be satisfied that the expenditure was necessary then they would pass it. My suggestion is that if a proper case is made out before the members of the standing committee, and if the members recommend this increased expenditure of Rs. 23,32,700, if the members say that this expenditure is necessary, then we shall pass it, provided a supplementary budget is placed before us. Why should we pass it now? It is well known that the police expenditure is increasing by leaps and bounds. For the last 8 years my friend Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq and myself have condemned the increased expenditure on the police, but nobody heard us. It was a cry in the wilderness. We were on the alert, but as our mouths were stopped on account of the anarchist movement we could not say anything. Now that there is nobody who can say that the anarchists are still flourishing in the country, we have every right to ask the Government not to increase but to reduce the grant. We find to our surprise that Government want to spend Rs. 27 lakhs more on the police this year. It has increased from 1 crore of rupees to 2 crores of rupees in the course of 7 or 8 years. I do not know what the Hon'ble Member in charge will say but my suggestion is that the matter should be placed before the standing committee; we cannot grant this amount now, but if the Member in charge can satisfy us that there is a real case for increase, let there be a supplementary budget and we shall pass it.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: At the tag-end of yesterday's Council meeting I moved certain motions in connection with the police budget with a view to its reduction. Unfortunately my motions did not receive at that time that reception, which the present motion to-day receives, when the members have come quite refreshed and quite invigorated after their last triumph, that they obtained at yesterday's meeting of the Council. I believe there is some chance of this motion receiving favourable attention at the hands of this Council. While I associate myself with the mover, I wish to dissociate myself from some of the observations that have fallen from one or two previous speakers. Sir, it has been hinted that we are all against the police. I assert, and assert most emphatically, that we are not against the police, but as I said, and pardon me, Sir, for repetition—that this steady increase in the police budget during the last 10 years has attracted so much public attention both in the press and on the platform, in the Council Chamber and outside it, that it is time, when we have got the Reformed Council, for the Government to pause not with a view to at once reduce the expenditure, but to pause with a view to consult public opinion on the subject. I do not say that to consult public opinion we should consult any irresponsible body. It has been said by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler that His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay has been pleased to direct that there should be standing committees of this House attached to every department of Government. When the country wants that the Budget should be scrutinised by the Standing Committee, and when it is possible to get a supplementary grant from this House, what is the difficulty in acceding to the request of this Council to reduce the grant as asked for, and then to come up with redoubled force when you come with a recommendation from that Committee? None knows better than the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, because we were associated with him in years past as members of the Finance Committee, how reasonable we were, and how accommodating we were when he asked for our support in the framing of the Budget, in increasing any item of expenditure and in recommending any additional allotment. I do not think, therefore, that there need be any apprehension on the part of the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, if he would accept this recommendation of the Council and for the time being consent to the omission of Rs. 23,00,000 because I am sure that, when he will lay all the facts and figures before the standing committee (I presume that the Government has not got a bad case) the committee will not be so unreasonable as not to recommend a supplementary grant. It will have a double effect—the double effect is this, that it will inspire much greater public confidence in the action and intentions of Government to work in co-operation with the people, and it will ensure the safe passing of the police budget with the figure that the department might think reasonable for the due and efficient discharge of the duties of the police?

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I did not, at first, intend to speak at all, but now I think I should say something. All along our protest against the police expenditure proved to be of no avail. It was a chronic disease for the Police department to spend more as in the case of the Education department to spend less. I hope and believe the department will now be careful about its expenditure, and without special sanction nothing will be spent. The estimate shows that there is a large increase and the demand is very exorbitant. This is not the year in which we can be so lavish. We must be very careful about our expenditure but we are prepared to keep an open mind. If we are convinced that a certain amount of expenditure is necessary we may reconsider the matter, when a fresh proposal would come before us. It is not only under the head Police that all the expenditure on the department has been shown, but under the head Public Works there is, I see, a large sum of about Rs. 10,85,000 provided for the Police department. Under the circumstances, I think, these items should be considered by the Finance Committee, which will come into existence shortly, and if there is a real necessity, on their recommendation, we will provide the sum. Without examining the thing carefully I think this Council should not be justified in sanctioning so high an estimate, specially as this is a year of deficit. With these words I support the motion, as I think we should cut down the estimate by the amount proposed.

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): This is, if I may say so, one of the most irresponsible resolutions which I have heard moved in this Council, and again if I may say so, I have seldom heard a series of more irresponsible speeches. In the course of the last two or three days it has been my fate to make several more or less lengthy speeches explaining in detail the position in the matter of police. I have reviewed the expenditure in the past and endeavoured to justify the scale on which it had been incurred. I have drawn the attention of the Council to factors in the provincial life leading to the inevitable growth of expenditure on the police, and have explained at length the detailed schemes to which attention has been drawn. I should have been quite prepared to explain at length the detailed schemes which were the subjects of some of the resolutions last night but which the movers thought fit to withdraw. We were sitting here prepared with our replies, and we were perfectly ready to give the facts and to justify our action. But many members of this Council did not even take the trouble to attend to hear those speeches. The benches were strangely empty. None of the speakers to-day has been at pains even to refer to any of the arguments which I adduced, or the figures that I gave, proving that the Police Department has been, anything, underfinanced in the past and that there was a heavy leeway to be made up in future. Not one of the speakers has to-day made any reference to any of the arguments which, in the course of the last two or three days, I have been trying to press upon the Council, but the benches to-day are crowded, and I gather from the tenor of the speeches that, say what I will, this resolution is sure to be supported. I may be pardoned for saying that I admire the adroitness of the cabal more than the wisdom which underlies it.

Let us come now to the arguments we have heard to-day. I will deal first with some of the curious arguments of the gentleman who moved this amendment. His proposal is to reduce expenditure, and what he is asking is that the expenditure should be limited to that of 1920-21, and that we should cut down the police budget by the sum of Rs. 23,00,000, that is, about one-eighth of the total we are asking this year for. This is the definite position to which he is seriously asking the vote of this Council. How does he justify it? He said: "Let us get rid of the Deputy Inspectors-General of Police." He might as well tell a General to run an army and get rid of his Colonels. He says: "Let us get rid of Deputy Superintendents," a grade created in modern times with the direct purpose of encouraging the Indian element in the force and giving it an avenue to positions of responsibility. He argues that union committees are about to reduce crime; surely let us wait and see whether they do so. The Alluvial Bill, too, is going to decrease crime, but the Alluvial Bill will be operative in restricted areas only. Again, let us wait and see the result of it. He proceeded to the amazing statement that the higher police officers of the present day can easily live on half their pay, whereas they devote the balance to luxury or savings. I only wish he were acquainted a little more with the domestic budgets of many honest officers who are now struggling in this province to maintain themselves and their families.

So much for his destructive criticism; let us see what his constructive proposals are. As far as I can understand, the position of the police force of this province is to be taken by a curious network of honorary officers. We know how popular in the past has been the appointment of special constables, and I am surprised to find it advocated on so wide a scale, but not content with special constables, we are to have special inspectors and honorary sub-inspectors.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: I did not suggest special constables to be appointed. I know they are appointed as a sort of punishment.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I fail to follow the explanation given by the mover. I refer to the extraordinary proposal for honorary inspectors and sub-inspectors who are in some curious way to supervise the investigation of crime. That is constructive proposal number one. What is the constructive proposal number two? After some breezy remarks about the cultivation of sugarcane, which is scarcely apposite to the present subject, he leads up to a proposal to turn the police force into shikaris for the destruction of wild boars, though he that is to render possible a reduction of Rs. 23,00,000 in the police budget I confess I am at a loss to see. The subsequent speakers were wiser than the mover. They confined themselves to generalities, and we hear a frank confession from Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur that the police were unpopular and that he would not make himself unpopular by voting for them. I have no doubt that the popularity of Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur is a matter of intense importance both to himself and to the gentlemen who saw fit to return him to this Council, but for my own part I prefer the preservation of peace and order in the province to the convenience of an individual member, however worthy.

Now, Sir, I do not propose to go over again the general arguments which, as I have said, I have advanced during the last two or three days. I have endeavoured to explain to this Council what the nature of the police expenditure is, and why it is required, and I can only say and say emphatically, that the police budget is not susceptible of a radical cut of Rs. 23,00,000 which is the proposition to which this Council is asked to assent. The action of various members, yesterday, in withdrawing their resolutions prevented our giving detailed explanations and now it seems to be argued that as they were kind enough to withdraw their resolutions which affected, roughly, a total of Rs. 5,70,000 therefore it is only reasonable that I should sacrifice Rs. 23,00,000. Again I confess it strikes me as a somewhat unfair proposition.

Lastly, reference has been made to the subject of the standing committee for the police. I may point out to this Council that not once yesterday, or at any other time, did I advance the appointment of the standing committee as an argument against proceeding with these resolutions. For my own part I should have preferred to answer the resolutions, but last night the movers saw fit to withdraw their resolutions preferring that the details of these schemes should be examined in committee. As I have said, I am willing to discuss these proposals in standing committee, but in order to remove possible misapprehension, I explained to the Council what the position of the standing committee is, namely, that it was never intended that no financial proposition should be brought before this Council without the imprimatur of the committee.

My reason, in brief for opposing this amendment is that it is irresponsible; it is an amendment which has not been sought to be justified by any argument relative to the facts which have been discussed in the Council during the last two or three days, and it is sought to be justified merely by a general appeal to popular prejudice on a much debated subject.

The Ayes being 51 and the Noes 42, the motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT: Mr. D. C. Ghose's amendment is a small cut and as the bigger cut has been carried it automatically fails.

The following motion was then deemed to be withdrawn: "That the demand under the head '26—Police' be reduced by Rs. 88,000."

MEMBER in charge of MARINE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr) moved "that a sum of Rs. 1,19,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '27—Ports and Pilotage.' "

The subject of Ports and Pilotage is now an Imperial subject. This is a small item covering certain odd jobs, which the Local Government had to undertake for the ports of Calcutta and Chittagong. The detail will be found at page 89 of the Civil estimates, and I don't think I need go into them at any length, as there are no motions connected with it.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler) moved "that a sum of Rs. 38,000 be granted for expenditure under head '29—Political.' "

The total demand of the vote is small, and it is very noticeably small than the actuals of the years 1917-18 and 1918-19, when the expenditure ran up to Rs. 2,50,000 due, of course, to the expenditure incurred in connexion with the persons dealt with under the Defence of India Act as Regulation III of 1918. There is a small increase under the head "Miscellaneous;" that is due in the main to the fact that we have found necessary to employ a small staff of vernacular shorthand-writers to report vernacular speeches. Apart from that, there is no distinctive feature about the grant.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter) moved "that a sum of Rs. 21,000 be granted for expenditure under head '30—Scientific Departments.' "

The figures are set out at page 92 of the Budget estimates. They include a donation to Scientific Societies, the Asiatic Society and the Barendra Research Committee at Rajshahi.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER moved "that a sum of Rs. 1,05,46,000 be granted for expenditure under head '31—Education (excluding European education).'"

I wish to explain that the grant of Rs. 2,000 under Refunds has been included with a view to obviate the unnecessary swelling of the revenue and expenditure accounts, as the Government of India have ordered that all refunds from revenue in the Civil Estimates and in the accounts must be shown as deductions from the actual collections. As, however, all revenue collected is deposited in full into the Treasury, refunds which represent the repayment of excess amount collected, are really expenditure and require the vote of this Council. The refunds are therefore included in the demand for grants.

On the revenue side, at page 17 of the Civil Estimates you will notice that receipts are growing. From Rs. 9,52,000 in 1917-18 they rose to Rs. 9,95,540 according to the accounts of 1920. The latest calculations with regard to the current financial year point to receipts amounting to Rs. 11,00,000 and this figure has been adopted as the estimate for the year in prospect. Although the figures are apparent the same yet they really represent a very fair increase in receipts, as I shall presently explain.

The Hastings House School closed on the 31st December 1920, and the course of the current financial year and before the inauguration of the Reforms, all technical and industrial schools, with the exception of the Bengal Engineering College at Sibpur and the Dacca School of Engineering, were transferred from the Education Department to the Department of Agriculture and Industries. The initiation of the Dacca University will result in the absorption of the Dacca College in the University, the receipts from all these institutions will no longer be available to us, and the estimate of Rs. 11,00,000 therefore represents a very fair increase on last year's estimate.

Now, I shall draw the attention of the Council to the expenditure side but before I do so, I desire to make a few preliminary remarks to explain why I am asking you to vote for Rs. 1,06,32,000 when the grand total for 1921-22 is Rs. 1,26,07,000. If the Members will turn to page 7 of the Budget of the Government of Bengal, the book which has a dark grey cover, they will find that the grand total is Rs. 1,26,07,000 and they will also find two heads, one for transferred subjects and one for reserve subjects. The total of the non-voted amount under the transferred head is Rs. 5,77,000, the non-voted figures in the reserved head amount to Rs. 5,42,000 and the amount in the sub-column comes to Rs. 1,63,000 making a grand total of Rs. 1,12,09,000. If we deduct Rs. 12,82,000 from Rs. 1,26,07,000 which is a grand total, we arrive at the figure of Rs. 1,13,25,000, which is the total amount before you.

If you turn to page 93 of the Civil Budget Estimates, you will find Rs. 1,13,25,000 is the exact figure which is given there as the total amount on which you will have to vote, but you may ask me how it is that I am asking you to vote only for Rs. 1,06,32,000. This is because my Hon'ble colleague Sir Henry Wheeler, will ask you to vote for the balance Rs. 6,93,000 for Europeans Education. The grand total of Rs. 1,26,07,000 therefore represents all general educational activities in the Presidency of Bengal, excepting expenditure on certain vocational institutions, such as Medical, Technical, Industrial and Agricultural education. The expenditure of Rs. 1,12,09,000 represents the total demand for a general educational activities in the Presidency of Bengal, excluding European and Anglo-Indian schools, for Indians in the excluded area and certain vocational institutions, to which I have already referred.

If you will turn to page 93 of the Civil Budget estimates, you will find the figure for which you will have to vote, namely Rs. 1,13,25,000—the non-voted amount is Rs. 12,82,000. Although you have nothing to do with the non-voted amount, still, in order to explain how the voted amount comes in, if you will refer once more to the table at page 38 of the grey book, you will find that the total of the voted amounts on the reserved side, and the total of the voted amount on the transferred side, comes to the figure Rs. 1,13,25,000 mentioned above. Therefore it is clear that you have to vote for Rs. 1,13,25,000 but out of this sum, I am concerned only with Rs. 10,60,32,000. However, I have given this explanation, because in the Civil Budget estimates the demands for European Education and Indian Education are lumped together, and the demands for education in the excluded areas, such as Darjeeling, Chittagong Hill Tracts, are also included.

After this preliminary explanation I shall draw the attention of the House to page 93 of the white book. There you will find five minor heads—

	Rs.
University	10,68,000
Secondary	25,99,000
Primary	1,04,000
Special	13,71,000
General Expenditure	74,52,000

As I have to ask for your vote with regard to these minor heads, I shall very briefly explain the position.

With regard to "University" for which I ask you to vote Rs. 10,68,000, this provision includes Rs. 9,06,000 as a grant to the Dacca University, Rs. 40,000 for the proposed Board of Intermediate and Secondary education in Dacca, Rs. 1,28,000 by way of a grant to the Calcutta University. This Rs. 1,28,000 is an amount which the Calcutta University has been receiving in the past, and there is no curtailment whatsoever in the contribution to it. The Government of Bengal was credited with this grant by the Government of India in connection with the recent financial settlement, and so this grant has now to be paid from provincial revenues. I mention this because, besides this Rs. 1,28,000, a sum of Rs. 1,29,000 is included for distribution through the Calcutta University to private arts colleges. Under the sub-head "Grant-in-aid," which you will find at page 102 of the white book, the first sub-head is Colleges, General Rs. 4,07,000; through the Calcutta University, Government distribute Rs. 1,29,000 and the Calcutta University gets a direct contribution of Rs. 1,28,000, making a total of Rs. 2,57,000.

Now I mention the item of Rs. 40,000 for the proposed Intermediate and Secondary education at Dacca. I will deal with it later in detail, as I find there are some amendments on the subject, but I will explain shortly what it is about. If members will turn to the Dacca University Act, section 6 clause (5) they will see that it has been enacted that "it shall not be lawful for the Dacca University to conduct courses or maintain classes for the purpose of preparing students for admission to the University," and under section 47 of the same Act it has been enacted that "save as otherwise provided in this Act, the powers of the University conferred by or under this Act shall not extend beyond a radius of five miles from the Convocation Hall of the University. Notwithstanding anything in any other law for the time being in force, no educational institution beyond the limit shall be associated with or admitted to the privileges of the University and no educational institution within that limit shall be associated in any way with or be admitted to any privileges of any other university incorporated by law in British India, etc., etc."

So that the position in this: that within an area of five miles of the Convocation Hall in Dacca, as soon as the Dacca University is started and begins to work, no matriculation schools, nor colleges affiliated to the Intermediate standard of any other University can hold these examinations. The Dacca University Act comes into force on or before the 1st July next. If that University is to open its classes at the beginning of the coming session (it must be generally remembered that the Session begins by the 1st of July) all intermediate classes and high schools within the Dacca University area will automatically lose their connection with the Calcutta University and the Dacca University as constituted will not be able to help them. That is a state of things which I am sure, no member of this House can contemplate with equanimity.

Now, this is one of the results of the modification introduced into the text of the Dacca University Act at the last moment when that Act was before the Indian Legislative Council and for that modification the old Government of Bengal was in no way responsible. But whoever might have been responsible for this change, the fact remains, as I have already pointed out, that unless due provision is made and effective steps be taken all high schools and intermediate colleges within the Dacca University area will practically have to close, and for that purpose this provision of Rs. 40,000 has been made, and I consider it to be very, very necessary. I have no doubt that the members of this House, in spite of the fact that some of them have brought amendments to the contrary, will, after consideration, see that it will not be wise for them to press their amendments. When these amendments are pressed I shall go into further details, and will I hope have no difficulty in convincing them of the necessity for this provision.

The provision of Rs. 9,00,000 to the Dacca University includes a capital grant of Rs. 4,00,000 for buildings and Rs. 5,00,000 for maintenance. I shall deal with these two items in connection with the amendments, the House will have to consider—I trust they may not have to consider them—but I may mention that the authorities of the Dacca University demanded Rs. 15½ lakhs for capital expenditure, but Government have been able to give them only Rs. 4,00,000 and when I place the details, I am sure the House will see that Rs. 4,00,000 is the bare minimum, perhaps something a little below the absolute minimum. There is also Rs. 5,00,000 for recurring expenditure. I may mention that this is really a small sum. This House is aware that the Dacca University is going to absorb the Dacca College; the recurring expenses of the Dacca College alone including the Law College is about Rs. 2,00,000. The Dacca College including the Law College is going to be absorbed by the Dacca University so that we are only providing for a recurring expenditure of Rs. 3,00,000.

I would draw the attention of the House to the fact, that the Dacca University is going to be a unitary and residential university. It is obligatory to have three halls, where students will reside and being a residential university, it is necessary that there will be a large number of professors, readers and lecturers who will also be resident. It stands to reason that in a residential university expenses will necessarily be higher than those of an examining university. The additional provision of Rs. 3,00,000 for recurring expenditure is not much, when you have to provide for three halls, or perhaps more.

Gentlemen, the Dacca University authorities demanded a minimum of Rs. 7,50,000 a year but we have been able to provide only Rs. 5,00,000. After examining the figures very carefully we have come to the conclusion that this figure is barely enough.

I may mention that the selection board for the appointment of the staff included the Hon'ble President, Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda, the Vice-Chancellor of the University, the Director of Public Instruction, and the Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University. The Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University was perfectly satisfied with the selections made, there was no dissent, all agreed that the staff were employed on salaries which were not excessive but were proper and legitimate. I lay special emphasis on this because I have heard it stated by one or two members that the Dacca University is doing an injustice to the Calcutta University. I have no doubt that this is really based on a misapprehension. I have not the slightest doubt that Sir Nilratan Sarkar, who was on the committee to represent the interests of the Calcutta University, would have been the first person to raise a voice of dissent, if the interests of the Calcutta University were not properly safeguarded on that board for he was on that board in his capacity as Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University.

Another point, which I would like to mention to the House, is that the Dacca University is constituted under an Act passed by the Government of India. So long as that Act remains in force, it is my duty to administer that Act as efficiently as I can, and I have no doubt that it is the duty and responsibility of members of this Council, who hold the purse strings of the nation to see that this Act does not remain a dead letter.

Another point is, that, so long as the Dacca University Act is on the Statute Book, it is our duty to find the money for its working; if we are not satisfied with the principles of that Act, we must take proper steps to have the Act repealed.

I regret to find that amongst some members of this House there are indications of a spirit of rivalry between the Dacca University and my alma mater the Calcutta University. I trust I have made this remark under a misapprehension. I trust that during the course of the debate this misapprehension will be removed. I consider it my duty to deal justly and fairly with regard to the adequate needs of the Calcutta University as also of the Dacca University, and I have no doubt that in this view the majority of the House will agree with me.

I hope and trust that every member of the House will rise superior to parochial or communal considerations and will work in the interest of the province as a whole, and I am sure my appeal will not fall on deaf ears. I may once again assure my friends, who are interested in the welfare of the Calcutta University, that I shall always try to do my best for my alma mater. But I trust at the same time that those, who are responsible for the administration of the Calcutta University, will in future be alive to the real interests of that university, and in submitting their schemes for financial and other help before the reformed government, I hope the authorities of the Calcutta University will realise that education is now a transferred subject, and the Education Minister, whatever his personal views may be, has to guide himself by public opinion as expressed through the representatives of the people within the four walls of this house. I have perhaps taken more of the time of the Council than I originally intended on the question of the Dacca and Calcutta Universities in the hope that these preliminary remarks will shorten the discussion on the subject at a subsequent stage as I find there are a number of amendments on these subjects.

Now, Sir, if the members of this House will again turn to page 92 of the white book they will find the remaining four minor heads, viz. Secondary, Primary, Special and General Expenditure. I do not propose to deal with these items at length; there are no amendment relating to them, and this, I take it, indicates that the members of this House are willing to accept the proposals relating to them. Further, the Education budget as a whole has been discussed at length. I do not think any useful purpose will be served by any detailed examination of these items.

You will find at page 93—at the middle of the page—that an increase has been provided for; that increase is mainly due to an increase in the salaries of the Indian Educational Service men and of the Provincial Educational Service men.

I need not trouble the Council about primary education. That point has been discussed very fully.

Turning to "D—Special," at page 97, you will find that there is a decrease of Rs. 6,75,000, which is due to the transfer of the Calcutta School of Art and various other Government technical schools from the control of the Education Department to that of the Department of Agriculture and Industries. These are some of the important items, and, as I have taken your time at some length, I do not desire to trouble you with further details. There is one item which I would like to refer to. That item is at page 102. There is a lump sum provision for the reorganisation of the Subordinate Educational Service, viz., Rs. 3,50,000. The members of this Council are perhaps aware that a committee consisting of some members of the old Council and others examined this question; but before that committee finished its examination they sent up Rs. 3,50,000 as the proper figure, and the Budget was prepared on that basis. A printed copy of the committee's report is not yet before me, but I rather apprehend that the sum provided may not be enough, and it may be necessary for me to come up before this Council, again when I and my department have had time to go into the matter carefully.

I move "that a sum of Rs. 1,06,32,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '31—Education' (excluding European education)."

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: May I have some information as to how the provision in the Budget for primary education is proposed to be distributed?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: Perhaps my friend, Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, was not here when I explained the position during the general debate. We have Rs. 31,00,000 and odd there, and the provision is Rs. 8,00,000 and odd more than what we spent last year. This Rs. 1,00,000 is an extra provision, for which there was no scheme ready. Technically the Finance Department could have objected to this provision for Rs. 1,00,000 as there was no definite scheme ready, but they did not object.

The PRESIDENT: The next item stands in the name of Dr. A. Suhrawardy; but he is absent, and so the motion fails.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: May I have the permission of the Council to move the amendment standing in the name of Dr. Suhrawardy?

The PRESIDENT: Practically, it comes to this: Mr. Ghose is asking my permission to move a motion without notice. There is this to be said in favour of it, that it takes nobody by surprise, because the motion was on the agenda in another member's name; but I would still like to know the sense of the Council. The question is what practice should be followed, and I would therefore like to know whether the Council is in favour of the leave being given.

The motion whether Mr. D. C. Ghose should be permitted to move the amendment was then put and agreed to.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE moved "that the demand for Rs. 9,00,000 to the Dacca University be reduced to Rs. 6,00,000."

It will appear from the details given in the Budget estimate at page 91, that of the total sum, which the Hon'ble Minister asks from the Council under the head "Education," the expenditure in connection with University education forms an important part: that expenditure, as given in the Budget estimate, amounts to Rs. 10,68,000. Of this sum it appears that no less than Rs. 9,00,000 goes to the Dacca University. Before I criticise this grant, I should like to say that I am not an enemy of the Dacca University. On the contrary, I honestly think that a residential university of the type which is contemplated under the Dacca University Act, is entitled to full and unqualified support from us. But, at the same time, we have to bear in mind that we in the Council are somewhat in the position of a judge and we should impartially consider the claims of the universities that are under our control.

Now, the first ground upon which I base my criticism about the grant of Rs. 9,00,000 for the Dacca University is that sufficient information has not been placed at our disposal to justify us in acceding to this demand. In the first place, we do not know the kind of studies upon which the authorities of the Dacca University are going to lay emphasis. If they are only keen to duplicate what the Calcutta University now teaches, then I am afraid there would not be much enthusiasm for such studies. The great, I might almost say the universal demand now is for vocational training; and, if the authorities of the Dacca University will take up agricultural or technological education and make provision for such studies, I do not think there will be a single voice in this Council which will oppose the grant of sufficient money. But as I have said we do not know the programme of work of the Dacca University.

In the second place, although we are asked to sanction a grant of Rs. 9,00,000 to the Dacca University, we are not given any idea of the annual recurring expenditure of the University for which we shall have to find money year by year. We do not know how much of the Rs. 9,00,000 is required for the purpose of the administration of the University and how much will be required for the providing of education. We do not know the conditions of service upon which professors of the University are being or are going to be employed; we do not know the initial salaries that they are going to get; we do not know either their grades, the period for which they are going to be employed, and, most important of all, the person who is signing the contracts which are being or are going to be entered into between the University and the members of the teaching staff. If we had these information, I submit, we would have got some idea of the annual recurring expenditure for which this Council would be asked to provide money year by year. I cannot help thinking that the method in which money is being asked for the Dacca University is hardly fair to this Council. Is it expected that this Council, without the slightest idea of the annual recurring expenditure of the Dacca University, will vote whatever sums of money that the new Vice-Chancellor demands? We have before us not an iota of fact which will give us any indication of the annual demand with regard to the Dacca University. I do not know if the members of this Council are aware that the Dacca University Act is not in force. It is understood that the work of the University will begin on the 1st July. It appears that the money which we are asked to grant will be required for nine months. If money on this scale were required next year, we would have to provide Rs. 12,00,000 for the Dacca University in subsequent years. The question is whether we are prepared to grant such large sums of money to the Dacca University, when we know that its jurisdiction is nothing compared with the jurisdiction of the Calcutta University, and further that it is concerned only with studies required for the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and of Bachelor of Science; in other words the Dacca University is not concerned, as the Calcutta University at present is, with studies for the Intermediate and Matriculation Examinations. It may be pointed out that there is a large amount of money earmarked for the Dacca University, and that therefore the Council is not justified in criticising the manner in which it is spent. But I submit that, if there is any money earmarked for the Dacca University, it is intended for capital expenditure; and I submit also that it is opposed to the elementary principles of sound finance, to divert money intended for capital expenditure to purposes for which annual provision will be necessary. I think, therefore, that the House ought to refuse this large grant to the Dacca University, first, on the ground that there is a heavy deficit this year, and secondly, that we are not able to render proper financial assistance to the Calcutta University.

The PRESIDENT: The next amendment is of the same kind and I call upon Professor Satish Chandra Mukherji to move it before further discussion takes place.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI moved "that the demand of Rs. 9,00,000 to the Dacca University be reduced by Rs. 7,00,000.

In moving this amendment I wish to make only one observation at the very outset, that I am no enemy or opponent of the Dacca University. It would be preposterous for one, who has been an educationist for over a quarter of a century, to throw any obstacle in the path of any educational institution, much more one which is going to be utilised as, and which is expected to be, a model university, a centre of light and learning. If I have moved this amendment, I have simply been prompted by a sense of duty; nothing but a sense of duty would have prompted me to move such an amendment.

The Hon'ble Minister in charge of Education has already told us that under the head "University" we have a provision of Rs. 10,68,000. Of this, only—and I lay some emphasis on the word "only"—Rs. 1,28,000 goes to the Calcutta University; and I may take the opportunity of stating to the House that this is no new grant, no extra grant, but simply the redemption of a pledge given by the Government of India; it is simply redeeming a pledge, and the details are given on page 38 of the Budget. I need not take up your time on that. That leaves Rs. 9,40,000 for the Dacca University and the Hon'ble Minister has already told us that Rs. 40,000 goes towards the Dacca University Intermediate Board and I have not touched it. That leaves Rs. 9,00,000 for the Dacca University. My friend, who preceded me, has already stated that, so far as the two budget books are concerned, no details have been given there, but I am exceedingly thankful to Mr. Hornell for giving me as much information as I wanted; and it was my privilege and pleasure to have first-hand information from Mr. Hartog, the Vice-Chancellor of the Dacca University, who happened to be here yesterday and whom I find in the visitors' gallery this afternoon. It only shows very naturally how far he is interested in the welfare of his own University. Of this Rs. 9,00,000, roughly speaking, Rs. 5,00,000 is for maintenance and Rs. 4,00,000 for capital expenditure; and I am told that, if Rs. 5,00,000 be not quite sufficient to meet the recurring expenses this year, there may be a cut into the Rs. 4,00,000 that is contemplated to be sent on capital expenditure. Besides, at page 63 of the Budget, there is another provision for Rs. 2,00,000 for construction of buildings for Intermediate Colleges, which will come up to the voting of this Council later on. Now, this Council, if I understand aright, has no right to interfere with the detailed administration of an University. I quite admit that; but the trusted custodians of public funds this Council has a perfect right to know how this money is going to be spent. I am told that the University expects to start with 1,500 students, and the idea is to have about 100 men in order to provide for 1,500 students, i.e., one for every fifteen. These 100 men will be placed under four classes—Professors, Readers, Lecturers and Assistants. The Professors will begin with Rs. 600, rising to Rs. 1,800; Readers from Rs. 400 to Rs. 1,200; Lecturers from Rs. 250 to Rs. 400; and Assistants to begin with Rs. 125; and, of course, if in the course of two or three years the Dacca University gets 3,000 students, the staff will be correspondingly increased and made 200.

Now, it raises to my mind three very important issues. The first issue is, are we (the Council) going to endorse this heavy scale of expenditure for doing a piece of work practically the kind of which is being done by the Calcutta University at a much less expenditure, though the Calcutta University has been seriously charged with extravagance. Now, what are the facts? One Mr. Haridas Bhattacharji, who was getting Rs. 300 a month in the Calcutta University, has been appointed by Mr. Hartog on Rs. 500, rising to Rs. 1,200; one Mr. Satyendra Nath Basu, who was working in the Calcutta University for Rs. 250 a month, has been appointed by Mr. Hartog on Rs. 400 rising to Rs. 1,200; one Mr. Nalin Mohan Bose who was getting Rs. 250 in the Calcutta University, has been appointed by Mr. Hartog in the Dacca University on Rs. 400, rising to Rs. 1,200; one Dr. Jnanendra Nath Ghosh, who is a Research scholar in England and provided with Rs. 1,200 from the Palit Fund and is getting a study leave allowance of Rs. 100 in England, one who was working for Rs. 250 and gave an undertaking that he would serve for three years in the Calcutta University, has been given a promise to be appointed in the Dacca University on Rs. 1,000, rising to Rs. 1,800. [Here Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur interrupted and enquired about the salary of Sir P. C. Roy: the speaker replied he was coming to it later on.] One Dr. Ramesh Chandra Majumdar, who was getting Rs. 450 in the Calcutta University with an extra allowance of Rs. 100 for extra work has been offered an appointment on Rs. 600 rising to Rs. 1,800.

Now, in this Calcutta University, we have to-day men like Dr. Stephen, Dr. Cullis, Dr. Bhandarkar, Sir P. C. Roy, Professor Raman men of the highest academic eminence and of European educational reputation. Dr. Stephen is getting Rs. 750 a month, Dr. Cullis, Rs. 1,300; Dr. Bhandarkar, Rs. 1,250, Sir P. C. Roy, Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,000; Professor Raman Rs. 800 to Rs. 1,000, and there are six Sir Rash Behari Ghosh's Chauri, each drawing Rs. 600 a month, and they are all men of the highest academic distinctions, viz.—

Dr. P. C. Mitter, ph.d. (Berlin).

Dr. D. M. Bose, ph.d. (Berlin).

Dr. H. K. Sen, d.sc. (London).

Dr. S. P. Agarua, ph.d. (Berlin).

Dr. P. N. Ghosh, ph.d. (Calcutta).

Dr. S. K. Banarji, d.sc. (Calcutta).

Now, as I have told you, are we going to endorse this heavy scale of expenditure for doing a similar piece of work which is being done by the Calcutta University? I am told that, unless a very good salary is paid, it is impossible to draw men of the Indian Educational Service type; and how is it that the Calcutta University, which is coming in for such a heavy piece of criticism, has been able to secure men of the highest distinction?

Maulvi FAZL-UL HAQ: I rise to a point of order. Is my friend in order in comparing the salaries paid by the Calcutta University with those paid by the Dacca University?

The PRESIDENT: I think he is in order.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: The second point that the question raises is—What will be the effect of this on the Calcutta University? I think this is bound to wreck the University here. Surely this will lead to a most unhealthy competition between the two sister universities. In an informal conversation with the Hon'ble Minister in charge of Education, I said in a jocular way that the Minister had now two daughters to maintain. And what was he going to do? Was he going to bedeck one with most precious jewellery and to leave the other in rags and tatters? The Minister in charge said to me smilingly that so far as things went at present he had only one daughter.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER : I rise to a point of explanation. Sir, I think the member is under a misapprehension.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: If the Hon'ble Minister thinks I am in any way misrepresenting him, I withdraw unreservedly.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER : I did not say that the member was intentionally misrepresenting me. I said that he was under a misapprehension as regards what I said.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I rise to a point of order. Sir, and it is whether Ministers should hold private conversations with members at all?

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I said an informal conversation. There is a good deal of difference between a private conversation and an informal conversation. If it were a private conversation, I would not have mentioned it in the Council.

The third issue that it raises is—Are we as Councillors justified in spending so much money on one particular kind of education, viz. pure arts and science education at the expense of primary education, vocational and technological education? Within the last ten years a great revolution has taken place in our ideas of education. The angle of vision has completely changed. The cry has gone forth from the country that what the country needs to-day is not so much pure arts and science education, but a kind of education which will befit the nation to fight the battle of life and to enable thousands and thousands of our young men to earn an honest living. Sir, this year we have been asked for Rs. 5,00,000 for recurring expenditure, and I am told that in the next year it will be Rs. 7,00,000; and I am further told that in two or three years it will be Rs. 11,00,000, if not more. I think this is the time when this House should take the matter into serious consideration as to whether we are going to allow expenditure which will land us into serious difficulties in the near future. I have not the least objection to help being granted to the Dacca University; but is it asking too much to reduce the recurring expenditure by one lakh and to reduce the capital expenditure by another lakh? I have not asked for anything more. The Dacca University needs money, but the other University also needs money. I do not know whether the members of this Council have noticed in to-day's Statesman an editorial paragraph where special emphasis has been laid on the needs of this University. If I may be permitted to do so, I shall read just a few words: "More money is needed for the development of teaching work in accordance with the recommendations of the Calcutta University Commission. For salaries of the postgraduate staff a grant of Rs. 1,25,000 must be made if Calcutta is to hold its own in competition with Dacca. Rs. 10,00,000 is needed for the extension of technological studies as recommended by the Calcutta Commission and in this matter State aid will go hand in hand with the splendid private munificence by which the University has been assisted. The Calcutta University, it need hardly be said, has no hesitation in asking for the Government grants, to which it is fairly entitled."

Sir, the claims of the Calcutta University have been brushed aside. And why? Simply on the ground that it did not approach the Government of Bengal in due time. We know it very well that the Calcutta University was all along expecting money from the Imperial Government because it was under that Government. That is the reason why the Calcutta University did not appeal and did not approach the Government of Bengal with any definite request for financial help. Sir, is a great institution to be brought to a state of collapse because of a technical defect? Can we not have an assurance from the Hon'ble Minister in charge of Education who said over and over again that the Calcutta University was his alma mater, and I appeal to him in all earnestness at he, as Minister responsible for Education——

Maulvi RAFI UDDIN AHMED: I rise to a point of order. It is not the Calcutta University that we are discussing, but the Dacca University.

The PRESIDENT: I think the member is quite in order.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: It is perfectly plain that, if we can make any saving, the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of Education may in future make some provision for the Calcutta University. That is the reason why I was earnestly appealing to him, as there might be possibility of a supplementary budget. It was only an appeal, and do not think I was out of order.

The PRESIDENT: I have already ruled that you are in order.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I have finished, and I do hope that the House, in deciding this question will not be guided by pure feelings or sentiments, but take into their serious consideration whether it is reasonable or unreasonable to ask for a simple reduction of grant of Rs. 2,00,000 which will in no way hurt the Dacca University.

The PRESIDENT: The amendment by Mr. D. C. Ghose and the one moved by Professor Satish Chandra Mukherji may be conveniently debated together, and I ask Khan Bahadur Nawabzada Khwaja Muhammad Afzal, Khan Bahadur to address the Council.

Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: I beg to oppose the motions brought forward for curtailing the grants to the Dacca University. Professor Satish Chandra Mukherji is proposing to reduce the expenditure on the Dacca University by Rs. 2,00,000, while my friend Mr. D. C. Ghose, who has taken up the place of Dr. Suhrawardy, in his absence, has gone one step further and wants to reduce it by Rs. 3,00,000.

In my general remarks on the Budget, Sir, I have made it abundantly clear that the grant to the Dacca University is no gift, but is what, or rather less than, what Government is morally bound to give to that institution. I believe and I do believe that the present allotment falls far short of the amount contributed by the Government of India annually for some years specifically for the Dacca University.

The area of the land occupied by the University is about one square mile. The buildings, though large, need considerable alterations for University purposes, and fresh hostels for students are urgently necessary if the University is to perform satisfactorily as contemplated, its functions as a residential University. The objects of the Calcutta University Commission in regard to the Dacca University were set out in the Report, Volume 4, page 214. The Government of India desired that Dacca should have a model university, of a type new to the Presidency and to India. There are no adequate laboratories. A new Physical Laboratory is urgently needed and the Library of the Dacca College must be greatly increased to provide for the needs of the University. There are to be over 100 teachers on the staff, and there is house accommodation only for 40 including executive officers, clerks, etc.

The Dacca University was promised by Lord Hardinge in 1912 in response to a request from the Muhammadan community. Lord Hardinge made it clear that the University was to be a university not for one community alone, but for all; and since that time it has been decided that alongside the Department of Islamic studies, there will be a Department of Sanskritic studies, so that the University may not be in any way one-sided. But there is in this question an important factor to be considered by the Muhammadan community. At the last census 52 per cent. of the total population in Bengal were Muhammadans. Our Hon'ble colleague, Mr. Hornell, in his Quinquennial Review for 1916-17, said that in the non-professional colleges there were only 8·8 per cent. Muhammadans and in the professional colleges only 6·8 per cent. No one in this Chamber is unaware of the fact that the number of fully trained University men in this Presidency required to fill posts of responsibility is still not very enviable. The Dacca University will have a Moslem Hall, which will give special facilities to Muhammadan students. The University will encourage the attendance of Muhammadan students. It will help to redress the balance at present so unequal between the two sections of the community. I cannot understand how any Muhammadan member of this Council can oppose the grant judged as necessary to the establishment of the Dacca University on an adequate scale. What is the use of establishing a university that would be regarded as second rate. Would that be a help to the Muhammadans, or a disadvantage? It would have been better to have no university rather than an inefficient one in Dacca, for a Dacca degree should be a help and not a handicap to the Dacca graduates. The University will not be large, but it ought to be adequate and efficient, and you cannot get an efficient staff without adequate salaries. Sir, I understand that one of reasons of the capital expenditure is the provision of a Jagannath Hall, which will provide facilities mainly to Hindu students. The interests of Hindu students are, therefore, not being overlooked. To us in Eastern Bengal, the historic city of Dacca, the second capital of the province, is a centre to which we should look for intellectual stimulus. I believe that by its very existence in their midst, the Dacca University will stir up the intellectual ambitions of the young Muhammadans of the eastern districts; I believe, it will exert a powerful influence on their advancement; it will offer a new kind of training and new opportunities to them along with their brothers of other communities; it will give an impetus to the spirit of research in the domain of Indian History and Archæology, for which there is a considerable field in Eastern Bengal. I suggest, Sir, that it will be a gross breach of faith for this Chamber now to deny what the Government of India promised and to cripple the new University at its very start. Calcutta has in its midst some 25 colleges, including the Presidency College, the Sanskrit College, the Medical College, the Sibpore College of Engineering, maintained by Government, many hostels provided by Government, many colleges with grants from Government. The University is largely supported by examination fees, a source of revenue which will be comparatively trifling at Dacca, and it has besides its Law College a great organisation for Postgraduate teaching. According to a statement recently issued there were over 200 members on the Postgraduate teaching staff. Can it be that anybody who is a member of that staff grudges Dacca its relatively small beginnings. I feel sure that the University of Calcutta whose Vice-Chancellor has served on the Advisory Committee for the first appointments in Dacca, cannot feel any such jealousy, but that it will welcome the creation of a new sister university which cannot in any sense be regarded as a rival. Sir, we wish our Universities in India to be regarded as the equals of Universities in other parts of the world. The University of Calcutta is already large and powerful. No doubt it could do more with more money. I shall not oppose a grant to the University of Calcutta; rather I shall give it whole-hearted support when the time comes; but it is an act of common justice to the inhabitants of Eastern Bengal and to the Muhammadans of the whole province to set up the new University on a worthy scale.

It will be within the memory of many members of this House that in laying the foundation-stone of the Dacca College in 1905, Lord Curzon referred to my fellow-countrymen, the extraordinarily intelligent gentlemen of Vikrampur, and spoke of the benefits they were going to derive from the Dacca College, and that, in 1912, Lord Hardinge referred to the benefits my co-religionists, who are numerically predominant in that part of the country but are lagging behind in education, were likely to derive from the proposed Dacca University. My learned friends are trying to neutralise the effects of those generous promises and are practically encouraging the Government to commit a breach of faith towards the people of East Bengal.

At a time when so many things are being said by all and sundry about education and educational institutions, it is, to say the least of it, extremely unfortunate that a learned Professor and a learned Doctor should bring forward proposals calculated to hamper the progress of education of a very high order.

I am glad to be able to think that all are not as unsympathetic towards Eastern Bengal as my learned friends. For, witness what the representative and the executive head of the Calcutta University, I mean Sir Nilratan Sarkar, said in the Bengal Council on the 7th of August last. He said: "I desire to offer my sincerest congratulations to Your Excellency's Government on the practical accomplishment of the long-pending scheme of a teaching and residential University at Dacca for which a substantial allotment has been made in the Budget for the present year. There is an almost unlimited scope for expansion of faculties for higher education in the country. We all hope that the foundation of a second University in Bengal will help the diffusion of knowledge to the widest possible extent in the Presidency. I trust that in addition to the Faculties of Arts, Science and Law, the Dacca University will have the Faculties of Medicine and Agriculture in the near future."

And only the other day His Excellency the Governor, in his speech to the Dacca College boys, said in part: "We are on the point of bringing into existence at Dacca a University which will be a national University in the truest meaning of the words. . . . I look forward to seeing a great centre of Sanskritic learning springing up in the new Dacca University under the guidance of that eminent Sanskrit scholar, Mahamahopadhyaya Hara Prosad Sastri. I likewise look forward to seeing the establishment here of a great centre of Islamic studies I ask you in all sincerity to give to Mr. Hartog, an educationist of high repute in Europe, and to his colleagues, your wholehearted assistance in bringing this long-delayed scheme into existence. In this way you can render great and lasting service to your Motherland."

Sir, I find myself unable to improve upon this eloquent appeal of His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay, and I, therefore, trust that the grant to the Dacca University will be voted without a division.

Khan Bahadur KHWAJA MOHAMED AZAM: I rise to oppose this motion, and I trust and hope the Council will reject it by an overwhelming majority.

The Dacca University is now a piece of old history.

The partition of Bengal, among other things, gave an impetus to higher education in Eastern Bengal districts and specially Dacca, and, when it was modified, we were assured that the educational progress would be maintained, and the Dacca University was promised to us. Since then the embryo proposal and scheme was hatched and considered and it has only recently matured, and action is now being taken to give effect to it.

Since the promise was made, the Patna University considered and conceived much later, was established, and is now a working institution, whereas the Dacca University is still under construction. This University is one where special provision has been made for Islamic studies, and as such is dear to all Mussalmans, and this University will greatly foster and encourage high education on sound lines for Bengal students in general and Eastern Bengal students in particular. The Calcutta University has no doubt done good and excellent work in the past, but I am afraid it is not equal to cope with the present demands of education, and it is admittedly capable of much improvement.

I do not claim perfection for the Dacca University, but it is certainly a great improvement on the old one, and we have high hopes about it and it would not be wise to throw to the winds those hopes.

Eastern Bengal supplies the bulk of Bengal income and we do not grudge that the bulk of its expenditure is swallowed by West Bengal, and I cannot understand why West Bengal people should grudge us a pittance which has been long overdue and should have been given to us years back. I cannot also understand the jealousy of Calcutta University men for Dacca.

The establishment of Dacca University will not certainly affect the and Calcutta can as long as it likes enjoy the luxury of having more professors than students or professors without students. We do not want question its patronage or charity.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: It is to be very much regretted that so much oratory, so much eloquence and so much public time are being spent over such a simple question as this, viz., the allotment of Rs. 9,00,000 for the Dacca University. Sir, to-day's proceedings of the Council seem to be characterised by a good deal of doubt about the propriety of having a University at Dacca, of the type which the Bill contemplates. I submit that it is too late in the day to discuss the question. When the Dacca University Bill was before the Indian Legislature, I think that was the time to discuss the matter thoroughly and efficiently and when the principle was accepted, the country did not raise its voice of protest against the creation of the University. On the contrary, a section of the public—a very influential and strong section of the public—demanded—I mean our Muhammadan co-religionists of Eastern Bengal—and the Government saw the propriety of having a new type of university not exactly on the lines of the Calcutta University. But if funds for this Dacca University would have been an accomplished fact some years ago. Now, Sir, this proposal seems to me to be something like the proposal to strangle an infant. Now the Dacca University has not yet been fully constituted. My friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose, said that the Act has not come into force. It has not; but at the same time, in a manner it has. The Vice-Chancellor, who is to organise the University, has been appointed. I do not see any objection to the presence of Mr. Hartog in the visitors' gallery. He is the man who is properly interested in the question; and if anybody has any right to be here, it is Mr. Hartog. No, Sir, what are we going to do? The Hon'ble the Minister in charge of Education has provided a certain sum of money for the Dacca University. That is all. My friend, Professor Satish Chandra Mukherji, who evidently seems to be a great orator, has collected facts and figures to show that Lecturers and Readers and Professors are being appointed on pay, which is higher than that given to such men by the Calcutta University. I do not think that this Council at this stage is competent to go into that question.

With regard to the grant, it is quite inadequate. The Dacca University, to be fully started on its career, requires more money, and this year the Council has been asked to vote only Rs. 9,00,000. With regard to the matter of Rs. 40,000, I think it is an absolute necessity and the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of Education explained it to the Council, that without some such Board the University could not have a start. There is a chance of collision and confusion, and also a chance of breakdown, as the Director of Public Instruction informs me.

With regard to the ignorance of the Council as to the course of study, the University will prescribe it, and this ignorance on the part of the Council, is no argument against voting the grant. The University is not yet formed, and, if members are anxious to study its constitution, there are the reports, and they are welcome to study them. Of course public criticism is always welcome, and, if any new lines can be suggested, I am sure Mr. Hartog and the University authorities of Dacca will be only too glad to accept suggestions and to alter the course of studies. It has been said that it would have been much better to have a University something on the lines of a Technological Institute. I submit it is desirable to have a Technological University, but at the same time I would draw the attention of the Council to the Report of the Calcutta University Commission, which was presided over by no less a person than Sir Michael Sadler. He recommended that it was necessary, and the time was not very far when, every important town should have its own university, as in England and Scotland; and so I think we should have as many universities as the country demands, to meet the requirements of education. But, Sir, that is not the question before us. The question is this—the Dacca University Act has been passed. It is the law of the land, and the Government has already given it a start by appointing a Vice-Chancellor, and I think a Board has also been constituted. There are also the houses—money only is required now, and as education has been made a transferred subject, it has devolved upon us—the members of the Provincial Council—to provide some money for it, and the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of Education has been called upon to provide in the present year's Budget not the full amount, but a portion of it required by Mr. Hartog or the Director of Public Instruction, who is vitally interested in the matter and who is always consulted in the matter. That is all that we have got to do, and the money we want is not adequate, and for the present Rs. 5,00,000 or Rs. 4,00,000 for capital expenditure and for meeting recurring expenditure is not a very large amount, and so the amount which has been provided for in the Budget is inadequate, and I think this Council ought not to vote out the provision made in the Budget. So I strongly oppose the amendment for reducing the amount which has been provided for in the Budget.

The PRESIDENT: I think I ought to tell the Council that I have at 10 or 11 more speakers on the list, and unless members try to be very brief in their remarks it will be impossible to finish the debate within the time prescribed.

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: I beg to say a few words which are most essential about the Dacca University. After the annulment of the partition of Bengal, Lord Hardinge, in order to pacify their out-ged feelings, promised the Dacca University to the Muhammadans, who were used as mere buffers to break the waves of anti-Government agitation during the partition days. Though it was originally promised as a concession to the Muhammadans alone, Lord Hardinge the very outset, announced that the University was to be a univer for all alike, and this is an essential feature of its constitution as vided in the University Act of 1920. The promise was made as back as 1912, but the task of formulating definite plans for the rede tion of the pledge was relegated to the limbo of neglect for reasons known to the Government.

Professor Satish Chandra Mukherji, in moving his amendment, that the University is only the outcome of the redemption of a ple given by Lord Hardinge. The remark is quite true. I know of other virtue in a Government than their readiness to redeem their p ges. At the same time I must tell Mr. Mukherji that Lord Hardi made the promise when he was highly impressed with the necessity establishing a university at Dacca and not before. It is gener argued that the world-wide war is the cause of this unusual delay. I say, Sir, that the Patna University conceived on a much later d was brought into being at a time when the entire resources of the we were being tapped in order to ensure victory for the Allies. So I say with every justification that a grave injustice has been done to people of East Bengal by delaying the University so long.

Sir, whether there was any promise or not, there is no denying fact that there is a crying necessity for the establishment of a uni sity at Dacca. The Sadler Commission stated that even if the Gove ment had not promised a university for Dacca, they would themsel have recommended its immediate or early establishment as part of tl general policy of university organisation. The congestion of the C cutta University is due to the fact that East Bengal students prep derate in it. I must also say that a vast majority of the very best s dents in the Calcutta University hail from East Bengal. These stude when the Dacca University is established, will have ample opportunit to do original and research work under the fostering care of the Da University.

Some gentlemen argue that the University will benefit the Muha madans alone. Sir, instead of putting forth any other argument, would only refer them to the University Act of 1920, where they w find writ large in letters of gold that the University will be a univers for all alike. Now assuming for argument's sake, although it is no fact, that the Muhammadans will be benefited more than anybody e by the Dacca University, can't I enquire of my friends whether it not their duty to see the Muhammadans well educated and their bac wardness in education removed for the uplift and betterment of t Motherland?

Sir, now coming to the amendments proposing reduction to t Dacca University grants, I must frankly say that I am sincerely sor hat the learned movers of the amendments—one of whom is a professor in the Education Department—are now opposing grants to an educational institution, while they have allowed the huge sum of Rs. 16,01,000 for the Excise Department to go wholly unchallenged. I also beg leave to say at the very outset, without feigning any sort of conventionality, that the sum allotted to the Dacca University is ludicrously low. The Nathan Committee recommended, besides capital grants, a recurring grant of Rs. 12,00,000. So my learned friends will see very clearly that the sum granted is lower by full Rs. 3,00,000 than the sum recommended by the Nathan Committee, which, in itself, was a very modest figure. When I look to the curricula of the Dacca University I wonder how the Vice-Chancellor will manage the huge affair with such a paltry sum. The Dacca University will be a residential university—an Indian University of a new type based on the best universities of Europe and America.

Mr. Mukherji has compared the Dacca University with the Calcutta University. Sir, I have the honour to tell him that, had it been an object copy of the circus which is being run in College Square with three shows a day, my friends would have every satisfaction in grumbling at the grant, because that would be an act of perpetuating an ever-increasing anomaly.

Sir, at least there is one other fundamental aspect, in which the Dacca University will differ from the Calcutta one, namely, it will not be a sort of famine relief work. What I precisely mean by famine relief work is this. During famines huge projects at enormous cost, which would not be contemplated even in normal times, are undertaken by Government in order to give work to the famine-stricken people. Similarly, the Calcutta University always creates professorships and tutorships to provide for the hot favourites of the one all-powerful person who rules the destiny of the Calcutta University in these days. The staff of the Dacca University, on the other hand, will be selected from amongst the best possible available men both in India and abroad. So money spent in this direction will not be money misspent, but money spent in the right direction. Besides the study of English, vernacular, Islamic and Sanskrit languages and various scientific studies, a course of physical training will be prescribed for the alumni of the Dacca University. The benefits of physical training can never be over-estimated. Without it no education can be said to be perfect. No provision is made for this training in the curricula of the Calcutta and other Indian universities. The result was that, when recruitment was ordered for the Calcutta University Corps, most of the applicants failed to satisfy the minimum requirements under the Army Regulations. When I was in the army, the English instructor who used to give us lessons in Swedish drill, very often told us: "You people (the Bengalis) require these exercises more than anybody else in the world." I never resented the remark, because he had every justification to say so. In short I may safely say that there can be no sound mind in an unsound body. Another special feature of the Dacca University is that it will also provide agricultural and some other vocational education. In this respect also it will be a unique university in India. Another special feature of the University, as recommended by the Nathan Committee, will be facilities which it will afford to the poor students in the shape of free fees.

Sir, I believe I have sufficiently proved that the sum allotted to Dacca University is already so frivolously low that it cannot admit of any further retrenchment.

In conclusion, I would only read a paragraph from a note on Dacca University by Mr. P. J. Hartog, its Vice-Chancellor: "I have said a final word on the question of finance. My estimates have been based on those furnished by the Calcutta University Commission, revised by the Special Officer and the Director of Public Instruction. They are, I think, reasonable, though I should have liked to be able to do more at the outset. The capital expenditure proposed for libraries, laboratories and residential accommodation is an absolute minimum. The University is to have a fair chance of success."

It is really passing strange that the House which has voted Rs. 5,00,000 for one almshouse should be loath to vote Rs. 9,00,000 for one great university with vast potentialities.

With these words I beg to oppose the motions.

Mr. H. A. STARK: The Dacca University, as things stand, leaves just one duty to perform, and that duty is to establish it on an adequate scale. Those who have argued against voting it a grant of Rs. 9,00,000 have alleged that there is a certain amount of extravagance in the Budget proposals and a comparison has been drawn between the expenditure of Calcutta University and Dacca University. It seems to have been forgotten that, although technically self-contained and isolated institutions, Presidency College, Sanskrit College, David Hare Training College, Bengal Engineering College (Sibpur) and all other Government Colleges in Bengal affiliated to the Calcutta University, are really as organic parts of the Calcutta University as will be the Jagannath Hall, the Moslem Hall and the several departments of the Dacca University. Nor in the consideration of the Calcutta University ought we to exclude the many large hostels which have been built for Government and aided colleges in the city and even outside it. The Dacca University asks for Rs. 9,00,000. Of this sum Rs. 1,75,000 is already what has been usually sanctioned for, and usually spent by, the Dacca College year after year. So that in point of fact it is only Rs. 7,25,000 above the present grant that is being requisitioned by the Dacca University. Now the all-expensements which we are prepared to make to Calcutta University College are Rs. 1,75,000 to the Sanskrit College; Rs. 2,60,000 to the Presidency College; Rs. 3,20,000 to the Bengal Engineering College. The total otted to these three colleges amounts to Rs. 7,50,000. We, therefore, e already expending upon three or four colleges nearly as much as we e asked to expend upon an entire University. Is that an excessive demand? Why, our guru-training schools which train only primary school isters, are costing us Rs. 4,50,000, quite half of what is being asked r the Dacca University. Is it consistent that a Council which is pre- red to grant to the Ranchi Lunatic Asylum with its unproductive in- rtes, a sum of Rs. 8,18,000, should refuse the expenditure of t. 9,00,000 upon a university? Surely our perspective must be entire- out, if we spend Rs. 8,00,000 on the mentally defective, and refuse e lakh more for the education and culture of those who will help Ben- l to attain a larger measure of responsible government, who will ad- nce the commercial and economic prosperity of our province, and who ll be our successors in this Council.

As a graduate of the Calcutta University, I am naturally in great mpathy with those who want the Calcutta University to prosper. it I cannot agree with those who would argue that the Dacca Uni- rsity is not to get what it requires because the Calcutta University ow stands in need of more than she is receiving. I cannot agree with ose who make it a matter of complaint that certain lecturers of the lcutta University have been appointed to the Dacca University, and at on larger salaries. I ask: Is it to be our policy to see that aching will always be the poorest paid profession? Are we to expect at whole-time servants will be satisfied with the wages that they ceived as part-time servants? There are many who think that the lcutta University has paid its professors inadequately, and that she is set a bad standard. But to come back to our point; it must be oted that some of the men who have left the Calcutta University and ho have been appointed to the Dacca University are the very men ho were recommended to the Dacca University by the President of e Postgraduates Council himself. Are we to suppose from the com- aint, to which I have referred, that the Calcutta University deliber- ely does not want to take any intellectual share in founding a sister iversity. Would there not have been grounds for complaint if, with alcutta University men available, professorships and lecturerships id been given only to men of foreign universities? The Calcutta niversity has really nothing to regret because another university is ing founded in Bengal. For within a few years we shall find theacca University stimulating the Calcutta University and the Calcutta niversity stimulating the Dacca University, to the great benefit of th.

Is this the time for us to throttle university education? Let us member that recruitment to the higher services is to be indifferently England and in India. Ought it not be to be our aim, our ambition, produce scholars in our own universities who will be able to win the positions attainable through the channel of open competition. Ought we not to speed up the supply of such men? By stinting money to the Dacca University, are we going to retard our own progress? Are we going to delay the introduction of complete self-government? My own feeling is that, if we are wise, we will concentrate on education; spend money on it liberally; get the best teachers available; and thereby speed up our preparedness for larger and larger measures of self-government. We ought to shorten the period of probation by strengthening our Universities and aiding that talent and promoting that culture which will enable our country to take her place in the British Empire. Give then, I say, give the Dacca University the money she requires with an open hand, regarding our grants to it as a sound remunerative investment and not as an ill-advised speculation. Have we forgotten that the Dacca University was pledged to the Muhammadans by Lord Hardinge himself, when he was at Dacca? Have we forgotten that it was offered as a salve to those who were hurt by the re-partition of Bengal in 1912? Have we forgotten that it was given as compensation to those who regarded that their interests had been sacrificed to the interests of others? Can we repudiate in this Council Chamber the promises given them—can we offer them a mimic University in place of the genuine article? The demand is comparatively small. Not much more than a few Government colleges in Calcutta are costing; not much more than we are prepared to spend upon a Lunatic Asylum. And may I say that, had we the imagination, we would see in our sanction of the full grant a splendid opportunity for doing something beneficent for Bengal, and thus signalling the institution of this Legislative Chamber. It should be our pride and our high privilege to launch the bark of the Dacca University on smooth seas, under auspicious omens, her sails set to propitious winds.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur : The point at issue before the Council is the motion which suggests that the demand of Rs. 9,00,000 to the Dacca University be reduced to Rs. 7,00,000, and it is not necessary for us to discuss whether there has been a breach of faith and other things. The arrangement that has been made by the Hon'ble Minister in charge of Education is that Rs. 9,00,000 be appropriated by the Dacca University, whereas the contention of the mover is to reduce this amount to Rs. 7,00,000. As has been represented by Professor Satish Chandra Mukherji, it seems to me that the Dacca University will not suffer much by this reduction. If that is a fact, which the Hon'ble Minister is in a position to answer, and, if the Dacca University does not suffer much, it is a matter for consideration with this Council whether the Dacca University ought to be satisfied with Rs. 7,00,000 at present. Now if the Dacca University considers that this amount is insufficient for its purpose, the argument which should be advanced on behalf of the mover is that the Minister in charge has not taken into consideration the claims of the Calcutta University. Those who are trying their best to have a larger amount, and those who are satisfied with the management of the Dacca University, are to answer that argument. My intention is that the Minister in charge will take into consideration the aims of the Calcutta University, and, if it is a fact that the Calcutta University is in a tottering condition, is it not the duty of the Minister to look to the claims of that University? It is for the Minister to consider that this University was in charge of the Chancellorship of the Governor-General of India. If no claim was put forward previously, that is no consideration for the Minister to neglect the claims of the Calcutta University. We ought not to neglect the claims of the Calcutta University and devote all the money to the Dacca University. This seems to be an error. Therefore, although I came to the Council with an open mind, I was thoroughly convinced by the arguments of the mover that the claims of the Calcutta University ought to be considered. I appeal to the Hon'ble Minister whether he does not think that it was an error on his part to neglect the just demand of the Calcutta University. If the Calcutta University is in need of some money, will it not be fair, will it not be just, to give it this modest sum of Rs. 2,00,000? The Dacca University can very well manage with Rs. 7,00,000, though at the very beginning it will be an expensive affair. If it is an expensive affair, then certainly Rs. 9,00,000 will not meet their purpose. They can go on with a small beginning and start a University worthy of the name. The Minister has told us just now that this University will not be a body inclined to spend much and the whole of the Rs. 9,00,000 may not be spent by them during the year. I appeal to the framers of the Budget and to the Minister whether they will not consider that the maintenance charge ought not to be on the same level as an enthusiast desires.

With these few remarks I beg to support the motion.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I must confess that I feel it my duty to oppose the motion that has been moved. Nobody is in more sympathy with the Calcutta University, which is my alma mater, than myself, and I know that the Calcutta University has also got very good claims on the attention of the Hon'ble Minister. But I think the whole question has been discussed purely in a spirit of parochial antipathy. The question is not as to what Calcutta should get. By all means exert yourself to get as much as it is possible for your University to get. Why stand in the way of a new University that is being ushered into being? Hindus and Moslems in Eastern Bengal and Western Bengal have all one and the same interest, namely, advancement of learning to equip them in the great work of nation-building, and character-building. I have been in my younger days in the Presidency College, where professors used to come and go, and we used to pay our schooling-fees, but there was never the advantage of living with them and that is a thing which I have always regretted. I think I spoke about it to my friends over there, Mr. Bompas, about 14 years ago and

Mr. Swan, about 12 years ago. I do not envy their complexion nor their intelligence, but, if I get their sense of duty and discipline, then I shall see where I shall be in three months. The Dacca University is going to be a residential university of a new type altogether. There are the professors and men of the highest culture from England, who have come here to impart that thing which we do not get in our University—Character. I welcome that and I am prepared to spend all that is possible to spend for it. I am sorry that in our days what we got from the University was much less than what we should have got.

I hear Mr. Ghose say, “Hear, hear.” Let him hear others with all the patience that he can command, and with the advantage of his intelligence I think he will be able to pick up many things as he grows older.

What is this question? This is a question of education. Has anybody here got the heart to say that we oppose it? The money spent on education—whether primary or secondary—is given by Government who is not particularly anxious to give it to us to throw it away and to say that we do not want it is an absurd idea. I am one of those who want larger sums given for primary education, but that is another matter.

This idea of taking away Rs. 2,00,000 from this grant and giving it to the Calcutta University is a puerile and quarrelsome idea, and it would not help the Calcutta University. And to those who have come forward with the claims of the Calcutta University, and who hold briefs for the Calcutta University, I say—How is it that the present Education Minister, who is one of those who got his training there in his younger days, is not kind to you? If you level that charge against him, then what is the answer? Are you men of the Calcutta University prepared to so shape your conduct in the management of your affairs that the people have more respect for you?

The PRESIDENT: It is now very near the time for adjournment. Are you likely to finish within five minutes?

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I shall not be able to finish within five minutes, but I shall try to be as short as possible.

Mr. D. C. GHOSE: Short and sweet.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I have been asked by Mr. D. C. Ghose to be sweet. I wish I had his good looks and his sweet smiling face; but I am sorry that at this age I cannot claim something with which I have not been endowed by nature.

Then, as regards education. As I was just saying, is there any doubt that the first thing we want in this country is education? When the greatest nobleman who came to this country—Lord Ripon—left the shores of India and just before he started from Bombay, his first word of advice was education, his next advice was education and his last word of advice to the Indians was education. Are we going to oppose anything that is going to help the cause of education and of higher education?

I do very well appreciate that by opening a university you create a form of intelligence and culture which ought to be welcomed by every East Bengal man. So far as the East Bengal Hindus and Muhammadans are concerned, we all stand on the same platform, for our common object is the advancement of learning and nothing else. Equipment of character to help us in nation-building is what we want, and there cannot be any question about that. In the earlier days, when there was the partition of Bengal about 14 or 15 years ago, I ventured to mutter out something to my great and illustrious guru—and no man can have a better guru—that I felt that the partition was a good measure; and he asked me why I said so. I said that I found in it great possibilities of a new centre of thought and activity opened in Eastern Bengal, which would help particularly our Muhammadan fellow-countrymen to advance. My great guru told me that I must not say so; and I got muffled and I went on fighting, sitting at his feet, to have the partition set aside, and, to his greatest glory, it was done. The starting of a University there will give an impetus to the highest forms of education; and you will have more of these self-respecting young men—educated men—to go and tell our administrators that this is what we want and this is what we should not have. The days of salaams and these things will pass away, and the days of effective criticism will come. If you want to take the advice given by Lord Ripon you should go on with education—the highest forms of education. It is really a matter of good fortune to us that we have been able to secure the services of a man of such profound scholarship as Mr. Hartog. When he has condescended to open this University, should we not take this advantage, and should we say that we should take away Rs. 2,00,000?

Then you are finding fault with your Minister for giving so much to the Dacca University. What did they want? They wanted Rs. 15,50,000 and they gave us details for capital expenditure. Out of this the Minister has given Rs. 4,00,000. They wanted Rs. 7,50,000 for recurring expenditure, and the Minister has given Rs. 5,00,000. Do you know what the Dacca College costs you, that you are fighting for this? There is no reason for you to fight. When you remember that the Calcutta University has not been given so much, that is a different quarrel, which is perfectly irrelevant to the matter. Professor S. C. Mukherji has said that the professors, who have gone to the Dacca University, have been given fabulous salaries—

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I never said “fabulous salaries.”

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I withdraw the expression, but I stick to the sense of that, namely, that in place of Rs. 250, men have been offered Rs. 400 and in place of Rs. 400 men have been offered Rs. 600 rising to Rs. 1,800. I know the meaning of what he said. He and I, read together; and he must have learnt what I learnt, or he mislearnt what I did learn. That is not correct, and it is not the proper way of putting it. The lectures in the Calcutta University were only half-time or quarter-time men, and they used to get Rs. 200 or Rs. 250 or Rs. 400. When you take away men to Dacca as full-time professors, and readers you have got to pay them Rs. 400 or Rs. 600 to start with.

At this stage the Council adjourned.

The Council reassembled at 6-20 p.m.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I would take only a few minutes of your time. How is it that this thing has been taken up by the Hon'ble Minister this year, and these provisions have been made? We find that the University Commission unanimously recommended that the Dacca University should be started at once; and the language is that there should be no further delay. You probably know the names of those hon'ble gentlemen who sat on that Commission—Indians as well as Europeans. In pursuance of that recommendation, they have started this work; the work has commenced; and as I have already told you, we have been lucky enough to secure such a capable man as Mr. Hartog for the Vice-Chancellorship, who has started this work. Are we now going to say that we take away Rs. 2,00,000 or Rs. 3,00,000 from this grant? In that case you cannot really start work according to the scale on which it has been taken up. I therefore think that there is no justification for anybody to say anything against the grant that has been made to the Dacca University, unless he is speaking from a point of parochial antipathy which should not be our guide at all. If the Calcutta University deserves, as I am sure she deserves, and I yield to none in my desire that she should get more money out of my hon'ble friend the Minister for Education, I am perfectly willing to join with some of my friends. But my friends are not right in saying that the Education Minister has not been kind enough to his own alma mater. His argument is that they did not come to him in proper time. I am one who is perfectly willing to concede that it is somewhat of a technical ground; but still I am sure that there is no doubt that the Calcutta University would get something, if they would make an attempt; and that the Education Minister would somehow find the money or at least a portion of it, because he has still that love and affection for the University to which he and I belonged. There is no doubt about it and that cannot be a ground for standing against this grant at all.

My friend, Professor S. C. Mukherji, had an informal talk with the Hon'ble the Minister and I am sure that in the course of that informal and private talk he must have heard that the Hon'ble the Minister is anxious to help the Calcutta University. And I am also sure that my friend the Education Minister will try his level best to find money from other sources. I am not one of those like my friend, Professor S. C. Mukherji, who have private audience with the Hon'ble Members and the Hon'ble Ministers; but I think that my friend might try something in that particular line.

There is one other thing which I should like to say before I sit down, and it is this: there is a certain amount of misconception that this University at Dacca is going to be nothing but a repetition of the old folly of the Calcutta University—my friend has not said it in so many words. Well, he need not have that fear. I had that fear in my mind; and I can assure him that there is no room for that. I went up to Mr. Hartog and asked him about it. He said that it is possible—and in fact he has got that idea in his mind—that the University will be a vocational university, as time rolls on and as more funds come into his hands. Therefore, it is not going to be the same thing as the Calcutta University, nor will it commit the same follies as the Calcutta University has been committing for the last few years. [At this stage the bell rang.] My time is up and nobody can tarry after his time is up and I must resume my seat.

Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: After the eloquent and potent appeal, which was made by the Hon'ble Minister in charge of Education, I thought that this amendment would be withdrawn. But I am glad that Dr. Suhrawardy was not present to move his amendment for that would have been the unkindest cut of all. (Several voices: "Hear, hear.") Dr. Suhrawardy represents a constituency which belongs to Eastern Bengal and he himself belongs to the Muhammadan community.

Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT: Suhrawardy is no longer the mover of the motion. Mr. D. C. Ghose was permitted to move it in the absence of Dr. Suhrawardy. It is his motion now.

Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: My humble submission is that I was simply saying that I was glad that Dr. Suhrawardy was absent and that Mr. D. C. Ghose moved the amendment which stood in his name. But Mr. D. C. Ghose found it very difficult to find what difference there was between the Dacca University and the Calcutta University. He himself admitted that the Dacca University was going to be a residential University and the difference was there, and it was a very material difference too. What we find in the university education is that the Calcutta University exercises some amount of control over the school hours or the college hours of the school or college inmates; but that the University is not able to exercise any efficient control over the private hours of the students. We also find that, if the student does not prepare himself properly, it is because he either mispends his private hours or does not utilise them properly. If his health is injured, it is also for his indiscretion during the private hours, and probably he is living in an unhealthy house, or he is not mixing with proper companions, or on account of his environments he is not able to participate in games and other physical exercises which go to develop his constitution. So, this Dacca University, being a residential University, will be able to exercise efficient control over the private hours of the students; and I think that Mr. D. C. Ghose will agree with me that this difference is a very material one.

Professor S. C. Mukherji has said that the professors, who were entertained by the Calcutta University at a moderate salary, have been taken away to Dacca at a much higher salary. That is, however, a matter of congratulation, because the number of high posts under the disposal of the Calcutta University is not many, and they are already occupied by able men no doubt. But there are other educationists, who should be given an opportunity of proving their worth; and I think the Vice-Chancellor of the Dacca University is giving them a very good opportunity. That is, therefore, a matter for congratulation and not for regret.

My friend, Professor S. C. Mukherji, insinuated that the Vice-Chancellor of the Dacca University was present here, because he was interested.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I object to the expression "insinuated." I never meant any insinuation, and I think that it is very unkind of my friend to say so.

Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: I think the interpretation of what my friend said, if I remember aright, was that Mr. Hartog was interested in the matter. But I may say that we are all encouraged by his presence here—

Mr. F. A. LARMOUR: Is the member in order in taking notice of, or of drawing the attention of this Council to, the presence of any stranger in the visitors' gallery? (Several voices: "Hear, hear.")

Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: That is not the Parliamentary practice.

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order!

Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: If I remember aright, in 1913, the Government of India granted a recurring grant of Rs. 5,00,000 to the Dacca University, and now an amount larger than

Rs. 60,00,000 stands to the credit of the Dacca University; and the Vice-Chancellor is entitled to call for this sum. The Government of Bengal, however, are unable to pay it; and although he wanted more than Rs. 16,00,000, the Hon'ble the Minister for Education was only able to give him Rs. 9,00,000. I think that that is a very fair amount; and having regard to the fact that the Dacca University is pregnant with possibilities of great magnitude, I think that no member of this Council should oppose the grant. The feeling in Eastern Bengal is very strong in this respect; and I think the disappointment will be very great if any portion of this grant is cut down. It may be remembered that this University scheme was originated in view of the backwardness of the Muhammadan population of Eastern Bengal, but I think it will be a gain to the whole of Bengal. In matters of education, I think that either Muhammadans or Hindus or Christians, all stand on a footing of equality; and if Bengal is to be developed, and if we are to contribute towards its prosperity, there should be no distinction as to its geographical borders. I, therefore, suggest that the demand for Rs. 9,00,000 to the Dacca University be granted and that the amendment be rejected by the Council.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I rise to oppose this motion. I deem it a great privilege, and let me add a matter of great pleasure, that I am able to extend my support and sympathy to one of our popular Ministers; for I feel that by extending such support, where support is needed, and not by casting our votes in an irresponsible fashion, that we are going to reap the benefits of representative institutions. At this fag-end of the debate, and with only 10 minutes to my credit, I cannot go into details; but I shall say a few words as regards the remarks that have been made by Professor S. C. Mukherji and my friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose. I hope I shall be able to dispose of the remarks of Mr. Ghose, by only saying that he is not quite correct when he says that as we are in a position of a judge, and that as details have not been supplied to us, we cannot do better than refuse this grant. It is well to remember that when the Minister for Education asks for this grant for the Dacca University, it is not possible for him to go into minute details. We have got to trust him; and we have also got to remember that it is not the Minister alone who is going to dispose of this sum; but that in disposing of the money that is placed to the credit of the Dacca University, there are responsible officers who are to associate themselves with the representatives of public opinion, and to thereby frame a scheme which will enable the authorities to fulfil the objects for which the Dacca University is going to be established.

As regards my friend, Professor S. C. Mukherji, he has made an appeal to us to dissociate our speech from feeling and to decide this question free from passion and prejudice. I am sorry that he himself introduced a lot of feeling into his speech; and if I heard him aright, my own impression is that I have seldom listened to a speech more full of feeling, excepting perhaps one delivered the day before yesterday in which an attempt has been made to cloud the real points at issue by asking us to decide the question not by appeal to reason but by appeal to feeling and feeling alone. Professor S. C. Mukherji has mentioned certain instances of appointments made by the Vice-Chancellor of the Dacca University, in which salaries have been paid on a much more liberal scale than have been or are being paid by the Calcutta University. I cannot repeat the names; but let us take as a typical case the instance of any one of those gentlemen whom he has named, and who was getting Rs. 300 per month here, but who has been appointed on a salary of Rs. 500 per month. Professor S. C. Mukherji knows very well that there are instances in which people who have got their homes in Western Bengal will not consent on any consideration whatever to accept appointments in Eastern Bengal. I know from personal experience that after the partition of Bengal, when the new province of Eastern Bengal and Assam was formed, Government had the utmost difficulty in inducing its officers to go over to Eastern Bengal; and in some cases I know, as a matter of fact, that officers had to be given promotion in order to induce them to join the cadre of the Eastern Bengal and Assam Government. That may be one reason.

Secondly, if the Calcutta University has not been quite generous to some of its officers, that is no reason why the Dacca University should be equally stingy. There are occasions on which a man's worth is not recognised; and there is also such a thing in the disposal of patronage, which, in ordinary language, we call jobbery. A man who is worth Rs. 50 may be paid Rs. 200 and a man who is worth Rs. 200 may be paid Rs. 50. That is no reason why, because a man gets a particular salary, we should create a distinction and say that there is anything like waste. As has been pointed out already, the appointments of the Dacca University are being scrutinised by a strong committee and there is every reason to believe that the utmost care is being taken not only to make the selections, but also to have a strict control over the expenditure.

Then, Professor S. C. Mukherji has said that Government have been very generous to the Dacca University and very stingy to the Calcutta University. He has said in fact that whereas we are giving to the Calcutta University about Rs. 1,00,000 or so, we have given about Rs. 9,00,000 to the Dacca University. My friend forgets that the contribution of Rs. 1,00,000 is not the only contribution which the Government makes towards the upkeep of the Calcutta University. What is this Calcutta University? It is a congeries of colleges held together by the common bond of an examination system. Government give not only this Rs. 1,00,000 but something more, and also all that is necessary for the upkeep of all the colleges, namely, the Presidency College, the Krishnagar College, and a host of other colleges, and if you add up all the grants the total will come up to half a crore. My friend seems also to forget that, while Government makes this generous contribution to the Calcutta University, the contribution that is now being made to the Dacca University, is not at all commensurate with the importance of the university that is coming into being. Besides, Government have committed themselves to contribute Rs. 50,00,000 as a grant to the Dacca University, not merely for the initial expenditure, but also for the recurring expenditure.

I shall not go into further details. Before I sit down, I wish to say a few words to my friends who have taken part in this debate, and have opposed the grant to the Dacca University. It has been said that those who have opposed this grant to the Dacca University are not actuated by motives of jealousy towards Dacca; but I have a contrary feeling. My own feeling has been that ever since Lord Hardinge announced that there would be this university in Dacca city—this long-promised, long-deferred long-wished-for university—Dacca—has been a sort of eyesore to the intellectual savants who control the destinies of the Calcutta University. I do not wish to go into this matter, but I wish to give this warning to my friends of Western Bengal, who rise up on every occasion, when funds are provided for Dacca, to try and take away from this provision—"Hands off," I say. If you raise this question in Council, you will cause a cleavage between the two sections of the province, which will be disastrous to the work of the administration. It is not merely on behalf of the Muhammadans of East Bengal but on behalf of the people of East Bengal in general, that I appeal to my friends to drop all opposition to this grant which the Minister wants for the Dacca University.

Rai JOCENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I am a native of the district of Dacca, and everything about its welfare must command my support. But, there is a higher interest than the interest of my own district. Year after year I have been pressing upon the Government that we spend very little money upon primary education, and we spend the bulk of our grant for education upon universities. Therefore, in the interests of the poor people of this country, I cannot, even in the cause of this University in my own district, support this additional burden which takes away from the grant for primary education. Further, the people of Dacca do not want this University in the form in which it is proposed to be established. Only last week I saw in the papers that the Dacca Peoples' Association waited in deputation on Dr. Hartog and told him that they did not want the duplication of a literary university; they wanted an agricultural college, a medical college and an engineering college. Dr. Hartog said in reply that they were not of a representative character. The papers in Dacca also shared the views of the Association. Indeed, wherever there is a new university established, the literary side is not given that prominence which is given to the technological side. Without the technological side, the engineering department, and agricultural department, there can be no university. That is the mainstay of a university. What I object to in the Dacca University is that so much money every year should be spent on mere literary education. My support of the amendment is not because I oppose the university; but I oppose the form in which it is sought to be established, and I say everybody in Eastern Bengal, every educated man, will support me in this demand that there should not be merely a literary college or university, but there should be a technological side attached to it. In this view alone I oppose the motion, not because I oppose the University, but because I am opposed to the form which it is assuming.

The PRESIDENT: I shall now ask the Hon'ble the Minister in charge to reply.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: This question has been debated at great length and arguments for and against have been advanced by more than one speaker. I therefore do not propose to enter into any detailed examination of the various arguments that have been advanced. I will try to reply generally but, although I shall try to be brief, I regret that owing to the length of the speeches, I may not be as brief as I would like to be.

My appeal to the House is "let there be more light and less heat," and I would say that if we are to get on, it will not do for the East and West to quarrel, for Hindus and Muhammadans to quarrel; let there be more of love and justice and less of hate and rivalry. With these preliminary remarks, I shall briefly touch upon the various points.

The first point to remember is, that for more than nine years this University has been promised, not a denominational university for Muhammadans alone, as was made very clear by Lord Hardinge when Sir Rash Behari Ghose waited as the head of a deputation before him, but it was to be a university for Hindus and Muhammadans, for all classes.

The next important point to remember is that this is a residential university, and a teaching university. As regards the grant of Rs. 5,00,000 to this University, without going into details, let me point out to the Council, what I have already pointed out, that the cost of the Dacca College alone is about Rs. 2,00,000 a year; the cost of the Presidency College is about Rs. 3,71,000. Taking these two colleges costing Rs. 2,00,000 and Rs. 3,71,000, respectively, we find that the recurring grant of Rs. 5,00,000 for the Dacca University is less than the total expenditure for these two colleges. If you are at all serious about establishing this university, then don't appeal to me for reducing the Rs. 9,00,000 to Rs. 8,00,000. On what data am I going to accept your appeal? Here, I have got a set of responsible persons, persons who are acting under statutory powers, who have come forward with a scheme; according to one of these schemes, we shall require an expenditure of Rs. 5,00,000; according to another, Rs. 7,50,000. Regard being had to our financial difficulties, I came to the conclusion that Rs. 5,00,000 would be better for a beginning. It is irresponsible for the members of this House to suggest a reduction of this amount. It is not the business of this House to cut down definite schemes. We are here to pass the Budget on the basis of a scheme; when the time comes for spending the money, the local Government will take reasonable care to safeguard the spending of this money. The members of this House can, by questions, safeguard the spending of this money; there will also be a committee appointed to the Education Department who can try to safeguard the spending of this money. It was one of the greatest surprises of my life to hear Mr. D. C. Ghose, who only the other day was holding forth, when discussing the question of the preparation of the paper-books, that it was not the business of the House to go into details. And he is one of the first persons to-day to point out that it is our business to go into details. It was very surprising to hear Mr. Ghose—

Mr. D. C. GHOSE: May I say one word by way of personal explanation? The other day I said that Council ought not to assume the functions of the administration.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: That is precisely my complaint, but I quite realise that Mr. Ghose does not like this charge; that is another matter. It is a question of going into details. I was told that I have not given sufficient details to the House. I admit that charge; if I wanted to go into the details of a big scheme like the Dacca University, it would have taken me hours. This fault is not mine; it is the fault of those members of this House who want to arrogate to themselves the position of administrators, when they really hold only the purse-strings of the nation.

Another point to be remembered is that the Dacca University is not a State university; it is a university created under a statute; the nation has to find the money for its maintenance; it is, therefore, quite right that those who find the money should scrutinise the expenditure; that time has not yet come.

An unfortunate discussion which I deprecated in my opening speech has after all taken place; and I regret it very much. I have got to enter into the respective merits of the Calcutta and Dacca Universities.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Is the Hon'ble the Minister in order?

The PRESIDENT: Yes, he is.

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: It has been said that only Rs. 1,28,000 is provided for the Calcutta University. That is absolutely erroneous. In the Budget members will find that there are grants for Government colleges alone to the extent of Rs. 12,62,000, grants to secondary schools, Rs. 13,37,000, besides grants-in-aid to private secondary schools. Where would the Calcutta University be, if we had not such a large number of schools and colleges to feed it up? We all know the huge income of the Calcutta University earned from fees from the matriculation students alone. Would there be so many secondary schools in this province but for grants of this Government? We all know that the University derives a large income from the Intermediate students and B. A. students. Where would the Calcutta University be but for the fees realised from these students? But as I have stated I shall certainly try to do the best I can for the Calcutta University but one has to remember that heaven helps those who help themselves and I am sorry that Calcutta University has not helped itself. If the University which has so many eminent men in its Syndicate and Senate do not care to read the Government of India Act and the Devolution Rules, who is to be blame? Not the Government of Bengal. No application was made before the old Government of Bengal and it is not right either for the old Government or for the Education Minister to act like an autocrat. We must act under the powers we have under the Government of India Act. Even if I wanted to be kind to the Calcutta University, I could not give Rs. 2,00,000 or Rs. 20,00,000 unless I was authorised under the constitution or authorised by the statute to do so. If I wanted to make such an attempt I am sure Professor S. C. Mukherji would have come down upon me and charged me with acting in an unconstitutional manner.

Then a criticism has been levelled that the Dacca University has not provided for vocational education. Members forget that there must be ordinary general education, scientific education, before the question of vocational education can arise. Those who are familiar with the objects of the Dacca University know that vocational education will come, but there can be no provision for it, unless the provision for general education is made. After all Rs. 5,00,000 is less than the yearly expenses of two colleges.

There has been a great deal of criticism about the provision for high salaries in the Dacca University. I admit that I find it difficult to deal with a question like that in a place like this. I happen to know the case of a gentleman, whose name I shall not mention—I do not want to go into personalities. He was offered a post in the Indian Educational Service in the Punjab on Rs. 1,000 a month, with special allowances. If the Calcutta University managed to get his services for a lower sum, then that University is lucky, or it may be that for other reasons he did not care to accept a higher salary. It does not pay anyone to be stingy. If you want to attract good men, you must pay for them. After all,

Rs. 5,00,000 is not a large sum. I do not want to go into any detailed examination of the criticisms levelled at me, but may I be permitted to repeat to the representatives of the Calcutta University that those who cannot help themselves cannot possibly expect others to help them.

One more explanation and I have done. I have asked only for Rs. 4,00,000 of capital grant. The Dacca University has got about Rs. 60,00,000 earmarked for expenditure. If anything, the Dacca University has the right to complain that the Government of Bengal have not been just to it. The members who spoke on behalf of the Calcutta University have no right to complain. Let me conclude by saying that I hope that this bitterness will pass, and in future we shall deal with Calcutta and Dacca on their own merits, and not from the point of view of mutual rivalry.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: Having regard to the strong feeling evinced in the course of this debate—

The PRESIDENT: You are not in order in rising to address the Council again.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I must explain myself. Having regard to the strong feeling evinced in the course of the debate by my fellow members of Eastern Bengal, I think it right to withdraw this amendment.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: I oppose.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: May I know if in this Rs. 9,00,000 the grant of Rs. 2,00,000 is included?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: No.

The amendment (No. 80) was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn Motion No. 81 was then put and lost.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I understood it was decided yesterday that these motions relating to hill and Dacca allowances would be withdrawn.

The following motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn. "That the demand for hill and Dacca allowances and hill journey charges in account No. 31 be refused."

The following motion which stood in the name of Mr. D. C. Ghose was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn: "That the demand for grant for Education (item No. 31 in the Budget estimates) be reduced by Rs. 4,40,000."

The following original motion (No. 79) was then put and carried: "That a sum of Rs. 1,06,32,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '31—Education' (excluding European Education)."

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned till Friday, the 8th March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Friday, the 18th March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 115 nominated and elected members.

The PRESIDENT(the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda) Order! Order! The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler.

Voting of Grants.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EUROPEAN EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler) moved "that the Council be pleased to pass a vote of Rs. 6,93,000 under the head 31—Education—European Education—on behalf of the schools for the education of the children of the domiciled European and Anglo-Indian Community."

In connection with the figure of Rs. 6,93,000 reference may be made to the table on page 38 of the document with the grey cover, entitled "Budget of the Government of Bengal for 1921-22." It will be seen that this table contains a heading "Budget Estimate for 1921-22," and that this heading is divided into two sub-heads, viz., "Reserved Heads" and "Transferred Heads." It is to the column "Reserved Heads" that I invite attention. This sub-head is divided into three columns, namely, "Non-voted," "Voted" and "Total." The "Reserved Heads," so far as education is concerned, are not confined to European schools. They also cover the education of Indians in the excluded areas of Darjeeling and the Chittagong Hill Tracts. To the table on page 38 there is a note appended to the effect that the figures in italics represent expenditure on European Education. It is a little difficult to distinguish the figures in italics from the others, but all the figures in the "Voted column" under the "Reserved Heads" represent expenditure on European Education. The European Education provision shown in the non-voted column covers (a) Rs. 2,64,000 shown against Government Schools—General, (b) Rs. 10,000 shown against Inspection, and (c) Rs. 2,68,000 shown against Grants-in-aid—a total provision of Rs. 5,42,000. Therefore, the position is that the total provision proposed for European Education is Rs. 12,35,000, towards which the Council is asked to vote Rs. 6,93,000.

But why has Rs. 5,42,000 out of a total provision of Rs. 12,35,000 been excluded from the Council's vote? Rupees 10,000 of this represents the salary of the Inspector of European Schools, who is an Imperial Service officer. The provision of Rs. 2,64,000 against Government schools—General, and the provision of Rs. 2,68,000 against Grants-in-aid are both made on account of institutions which are located in the Barjeeling district, and as such, the charges on their account do not come under the vote of the Council. This exclusion is the result of the statutory rules, and Government have, in face of these rules been compelled to declare out of order certain motions which were submitted for the reduction of the grants to which I have just referred. It is, however, realised that the exclusion of European schools in reserved areas from the Council's vote of supplies was not one of the objects for which certain areas were excluded from the general control of the Council. These provisions cannot be put to the vote of the Council, and consequently the motions for reduction cannot be moved. But, if the movers of these motions desire an opportunity of stating before the Council their views with regard to these provisions, it will be open to them to move resolutions under the rules for the discussion of matters of general public interest. Government will welcome the opportunity, which will thus be afforded them, of explaining why this additional expenditure was included in the Budget.

The amount, then, which I ask the Council to vote, viz., Rs. 6,93,000, comes wholly under the minor head E—General Expenditure, and covers three items only, viz., Rs. 13,000 shown against Inspection, Rs. 6,35,000 shown against Grants-in-aid, and Rs. 45,000 shown against Scholarships. The first charge represents the cost of the office establishment of the Inspector of European Schools. The proposed provision of Rs. 45,000 for scholarships calls for no comment. For the details of the proposed vote of Rs. 6,35,000 for grants-in-aid, I must refer to page 104 of the Budget.

The total voted provision of Rs. 6,35,000 is made up of the following items:—Rs. 5,24,000 shown under 1-B against Secondary Schools, Rs. 6,000 shown under 1-B against Technical and Industrial Schools, Rs. 99,000 shown under 2-B against Building grants, and Rs. 6,000 shown under 2-B against Furniture and Equipment Grant. The side readings under 1-B are misleading. The proposed provision of Rs. 5,24,000 is not for secondary schools only, but for both secondary and elementary schools outside the excluded areas. The non-voted provision of Rs. 2,60,000 is for both secondary and elementary schools within the excluded areas, and includes the additional grant of Rs. 80,000 for the Kalimpong Homes.

The provision of Rs. 5,24,000 for grants-in-aid includes the following new provisions, viz.—

- (a) an additional grant to the Loreto Convent, Entally, Rs. 20,000;
- (b) an additional salary grant to the Calcutta Free School, Rs. 9,000.

As motions have been submitted in connection with these items, as also with the proposal to provide an additional sum of Rs. 50,000 for building grants to European schools, further explanations can best be given in answer thereto.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: After hearing Sir Henry Wheeler and in view of certain information which was given to me yesterday, I beg to ask leave of the House to withdraw my motion.

It was as follows: "That the demand for Rs. 50,000 as additional building grants to European schools be reduced to Rs. 25,000."

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I also withdraw the next motion as well.

It was as follows: "That the demand for Rs. 9,000 as additional salary grant to the Calcutta Free School be reduced to Rs. 4,500."

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I also beg to withdraw the next motion.

It was as follows: "That the demand for Rs. 20,000 as additional grant to Loreto Convent, Entally, be reduced to Rs. 10,000."

The original motion of Sir Henry Wheeler "that a sum of Rs. 6,93,000 be granted for expenditure under the head 31—Education—European Education," was then put and agreed to.

MINISTER in charge of MEDICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea) moved "that the demand of Rs. 45,12,000 be voted by the Council as the grant under head '32—Medical' for the year 1921-22."

To take the amount under refunds which is the smallest, first, with a view to obviate the unnecessary swelling of the revenue and expenditure accounts, the Government of India have ordered that all refunds from revenue, in the Civil estimates and in the accounts, must be shown to be deductions from the actual collections. As, however, all revenue collected is deposited in full into the treasury, the refunds, which represent the repayment of excess amounts collected, are really expenditure which requires the vote of the Council and therefore we have included it in the demand for grant.

Sir, in moving this demand for grant under the head "Medical" I desire to point out that it is, and has been, the settled policy of the Government to widen the scope and extent of Medical relief and to add to the number of qualified doctors in the province. It was observed in the course of the debate, which took place the other day in connection with the Budget, that the number of qualified doctors in this province is 1 per 42,000 of the population. It is a grievous complaint and I am sure I speak the sense of this Council that it is, and it ought to be the duty of the Government and the representatives of the people to combine, to minimise and to reduce this great evil. In accordance with the policy to which I have referred, extended accommodation has been added to the Campbell Medical School and the Dacca Medical School. In pursuance of the same policy, a medical school will be opened at Burdwan in the course of the calendar year and a sum of Rs. 49,000 has been budgeted for expenditure which is now before the Council. Provision has also been made for a Tropical School of Medicine, with which it has been decided to amalgamate the Institute of Hygiene. Sir, considerable doubts and misgivings exist in the public mind with regard to this Tropical School of Medicine, and it seems to me that perhaps a few words of explanation from me as representing the Government will help to dissipate the misgivings which prevail in connection with this matter. The object of this institution is twofold. In the first place, it is to conduct research in connection with tropical diseases; in the second place, it is to be a post-graduate college for training in subjects relating to tropical diseases. Sir, the need of research in these days is unquestionable. Research extends the bounds of human knowledge, and the medical practitioner takes advantage of the knowledge thus placed at his disposal for ministering to his patients. Thus it is necessary that there should be a research institution of this kind. The scientist working in the laboratory is the ally, the comrade and colleague of the doctor looking after his patients. We have not got such an institution in this province. We want one urgently and this one will supply the need.

In the next place, it is to be a post-graduate college for education in connection with tropical diseases. We have a post-graduate college in arts. Thanks to the liberality and princely benefactions of Sn Tarak Nath Palit and Sir Rash Behari Ghose, whose death we mourn—thanks to their princely benefactions we have got a post-graduate College in Science. Why not have a post-graduate college in medicine in connection with tropical diseases? Calcutta seems to me to be the most suitable place for conducting investigations of this kind, for here we stand face to face with tropical diseases and we can study them on the spot. Therefore the need for a post-graduate college here for the purpose of studying tropical diseases seems to me to be beyond question. Furthermore, there is this fact to be borne in mind, and I appeal to my friend Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, who is so very keen about the expansion of Ayurvedic institutions, that the Tropical School of Medicine will investigate the properties of indigenous drugs and thus be helpful to the cultivation of Ayurvedic medicine. It seems to me, therefore, that the need of an institution of this kind in this province is established beyond all doubt, but, Sir, there is at the back of the minds of many of my friends a sort of suspicion—I have discovered it in the course of conversation with them—that this institution will not afford facilities to Indians for the attainment of distinctions, to which they are entitled by their investigations into tropical diseases. I wish to say at once that there is not the slightest foundation for this apprehension.

In this noble temple of science there shall be no racial qualification or disqualification. All will have the amplest opportunities, provided they have got the necessary qualifications, for the highest distinctions. All will have the fullest opportunities for cultivating those gifts and faculties with which nature has endowed them. In a matter of research, I am perfectly convinced that the policy of Government in connection with this institution will be the removal of all qualifications and disqualifications founded upon racial considerations. I desire to make this statement in regard to this institution because of the misapprehension and misunderstanding which prevail on the subject. We have provided for expenditure for the Tropical School of Medicine which, I hope, will be opened in the course of the next year, and there will be clinical arrangements in connection with it. Of course there will be receipts, and the receipts will be taken note of.

I pass on next to the Belgachia School of Medicine, for which a provision of Rs. 4,00,000 has been made in the Budget. Referring to the Belgachia School of Medicine, I cannot help adverting for a moment to the great loss which the country has sustained by the death of Colonel Sarbadhikary, who was the President of the Belgachia College Council. He was not only a prince among surgeons but a great public benefactor, and to him we are largely indebted for the organisation of the University Corps, which I hope will soon be in a flourishing condition. It was represented to the Government that the Belgachia School wanted a sum of Rs. 6,17,000 for necessary improvements and in order to comply with the University requirements. We agreed to make them a grant of Rs. 4,00,000, provided they were able to secure the balance from other sources. On this understanding we have made the provision to which I have referred in the Budget. In the next place, I desire to call attention to the provision of Rs. 15,000 which is to be found in the Budget as expenditure for charitable dispensaries in the mufassal. To me nothing has been so heartening or stimulating since the tenure of my office as the interest which the bhadralog class in Bengal are beginning to feel in the establishment of dispensaries in the mufassal. They are beginning to realise that these dispensaries do a large amount of public good, and to me it is a matter of very great gratification to find middle class people not overburdened with the wealth of this world coming forward with substantial contributions for the purpose of establishing these dispensaries. May this spirit grow and deepen for the benefit of medical relief and the alleviation of human suffering in this province.

Then, Sir, on the expenditure side there has been an increase in medical establishment and this is due to a twofold cause. In the first place, funds have to be provided in accordance with the orders of the Government of India sanctioned by the Secretary of State for increased pay granted to Assistant Surgeons, Civil and Military. In consequence f these orders, the revised estimates for the year show an increase, and also provision has been made on the expenditure side for next year.

Then, Sir, another reason for the increase is that the septennial examinations, which used to be held for Assistant Surgeons, have now been replaced by a post-graduate course in the Medical College, for which a provision has been made of Rs. 3,000.

Sir, the care of lunatics is one of the concerns of all civilised States, and it is the concern of the Government of Bengal. A contribution is provided for in the Budget to be made to the Government of Bihar and Orissa for a central lunatic asylum for Indians, and also expenditure has been provided for sending European lunatics to the Ranchi Lunatic Asylum.

Sir, next comes the provision for the Eden Hospital. It will be in the recollection of old members of this Council—I am sure my friend Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur will remember it—that Sir Sibratan Sircar moved a resolution on this subject for the extension of the Eden Hospital before the old Council. The resolution was withdrawn on an undertaking being given by the Government. In redemption of that promise, and also in order to meet the growing wants of the Hospital and the increased requirements of the Calcutta University, it has been found necessary to extend the Eden Hospital, and a sum of Rs. 80,000 has been provided for the necessary extensions. Further, we have provided a sum of Rs. 1,00,000 for a hostel to accommodate Medical College students. Last year we purchased land at a cost of Rs. 7,00,000; the land has to be built upon, and Rs. 1,00,000 has been provided for this purpose.

Sir, there is a grant which we are accustomed to make to the Surgeon-General for minor works. This grant in ordinary years comes up to Rs. 50,000. In consequence of financial stringency we have been obliged to reduce it to Rs. 35,000. The Surgeon-General will be compelled to postpone some of the necessary works. The more urgent ones he will take in hand, but I mention this fact in order to point out to the Council the economic lines upon which the Budget has been framed. All the same, Sir, our expenditure side represents a record, for we have budgeted for a sum of Rs. 52,24,000—a figure which we never budgeted in connection with the Medical Department in Bengal. Sir, having made these observations, I beg to move that a sum of Rs. 45,12,000 be granted for expenditure under the head “32—Medical.”

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur moved “that the demand for Rs. 40,000 for the increase of the pay of the Military Assistant Surgeons be reduced to Rs. 20,000.”

In doing so, I wish to lay before this House certain facts and figures. I find that a provision has been made for an increase in the pay of Assistant Surgeons, for which a grant of Rs. 50,000 is asked for and, as far as I have been able to gather from the Civil List and other papers at my disposal—I regret I could not get the specific figures from the Department—the figures stand thus: 130 Civil Assistant Surgeons—their pay is graded from Rs. 200—450, and 34 Military Assistant Surgeons—their pay is graded from Rs. 350—750. My proposition is that instead of Rs. 40,000, Rs. 20,000 be granted, and that will give an increment of Rs. 600 per head, to each of the 34 Military Assistant Surgeons per annum. I have had some conversation with the Minister (I hope it will not be taken as a private conversation), who told me that the Assistant Surgeons may rise to the post of Civil Surgeon. On examining the Civil List I find that only five Assistant Surgeons out of nearly 140 rose to the post of Civil Surgeon. This is in the recently published Civil List.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: What is the date of the Civil List?

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: 3rd January, 1921. We got it only a week ago. If that argument holds good in the case of Civil Assistant Surgeons, I would show from this very book that these Military Assistant Surgeons can also rise to the rank of Civil Surgeons, and on page 388 you will find that there are certain Military Assistant Surgeons who have also risen to the rank of Civil Surgeons. I do not think, therefore, that there is any bar to any qualified Military Assistant Surgeon rising to that position, and neither any one in this House or outside it would complain if any qualified Military Assistant Surgeon is promoted to the post of Civil Surgeon. I do not know what are the academic or other qualifications of Military Assistant Surgeons, but I find from the list of titles appended to the names of a large number of 140 Assistant Surgeons, they are almost M.B.'s of the Calcutta Medical College, and therefore, if such educated and qualified men can be obtained on a salary of Rs. 200 rising the maximum salary of the Military Assistant Surgeons to Rs. 700 or even a little over that. On these grounds, Sir, I think, when we are all anxious for economy, and our Hon'ble Minister is also trying his best to get funds in order to take up the gigantic task which he has undertaken—the improvement of sanitation, and also the natural ambition which he has in his mind to drive out malaria from Bengal—I think in this way if he goes on increasing the expenditure on establishment, he will not be able to find funds for that purpose. Although this is a small item I believe that it will be admitted that the cost of establishment has increased and it is time perhaps, when we are passing this item, that we should suggest that some reduction may be made under this head. I therefore formally move the reduction of the allotment from Rs. 40,000 to Rs. 20,000.

Rai JOCENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I beg to oppose the motion. I do not believe in going against everybody. There is little ground for dissatisfaction because these Military Assistant Surgeons are mostly, if not all, Anglo-Indians and they get a little higher pay. Sir, I wish to live in amity with the domiciled Anglo-Indian community. It is true that these gentlemen do not yet regard Indians as fellow-nationals and they treat Indians, like Europeans, with pride in their port and defiance in their eyes. But this state of things will shortly pass away. We have got some power by our large majority among numbers, and I do not wish to use this to their disadvantage. Sir, we want so to act with the domiciled community that they should consider us as their fellow-nationals, and Hindus, Muhammadans, Christians, whether Indians or Europeans, should form one great Indian nation. With these words, I oppose this motion.

The Hon'ble SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I am sure, Sir, I feel, that in view of the friendly and conciliatory attitude of my friend in regard to the whole question, that after the explanation, which I am about to submit has been placed before this Council, my friend will see his way to withdraw his motion. I want to point out, in the first place, that these Military Assistant Surgeons are a part of what is called the mobilised military reserve—they are a part of the army. But certain civil appointments are given to them and a number of Civil Surgeoncies are allotted to them. At the present moment they hold five Civil Surgeoncies. I have made enquiries as to the way in which they are doing their work, and the highest authority in the service—the Surgeon-General—has assured me that they are performing their duties with ability and efficiency. I do not think we are entitled to call into question such testimony coming from the Surgeon-General. Therefore, here are these Civil Surgeons—Military Assistant Surgeons undoubtedly they are—performing their duties with ability and efficiency. They have been appointed to other positions and the Surgeon-General says that they have performed their duties well. But their financial condition is pitiful, and here again I quote the testimony of the Surgeon-General, who says: “With rigid rates of pay fixed a generation ago, it is impossible for them to long remain in civil employment where their conditions are always worse than in the military side. It is impossible to expect these men—and that I think is most important—to give whole-hearted and contented service under the prevailing conditions of their service. As a class they fill difficult and troublesome appointments willingly and loyally.” I attach the utmost importance to the concluding words of the Surgeon-General. If you employ these men, you must make them happy and contented. If you keep them in a wretched financial position, they will be miserable, they will be dissatisfied, they will be inefficient, and they will not perform their duties well. That is the whole position. The Government of India directed that there should be—and this is the crucial point—a temporary increase of pay—mark the word “temporary”—owing to the rise in prices, subject to the whole question being reconsidered when things have assumed their normal condition. As a matter of fact you have afforded relief to all classes of public servants—read the Budget—you have provided Rs. 40,00,000 for the increase of pay to the ministerial establishment. And here the Government of India direct that you should give a temporary allowance to these men in order to afford necessary relief owing to high prices. It is an appeal for justice, it is an appeal to masters who, it is hoped, will treat their servants in a generous and liberal spirit and make them happy and satisfied; and I am sure you are not going to controvert the orders of the Government of India based on reasons so sound, and upon which you yourselves have acted in other matters, as for instance the ministerial establishment. You have given them Rs. 40,00,000 and will you grudge this money to the poor Military Assistant Surgeons?

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: What is their number?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: Their number is 35. The number is very limited. My friend has made a comparison between Civil Assistant Surgeons and Military Assistant Surgeons. The Civil Assistant Surgeons have got a permanent increase of pay—not merely a temporary one—but a permanent increase beginning from Rs. 200 and rising up to Rs. 450. Again, my friend is all wrong about the figures regarding the number of Civil Surgeoncies held by the Civil Assistant Surgeons. If he had taken the trouble of looking down the page and also looking over the next page, he would have found that there are not five but seven Civil Surgeoncies held by them at the present moment, and the number will soon rise to nine. Not only that. You have already seven Civil Surgeons and there are a number of appointments reserved for the Civil Assistant Surgeons from which the Military Assistant Surgeons are excluded.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: There are similar appointments for Military Assistant Surgeons also.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I am speaking of Civil Assistant Surgeons. I find there are 29 such appointments—4 Assistant Chemical Examiners, 4 Assistant Professors in the Medical College, 17 Teachers of Medical Schools and 4 Assistant Bacteriologists. They get allowances over and above their pay from Rs. 50 to Rs. 150 a month. Not only that, but the Surgeon-General has recommended an increase and the case is pending before me. This is the situation, and surely the Civil Assistant Surgeons are very well off. My friend may rest assured that, if their condition in any way suffers by comparison with the Military Assistant Surgeons, it would be my duty to rectify it. I hope, therefore, that having regard to these circumstances, my friend will see his way to withdraw the motion.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I just ask whether it is not a fact that, from the very nature of their work, these Military Assistant Surgeons cannot enjoy private practice like the Civil Assistant Surgeons?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: Yes, that is a fact.

The motion was then put and lost.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I formally move "that the demand for Rs. 75,000 for grants to the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institute be reduced to Rs. 25,000," and in doing so, I wish to state that it is my desire more to take the opportunity to ventilate certain points than to urge this motion for reduction.

I hope, Sir, that the facts, which I wish to bring forward, will have due consideration at the hands of the Hon'ble Minister.

Rai JOCEMDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I rise to a point of order. The member had every right to ventilate grievances when the Budget was being discussed, but if he says at this stage that he would ventilate certain grievances and would not press the motion, is he in order?

The PRESIDENT: The Rai Bahadur has moved his motion formally and he may urge anything which is relevant to that motion. I do not think he is out of order.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I have no desire to turn a somersault like my friend. I wanted to state that I did not intend to ask for a division, but still I thought it necessary to move my motion in order to put certain facts before the Council. You will find on page 109 of the Budget Estimates that last year a sum of Rs. 6,500 was paid as grant for the training of pupils, dais, etc., and the amount expended was only Rs. 6,000. Rupees 75,282 was budgeted last year for the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institute and the actual expenditure was Rs. 93,000. This year Rs. 75,000 has been budgeted for the Calcutta Nurse's Institute. Rupees 16,200 was budgeted last year for Lady Minto's Nursing Association and the actual expenditure was Rs. 11,000. This year Rs. 10,800 has been budgeted for the same Institution. Last year Rs. 5,800 was budgeted for Lady Canning's Homes for the Training of Nurses and the actual expenditure was Rs. 6,000, and this year Rs. 5,800 has been budgeted for it. One thing I wish to point out here is that for the training of pupils and dais Rs. 6,500 was budgeted for the whole province and only Rs. 6,000 was actually spent for the purpose, and that Rs. 93,000 was spent for the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institute, although Rs. 75,000 was budgeted for it. I would also like to point out that the total grant for medical purposes for 1919-20 was Rs. 1,02,244, and out of this, Rs. 75,000 was budgeted for the Calcutta Nurses' Institute. In 1920-21 the total grant was Rs. 1,10,000, and out of this, Rs. 85,400 was spent for the Calcutta Nurses' Institute, and in the ensuing year, when the total grant is going to be Rs. 99,000, a sum of Rs. 75,000 has been budgeted for this institution. My point is this: That for the whole province you spend Rs. 6,400 for the training of pupils and dais and you spent Rs. 75,000 for the Calcutta Nurses' Institute, and nearly Rs. 11,000 for Lady Minto's Nursing Institution. The Calcutta Nurses' Institute was started in 1859 by Lady Canning for the training of nurses. It is a very useful institution, no doubt, but what I find is this, that last year 183 nurses were trained and they were employed only in the Medical College Hospital and the Presidency General Hospital. When this institute was started the object was to supply trained nurses to the leading hospitals in Calcutta. There are other hospitals in Calcutta besides the two hospitals named by me, viz., the Campbell Hospital, the Mayo Hospital, the Sambhunath Pandit Hospital, and I do not find that these Hospitals are supplied with nurses from this institute. Personally I am not at all anxious to cripple the resources of this institute; but looking to their report, I find that their work is very restricted, and it is necessary that, if we are to continue our grant, we must ask them to enlarge their scope and also ask them to take a broader outlook. For the training of nurses for the whole Presidency a sum of Rs. 6,000 only has been provided, and a sum of Rs. 75,000 has been provided for the training of nurses in Calcutta. This shows a great disparity in the figures. No doubt the nurses of the institute render excellent service to the Presidency General Hospital and the Medical College Hospital, but the bulk of the poor people, especially Indians, are not accommodated in the Presidency General Hospital. They generally go to the Campbell, the Mayo, the Sambhunath and the Howrah hospitals. Therefore I think it is necessary to bring this matter into prominence, so that something may be done to enlarge the scope of this institute, so that it may render more useful service to the community at large.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I am sorry I have to oppose my friend Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur in this matter. He ventures to express the hope that something may be done to enlarge the scope of the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institute, and at the same time he wants to cut down the grant allotted to them. I cannot understand this policy. If you have got to enlarge the scope of an institute, which he has described as a useful institution, then where is the room for asking that this grant be not voted? If it is a useful institution, let it live, let it thrive, and let it grow. Why do you come and say—let us not give them the money? There is no meaning in that. Then my friend said that the work of this institute was very much restricted. If my friend had any idea—I mean he has the idea, but he did not express it—it was due to the number of the nurses being very limited. A nurse has got to sit by the side of a patient for days and days together, watching her patient through sleepless days and nights. It is true that we have not got a large number of them, and the institute cannot supply the nurses that are wanted. But it is beyond question that it is a useful institution and it is beyond question that it is a noble institution—one of the noblest institutions that England has brought into this country, one for which we ought to be grateful to her; and above all, it is an institution in aid of suffering humanity. It does not admit of caste or race or creed or anything of that kind. There is another thing to remember. Your Hindu home, your joint family system, is dissolving every day. You have no longer a widowed aunt or widowed sister to sit and watch you at the time of illness. Under the influence of Western ideas you have got rid of them. As you have driven them out, you must have these nursing sisters and mothers to watch by the side of your death-bed. Either call them back, call back the widowed sister or the widowed sister-in-law. Give them food and everything that they may require, and they will nurse you during your illness and give you comfort and solace at the death-bed. That is the one way doing it. But if you do not want to do it, you must have a system of nurses, if you want comfort at the time of illness, of misery, or of grief.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: I beg to support this resolution on a matter of principle. Some members of this Council asked for medical relief in the mufassal, but their questions have not received sympathetic treatment at the hands of the Minister. In reply to Babu Brojendra Kishor Ray Chaudhuri regarding a very bad type of malaria in the Tangail subdivision, the Hon'ble Minister in charge said on the 14th of March that Government had received no communication, and that it was the duty of the local authorities to take steps. If I may be permitted to read another reply—

The PRESIDENT: You cannot read out the replies. You may refer to them. It is understood that members are cognizant of answers given to questions during the same session of the Council.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: I was only saying that the mufassal has received unsympathetic treatment at the hands of the Minister. To another question his reply was—

The PRESIDENT: I have already said that you cannot read the reply. Members are already in possession of it.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: The fact is this that, whenever any question for improving the sanitary condition in the mufassal is brought forward, it receives very unsympathetic treatment. Now, Sir, the institute for nurses in Calcutta may be very good, but these nurses would only minister to the needs of the Calcutta people, and they would scarcely go to help the people of the mufassal. The local authorities in the mufassal, with very small resources in their hands cannot improve insanitary conditions, and yet they are expected to do it. Then why should not this institute be supported by the Calcutt Corporation, which has got a very big income? Sir, I hear a Calcutt member saying that the Corporation has no means. But I can tell him that the same thing may be said of mufassal municipalities and district boards. They have got many works to do and they cannot afford to look to these things. Therefore, on principle, I support this resolution. My point is that you accord the same treatment to the mufassal as you do to Calcutta.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: In reply to the motion, I desire to repudiate with some emphasis the charge which has been brought against the Ministry of Public Health that we are unsympathetic in our treatment of the mufassal, when complaints are made that diseases are prevalent in the mufassal. The instance of Tangail has been cited. I desire to point out to my friend that the prevalence of kala-azar in Tangail has been the subject of the most anxious consideration on the part of the Ministry of Public Health. As soon as I learnt that there was this disease in the Tangail subdivision I consulted Dr. Bentley and I asked him what could be done and should be done, and I also told him that we must take prompt action. I further asked him to wire to the District Board at once requesting them to consider the feasibility of starting a bacteriological laboratory at Tangail for the microscopic examination of the blood, as it was difficult to distinguish between kala-azar and malaria. If the diagnosis is wrong—I am not a doctor, but I can say that if quinine is administered in the case of kala-azar, then the whole treatment becomes fruitless and no good result follows by the administration of quinine. It is of the first importance that the diagnosis should be correct, and the diagnosis can only be tested by the microscopic examination of the blood. As soon as the information was given to me that there was a serious type of malaria or kala-azar at Tangail, as soon as I got the information I placed myself in communication with the Sanitary Commissioner and asked him to indicate to the local authorities the feasibility of establishing a laboratory. Am I indifferent to the case of the mufassal where kala-azar is raging there? I want a reply from my friend. I think that after this explanation he will be fair and generous enough to withdraw his charge.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: The thing is this: We were not aware of these facts.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: Before you brought the charge you might have inquired of me—

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: But, Sir, as I was going to

The PRESIDENT: You may withdraw the charge, or offer an explanation. But you cannot make another speech.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: In view of the assurance given by the Hon'ble Minister that he has been treating the mufassal sympathetically and will also do so in future, I withdraw my charge.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I am in the deepest sympathy with the object of my friend and I may tell him that there is at the present moment a case under investigation with regard to the prevalence of malarial fever in the Putia subdivision of the Rajshahi district—I think my friend Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri knows it. There the death-rate exceeds the birth-rate and, as soon as the facts were brought to my notice, I sent the papers to the Sanitary Commissioner and we are concerting measures for the purpose of starting an investigation. We are as anxious for the mufassal, as for Calcutta, in regard to all proposals for the improvement of the public health.

A statement has been made by my friend that this grant will only benefit Calcutta and not the mufassal, but my friend overlooks the fact that nurses are trained in the Medical College, and thus the benefit will diffuse itself over the mufassal.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Do all the nurses get their training in the Medical College?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: Not all the nurses. I think you have made a mistake: you did not quite understand me. What I said was this: the nurses give training to the Indian dais who spread over the country, and in that way the mufassal will be benefited to some extent at least, partly from the existence of this institution in Calcutta.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Is it not a fact that only 10 native dais were trained last year?

The PRESIDENT: I think that is more by way of an argument than asking for an explanation. I think the Hon'ble Minister should be allowed to go on with his reply without constant interruption.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I think it is necessary that the members should know something about this institution, because it seems to me that there is a considerable amount of misconception with regard to it. This institution was founded in 1859 through the influence and patronage of Lady Canning, the wife of Lord Canning, the first Viceroy of India—a name cherished in grateful remembrance by my countrymen, for his rule was tempered with justice and clemency. Lady Canning gave her all to India—she died in India—she sleeps on the banks of the Ganges in the beautiful grounds attached to the Government Park at Barrackpore. This institution was founded through her influence in 1859, and since 1863 it has been obtaining a grant from Government. It is an institution of mercy and beneficence, transcending all considerations of race, religion and creed, and I know of no sentiment more deep-rooted in the hearts of true-born Indians than the sentiment of reverence for women engaged in the task of ameliorating human suffering and human misery, and I am perfectly certain that there will be this feeling of respect and affection towards unselfish nurses devoting their time to ministering to the want and the sufferings of the sick, the poor and the dying. We in the Council represent the better mind of Bengal and I am sure by your vote you will give expression to the feeling that institutions of charity, institutions of beneficence and mercy are not to be crippled, not to be fettered by the restriction which is proposed by the amendment. If you look at the figures you will find that we do not pay more than we ought to. This institution costs Rs. 2,50,000 every year and we give them Rs. 75,000 and no more. But what is the outturn of work that we get from them? There are at the present moment 177 nurses, 99 of whom are engaged in the Medical College Hospital, in the Eden Hospital, and in the Prince of Wales Hospital. In other words, the majority of them are engaged in the sort of hospital work, and in these hospitals the number of the Indian patients is 411 every day on an average. First, you have got the majority of the members of the institute engaged in certain hospitals where the majority of the patients—two-thirds of the patients—are Indians. Therefore the greater part of their number are engaged for the benefit of our people and you pay them how much? You pay them less than one-third of the annual expenditure, and the bulk of them are engaged in hospitals in which two-thirds of the inmates are Indians. They would be entitled at least as a matter of mathematical proportion, to half the expenditure. Their expenditure is Rs. 2,50,000: you pay them Rs. 75,000, or one-third of the entire expenditure. It seems to me that they are entitled to ask for more than what you are going to give them. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Institute saw me and he wanted Rs. 50,000 more. I told him that owing to financial stringency we were not in a position to pay the amount. Therefore, having regard to the justice of the case, it seems to me that you are paying less than what you ought to.

I think you ought to look at the matter from another point of view. Bear in mind that this is a transferred subject; your vote and voice will be final. There is no appeal against your decision in this matter except to that great Tribunal, to which are addressed the pleadings of the poor, the sick and the dying. Yours is the final voice. I ask you to rise to the height of your duty and to approach this question with an added sense of responsibility, having regard to the fact that your decision will be final and it is in your power either to help the institution or to cripple, to injure and to destroy it. And by crippling the institution.

whom do you injure? Your own countrymen Are you going to do that? Then there is another consideration, which we have to bear in mind. We are here to ensure the success of the experiment on which we are engaged, and what is the modus operandi? What is the process? It is co-operation—co-operation between Europeans and Indians—between all sections of our great community. What is the first fundamental condition of co-operation? Mutual goodwill, mutual esteem and mutual confidence. I am perfectly confident that there is an absolute unanimity of opinion among the European members in regard to the grant of the demand which I have put forward to-day. Will you not treat that expression of opinion with sympathy, with respect and with consideration? Europeans and Indians may not always see eye to eye. Differences of opinion there will be. On questions of principle, on questions of constitutional rights there may be divergence and differences, but I hope and trust that Europeans and Indians will always stand upon the same platform in matters of philanthropy, charity and beneficence. Let it not go forth that your decision to-day has been determined by considerations extraneous to the merits of the case or by issues which should be buried in oblivion—

Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: Nobody has said that.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA : I hope and trust that you will look at this matter from the larger standpoint of humanitarian interest, from the point of view of the public interest and with due regard to considerations of economy and prudence. If you look at the question from these points of view, I have not the slightest doubt as to what the decision of the House will be—it will be a decision in support of the demand. I hope and trust that my friend will not press his resolution and will see his way to withdraw it.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I have already said that I do not wish to press it. I am sorry that so much eloquence is lost over it. I wanted to have a discussion on the subject and to disclose the inequality of treatment and I am quite content with it.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

As Dr. A. Suhrawardy was absent, the motion standing in his name was deemed to have been withdrawn.

The motion was as follows: "That the demand for Rs. 75,000 for grants to the Calcutta Hospital Nurses' Institute be reduced to Rs. 25,000"

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I have already assured the Hon'ble Minister when I talked with him on the subject that I would withdraw my motion. So I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

It was as follows: "That the demand under 32—Medical be reduced by Rs. 1,95,000 by the omission of the provision for the staff and working expenses of the School of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene Institute."

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: After hearing the appeal from the Hon'ble Minister I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

It was as follows: "That the demand under head 'Detailed Expenditure for Medical College and Schools, No. 32-D,' at pages 108 and 109, the grant to Medical College for Rs. 4,36,000 be reduced by Rs. 26,000 and to Medical Schools for Rs. 2,77,000 be reduced by Rs. 75,000."

Mr. D. C. GHOSE moved "that the demand for grant under '32-Medical' be reduced by Rs. 95,000."

It will appear from the details given in the Budget Estimate at page 110 that of the total sum which the Hon'ble Minister demands under the head "Medical," the expenditure in connection with the School of Tropical Medicine and Hygiene Institute forms an important part. This item consists of Rs. 1,95,000. Now what I propose is that this grant should be reduced by Rs. 95,000. It will be in the recollection of most of us that, when Sir Leonard Rogers originated his scheme for a School of Tropical Medicine and appealed for public support, our countrymen responded generously and made it possible for him to carry out his great idea. Sir Koilash Chandra Bose was most assiduous in collecting large donations for the Tropical School fund, and I find from the subscription lists that all classes of our countrymen, Marwaris, Bengali, zamindars, rich Muhammadan gentlemen and others, all subscribed handsomely to this fund. And what is the result? The School of Tropical Medicine has come into existence, but its doors are shut against doctors who are outside the Indian Medical Service. A glance at the professorial staff of the school, as published last year, will convince anybody that this institution has been made a close preserve for members of the Indian Medical Service. All the chairs, I find, are held by members of the Indian Medical Service. There is one Indian who occupies a subordinate position. He is not a professor but a teacher. He however holds the most substantial degrees. He is an M.Sc. of the Calcutta University, B.Sc. of Edinburgh, besides being F.R.C.S. and F.C.S.

Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: I rise to support the motion.

Mr. D. C. GHOSE: Dr. Sudhamoy Ghose. This gentleman is not considered fit to be one of the professors of the school. Now I ask—is this fair? Here is an institution built upon Indian soil and reared mostly by Indian money but which does not give Indian doctors outside the Medical Service a chance to undertake investigations into the causes and remedies of tropical diseases. I ask again—is this fair? There are in Calcutta medical men outside the Indian Medical Service, who have done considerable research work in connection with some of the tropical diseases. Why should they not be allowed to fill some of the chairs? Then, Sir, I do not find that there is any adequate provision for the purpose of enabling Indian students to carry on research work in this School. I find that the conditions of the Research Endowments make it absolutely impossible for Indians to take advantage of them. I do not complain of that. But what I complain of is this that Government have not made adequate provision for the purpose of enabling Indian students to carry on research work. I find from the description of the governing body of the Endowment Funds that only one Indian has a place on that body. I want that Indian doctors enjoying large practice and having much knowledge of tropical diseases should be on this governing body. I submit therefore that this Council will be well advised to reduce the grant, unless it is made clear, first, that the appointments of professors in this school will not be limited to the members of the Indian Medical Service but will be open to all qualified men, either Indian or European; and, secondly, that due provision will be made for the purpose of enabling Indian students to carry on postgraduate research work.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: Mr. D. C. Ghose has moved in the way of amendment a reduction of the grant under "32—Medical" by Rs. 95,000. If I have understood him rightly, I find that he is resenting the treatment that has been meted out to Indians in this institution and that is what has actuated him to bring this proposal. I take it that he has no objection to the institution itself and, if he had, he would have taken a different tune in his speech. So far as regards the differential treatment meted out to the different communities in connection with the staff of that excellent institution, I must say that I have great sympathy with what Mr. Ghose has said. But I shall be the first person to stand here and to ask with all the emphasis that I can command for any grant for an institution like the Tropical School. The Tropical School, when it was first inaugurated in Calcutta, was taken by us as one for which we, the people of Calcutta, may well congratulate ourselves. In India there are only two places in which such institutions have been established, namely, Calcutta and Bombay; and what has been the result of that? Our boys, who had to go outside India, to Europe and to other distant places for tropical medical education, now get the same education here in Calcutta or in Bombay. Is that not a great advantage? If Rs. 1,95,000 is asked for in the course of one year for such a noble cause, I do not think anybody need object to it. This institution has been instrumental in the discovery of emetine and the cholera treatment. It must be said to the credit of the great scientist, Sir Leonard Rogers, that his name has already become a household name in India and other parts of the world also. And why? Because he discovered emetine and the cholera treatment. And where did he discover them? Within the walls of the Tropical School of Medicine. Therefore if it costs few lakhs of rupees, that money will be very well spent. Thousands and thousands of lives have been saved by the injection of emetine and from the grip of cholera; and as to those who object to the grant, I would ask them to take these things into consideration. As I have already said, I am not an admirer of the system that now prevails as regards the personnel of the institution but, whatever that may be, whenever there is a proposal for the improvement of the Tropical School of Medicine, I believe that the Council would do a very unwise act in opposing it.

Rai JOCENDRA CHUNDER GHOSE Bahadur: I oppose this amendment. But I must say there is some ground for the dissatisfaction expressed by Mr. D. C. Ghose. I cannot but express the deep gratitude of the people of India towards those great gentlemen, those great doctors like Sir Leonard Rogers, who found out the cholera treatment and emetine, and who are on the high road to discover a satisfactory treatment for leprosy. Dr. Sudhamoy Ghose was one of the students sent by the Scientific and Industrial Association and in him I am deeply interested. He was mentioned with high praise at Delhi in the Imperial Assembly as having done excellent work in connection with Sir Leonard Rogers' researches, but he has not yet been made permanent. He could have got a professorship in the Imperial Service in any college, as most of the D.Sc. students have got, but his claims have been hitherto overlooked. I do hope that his claims will not be overlooked. I do not object to the very best scientist of Europe being brought to India in the research of tropical diseases. If there are great doctors and great scientists in India, let them be. They will have ample opportunities of working. But for the present let us have the highest intellect, no matter what it may cost, from Europe to investigate into tropical diseases. I would not therefore for one moment strike out a single rupee from the amount budgeted or which may be required or demanded by Sir Leonard Rogers in future.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I must say that I sympathise with the observations of my friend Mr. D. C. Ghose, and I understand that the object of his motion is to bring to notice certain grievances. These grievances will be most sympathetically considered by Government. I may say at once that my friend is under some misapprehension, and I may assure him that the doors of the Tropical School and the professorial chairs will be open to all qualified men—Indians, Europeans or persons of whatever nationality. Merit shall be the sole test of qualification. The best men will be employed and I hope the necessary funds will be forthcoming. I hope the country will subscribe in aid of an institution so full of potentialities for good and it will be an institution, upon which I am quite sure the eyes of mankind will be centred, for the simple reason that investigations into tropical diseases conducted in India will be conducted under conditions which exist no where else, and therefore are likely to be fruitful of the best results.

Then with regard to the workers engaged in research I may point out that there are already in the school several who do not belong to the Indian Medical Service. For instance, there is Dr. Jotiprakash Bose, who is now in England, and there is Dr. Muir, who does not belong to the Indian Medical Service. Let me again repeat the assurance already given, namely, that merit shall be the sole test of qualification for appointments in the Tropical Institute and, so far as research scholars are concerned, there will be no distinction of race, colour or creed. I hope with this assurance my friend will see his way to withdraw the motion.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I gladly withdraw the motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The demand for grant under the head "32—Medical" was then put to the vote and carried.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC HEALTH (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): I beg to ask for a grant of Rs. 18,50,000 under the head "Sanitation" or more properly, to use the modern phraseology, "Public Health."

The total estimate for next year is the record figure of Rs. 19,46,000, or Rs. 9,50,000 more than the sum provided for in the revised estimate for the current year. It will interest the Council to trace the steady rise in the actual expenditure since sanitation was made a major head in 1917-18. I do not mean to say that the expenditure is what it should be, but there has been a steady rise—a steady expansion—in the expenditure upon Public Health and that is the most satisfactory feature of the Budget. I will give the figure now. It was in 1917, Rs. 4,69,000; it rose next year to Rs. 7,51,000 and, in 1919-20, to Rs. 14,12,278, and now as I have already stated, we are budgeting for Rs. 19,46,000 for 1921-22. Large as the amount is, it is still far short of the needs of the Presidency.

Of the total provision, Rs. 96,000 only is non-voted and the rest voted. Altogether Rs. 7,82,000 has been provided for works of sanitary improvement. Of this sum, about Rs. 6,00,000 is for sanitary engineering works, such as drainage and water-supply, and for the rest Rs. 1,25,000 is for charges of recurring nature, viz., Rs. 50,000 for the Calcutta fringe area drainage and for the Calcutta sewerage experiment, and Rs. 75,000 for the distribution of quinine in the mufassal. The latter is one of our weapons in the fight against malaria. Besides this, the Irrigation Department budget includes provision for anti-malarial drainage schemes, which Government will either carry out entirely at its own cost or will help with a contribution, while Rs. 20,000 has been entered in the Sanitation budget so as to enable a start, to be made with the Bhairab scheme, which is of such large importance to the district of Jessore. In addition to grants, we are, as I explained previously, making ample provision in the Loans budget for loans to enable various anti-malarial schemes in progress (viz., the Arul Bil, Amta, Jabuna and Nawi Sunthi Schemes) to be carried on. Provision has also been made for child-welfare and for propaganda work, aiming at the dissemination of knowledge of diseases and epidemics, and of the means of preventing them, and the estimate also includes the sums necessary for continuing the campaign against the hookworm disease and investigations into kala-azar as well as for anti-stegomyia measures.

I now move "that Rs. 18,50,000 be voted."

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I moved "that the demand for Rs. 30,000 for the grant of temporary allowances to the Deputy Sanitary Commissioners be refused."

I must confess, Sir, at the outset that it goes against my grains to have to touch a grant for this most useful Department—the Department of Sanitation. But the question is, whether this allotment of Rs. 30,000 is going to help towards the sanitary improvement of the province or only to give a few thousand rupees to a limited number of officers in the highest grade. Since I sent in this amendment, I am very glad to acknowledge that some of the highest officers of this Department have been good enough to supply me with detailed information about this matter, and some members of this House, whose opinion I value, even went to the length of requesting me to withdraw this amendment. I must confess, Sir, that the information that I got has not been able to convince me that this motion is useless. All I can do is to lay the question in all its bearings before the House and let the House decide the case on its merits.

Sir, why is this grant of Rs. 30,000 wanted? Is it for creating any new posts? No. It is only for giving temporary allowances, ad interim allowances, to nine officers, eight of whom are drawing salaries from Rs. 500 to Rs. 700 a month and one Rs. 1,200 a month. I admit, Sir, that they are all highly-qualified men, some, Doctors of Public Health and most of them educated in Great Britain. It has been mentioned to me that all of them are non-I.M.S. officers, and most of them are Indians, and therefore deserve great consideration, but that is not the question before the House. The question is one of high salaries. Are we going to give high salaries to everybody at this rate? It has lately been noticed that there is an extraordinary rise, an extraordinary competition, for increasing the salaries in the higher services. That has got to be stopped. A standard of salary has got to be fixed and we must make a beginning somewhere. It is true that the Deputy Sanitary Commissioners are just as well qualified, nay, some of them better qualified than the average I.M.S. officers, who get a larger scale of pay and whose posts are pensionable, whereas these posts are non-pensionable. Because, in this Council, we have no right to touch the salaries of the I.M.S. officers, is it any reason why we should not touch the salaries of other officers, where we can show that the standard is really too high? Personally, Sir, I think, that it is a great humiliation to this Council, and to this province also, that we have to entertain a number of officers in this province, about whose pay the members of this Council have no right to say anything. I think that the time is not far distant when this Council may have the right to touch the salaries of the Imperial Service men, and I have not the least doubt what the Council will say. Because we are helpless in one matter, that is no reason why we should be helpless in other matters.

Now let us turn our eyes to the case of the nine officers. As far as I can gather from the Civil List, given to us three or four days ago, I find that one of these officers is getting Rs. 1,200, three Rs. 700, two are receiving Rs. 600 and four are getting Rs. 500 a month; and I have also heard that the grade of the Deputy Sanitary Commissioner is Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000 a month. I find also that two of them were recruited in 1913, three in 1916, three in 1919 and one as late as June 1920. Except the two who were recruited in 1913, that is, just before the war, all of them have been recruited during or after the war, when the prices of commodities had already risen very high. When these officers joined their posts, they knew that the posts were not pensionable; they knew that they would not be allowed to enjoy private practice; they knew that their pay was graded from Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000. With all this knowledge, they came into the posts. I submit, Sir, that as most of them came in between 1916 and 1920, no case has been or can be made out to show that they can claim any increase on the score of high prices.

Then, I should like to know, Sir, what is the more urgent, more immediate work, of this Department of Sanitation? The increase of pay of the highest posts or propaganda work in the mufassal? It has been admitted that the ignorance of the common people in matters of sanitation is notorious, and is proving a source of danger to the whole country. Dr. Bentley, the Sanitary Commissioner, with his usual enthusiasm for the improvement of sanitation, has published many leaflets and posters and has had prepared magic-lantern slides for propaganda work. I myself remember to have seen some bioscope films illustrating the lessons of sanitation. Where are those films and slides? Why don't we hear of the slides and films in the mufassal now? Why don't we see propaganda work being carried on? It is not carried on as enthusiastically as before, because of want of funds. Can we raise that cry unconscientiously, when we come and see that Rs. 30,000 is going to be provided for nine officers of the Sanitary Department? I ask the Council to seriously consider—Is it proper that money should be lavishly provided for the increase of pay and not for propaganda work? Only three days ago—I think it was on the 14th or 15th of March—we saw in the papers that this bioscope show on sanitary subjects had to be topped for want of funds. Is it not a shame, Sir, that this most important work had to be stopped for want of funds? Is it not a shame that we cannot utilise the excellent work of the Sanitary Commissioner towards the improvement of sanitation because of want of funds? With this Rs. 30,000, we can appoint 25 sub-assistant surgeons, who can tour about the whole province to do propaganda work for the benefit of the people. When we hear that funds are not available for these purposes, how can we honestly and conscientiously vote this Rs. 30,000 for the temporary increase of pay of the already highly-paid officers? I have been informed that in other provinces of India, they have given these increase, and that we might lose the services of these gentlemen if we do not vote this increase. Because other provinces have given it, that is no reason why we should give it in the present state of our finances; I believe they could afford it and so they gave it. When we want money for other and important purposes, I do not know why these gentlemen should threaten us that they would go away? They knew what their prospects were when they joined the service.

Then, Sir, it has been mentioned also that, if some of these officers went away, we should be in the helpless position of taking I.M.S. men in this Department as in the Tropical School of Medicine, and that we should have to pay much more for those officers than we are going to pay for these. Sir, I hope that this Council will be strong enough to protest against any such step that is threatened to be taken in future. We shall know what to say then, and I am sure of the result. With these words, Sir, I submit that I have made a good case for this motion.

Before I sit down, I hope, Sir, you will permit me to say a few words about a certain matter which was mentioned by Mr. S. R. Das. I am very sorry to mention it, but I have to mention it because he seemed to insinuate that some of the non-official members made a compact of voting—

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I rise to a point of order. Is the member justified in referring to a matter which has no connection with his motion?

The PRESIDENT: Speeches must always be relevant.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: I characterise the resolution which the member has moved as useless, and I hope to convince him on that point and I hope to convince him also that this resolution is a waste of time of the Council. It is a purely reactionary proposal. Most of us are under the impression that mufassal members are desirous of improving the health of the residents of the mufassal. Now we have a mufassa member apparently coming here and telling us that it is not necessary. Now what are the facts in connection with this particular Department? The motion is to disallow the grant of temporary allowances to the Deputy Sanitary Commissioners. The non-I.M.S. Deputy Sanitary Commissioners were appointed in other provinces on a salary of Rs. 500 rising, after 20 years, to Rs. 1,000, with no pension. The Royal Services Commission some years ago took account of the fact that their pay was only two-thirds of the pay of Deputy Sanitary Commissioner belonging to the I.M.S., who had no better qualifications and who enjoyed the benefit of a pension which is equal to Rs. 300 a month.

[Therefore the Royal Services Commission made a recommendation that the pay of the non-I.M.S. Deputy Sanitary Commissioners should be reconsidered and that they should get a pension. They have been waiting patiently for it all these years. Meanwhile the I.M.S. officers got an increase of $33\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and a further Rs. 250 per mensem, so that now an I.M.S. Deputy Sanitary Commissioner gets an initial pay of Rs. 1,000, rising to Rs. 2,220, and pension, whereas, under the old rate, a non-I.M.S. Deputy Sanitary Commissioner with the same qualifications—and perhaps better qualifications and more experience—gets only Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000. Naturally the injustice of this has caused great dissatisfaction, and, in answer to a cable from the Government of India, the Secretary of State sanctioned a proposal to allow the non-I.M.S. Deputy Sanitary Commissioners $33\cdot3$ per cent. increase as a temporary measure, pending the final consideration of their claims, with retrospective effect from the 30th July, 1920.

Now all the other provinces in India have granted an increase, with the exception of Bengal, which is more in need of Sanitary officers than any other province. There are ten of these officers in Bengal, and there are two more sanctioned posts, and Rs. 30,000 is required to provide the allowance. If they do not get this allowance, men will leave, because, instead of cutting down the standard of pay of these posts, the other provinces are raising it. The United Provinces and the Punjab are increasing their staff. They are looking out for men, and they are only too anxious to get trained men from Bengal. In Bengal there are one Punjabi, one United Provinces man, one Parsi and seven Bengalis. All these gentlemen have had long training in England, and have first rate qualifications, and, if a temporary allowance were not granted, it would destroy the Department, and that is what the mover of this resolution wants to do. They have been kept together with great difficulty in the hope of getting in the end the consideration which the Public Services Commission promised them over five years ago. With the exception of the Sanitary Commissioner, the staff is purely Indian. Now it is quite obvious that, if the Council refuses this grant, it is tantamount to saying that Bengalis, however good their qualifications, are inferior to the men of any of the other provinces and not worth more than one-third of the pay of an I.M.S. officer doing the same work, who might himself be a Bengali. Therefore, if you pass this resolution, you will be assessing your own countrymen at one-third of the value of the men in other provinces.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I beg to oppose this motion. My experience and that of the learned mover were not alike. I have had opportunities of seeing the work done by the Deputy Sanitary Commissioners. I know they work with zeal and enthusiasm and, at a great sacrifice of their own comforts, go to the interior to look after the sanitation there. They have to do special work in connection with the anti-malarial campaign or hookworm diseases campaign, or the like, under the orders of the Sanitary Commissioner, the Director of Public Health. They are to take measures for the prevention of outbreaks of cholera or other epidemic diseases. For the last eight years I have been associated with these officers and, from my experience of them, I can confidently ask the Council to vote this grant of Rs. 30,000 for the purpose of increasing their emoluments. Very recently a Deputy Sanitary Commissioner, who was deputed by the Sanitary Commissioner to Midnapore, reported that 80 per cent. of the people there suffered or died from diseases of the spleen. This is a startling fact. When I moved my resolution on child-welfare, I brought to the notice of the Council the work done by these officers and the amount of labour they put into the matters entrusted to them. If we dispense with the services of such men, I will ask the learned mover to tell us, who will look after public health and solve the problem of child-welfare. What is the use of providing a large sum of money in our Budget, if we have no agencies to take measures for the protection of our children? I say that we must have agencies for this purpose and, at present, so far as my information goes, there are only 10 or 12 Deputy Sanitary Commissioners, who are holders of British degrees and who have had scientific training abroad. Are we to refuse an increment of salary and the grant of temporary allowances to these men, who are in charge of most important and difficult work—the work of improving the sanitation of the province and of protecting our children from the ravages of cholera, malaria and other epidemic diseases? Although I admire the spirit with which the motion was moved—the spirit of practising economy in our expenditure—I am sure the learned mover would not have troubled the Council with this motion if he were in possession of the actual facts. It is extremely desirable that these officers, who are moving from place to place and are concerting measures for the preservation of the people from epidemic diseases, should be encouraged not only by the Government, but also by the people. It would be an act of injustice not to sanction this increase to these officers. There is another point. There is no Act, excepting the House and Lodging Act, in our Statute Book, under which such preventive measures may be taken. These men are deputed by the Sanitary Commissioner to go far into the interior of districts and to devise means for the prevention of cholera, malaria and other diseases; they take great pains in drawing up statistics for the information of the public. I am in a position to satisfy the mover that it is eminently desirable that this allowance should be given to these officers. If we do not grant them the allowance, we will be doing them an injustice. We must take into consideration the great responsibilities that lie on their shoulders, and the improvement of public health is a matter of great concern to us. We must show some consideration to those who have thrown themselves whole-heartedly into the work of improving the sanitation of the province. On these grounds I oppose the motion. I do not know the temper of the House, but I know this, that if it looks to the work done by these officers, it will certainly say that they are entitled to get the allowance which has been provided for them in the Budget and which has been sanctioned by the Government of India and the Secretary of State.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I am sorry that I have got to oppose this motion, and I must confess that I am not convinced with the arguments that have been advanced by my friend the mover. I had the opportunity of discussing this matter with him privately for two or three days and I have heard his speech in the Council. I am sorry to say that, though he has quoted some figures, from the general trend of his argument I do not find that he has been able to make out any case for opposing this grant. The first question is whether these men are capable, the second question is whether they are required, and the third question is whether they are sufficiently paid. These are the three questions that, I think, arise. That they are capable there can be no doubt—that is not disputed. They are our best University men, who have come back after education abroad, and there cannot be any question that they are throwing themselves whole-heartedly into the subject, which is their special study. As regards the sufficiency of the pay, I don't see why my friend is objecting to the increase of the pay of these poor people, when everybody else in this world is going to have an increase. What have these poor people done? Nothing in particular. There is a lurking idea, I am sure, behind this motion that these people don't do anything.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: That is not my idea at all.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: If that has not been his idea, that might have been some other people's idea; that might have been my own idea. They are, so far as I can understand, doing very good work and, above all, they are men who have got enthusiasm. That is the right point of view in specialised work of this description which is of the highest interest to the State. What we want is not a humdrum sort of man, who will come here to do routine work, but a man who loves the country, who has enthusiasm in his heart and who is perfectly willing to throw himself into the situation to the best advantage of the State. If that is so, I don't see any reason why we should stand against their getting any increase, when all the rest of the world has got it or is about to get it. Then I am also sorry to say that my friend does not realise that these men are professional men. They have taken service, but all their aims and aspirations cannot be very much cut down. If I am asked to serve on Rs. 500 a month, would I throw myself whole-heartedly into the work. These men have got their education in England and have come back. They have got their aspirations along with them. If they do not get anything more, they will go to other provinces. There is no doubt something in the argument of my friend that these people have come knowing full well that they are not eligible for pension and that their prospects are not very good. That is one way of looking at it. There is also another way of looking at it, which is a more sensible view, namely, don't depreciate your own countrymen. Never, for God's sake, if you can help it, depreciate your own men, your graduates, the finest of the lot. They went abroad for education, and have come back here after attaining the best qualifications. They are working here. Are we going to pull them down and say that they are not worth the same amount as I.M.S.? I am not prepared to do it. I should be the last person to depreciate my own countrymen.

Then I wish also, Sir, to submit to this House that very soon other duties will, in the nature of things, come upon them. We are expecting better sanitation; we are taxing for better sanitation; we have every right to do that and we must insist upon it. If we don't pay land tax, if we don't keep adequate staff and don't have enough officers how can we expect to get work done. This is a nation-building department, as my esteemed and honourable guru has said; no better work could be used; and I say that in such a department don't proceed lightly heartedly to cut down the expenses. Let that Department grow; let it acquire strength and let the country reap the highest benefit of that. This is all that is desired; for better sanitation is the only question, the first question, and the most important question, in Bengal.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The general sense of the House as far as I can gather is against the amendment and in favour of the Government view. I do not think that under the circumstances I should be justified in detaining the House at any length but there are one or two points which I desire to emphasise. I will not take many minutes.

The pay of these Deputy Sanitary Commissioners, as has already been pointed out by Colonel Pugh, was fixed in 1912; their scale of pay was Rs. 500 to Rs. 1,000, and that scale remains unaltered. The scale of pay in respect of all classes of people, in respect of people doing similar work, has been revised to the advantage of the incumbents. The Indian Medical Service got their pay increased first in 1919 and again later on. These Deputy Sanitary Commissioners and bacteriological officers are men of the same class as the men of the Indian Medical Service and have similar duties to perform, and it is only right and fair that, when relief is going to be given to every employee of ours these people should also get an increase; it is only a temporary allowance. You will find that it has been given in other provinces, in Bihar which is much worse off than we are, in the United Provinces, in Madras, in the Punjab, everywhere, there has been a rise in the emoluments of Deputy Sanitary Commissioners.

As my friend had just pointed out, there is very serious work before them, very important work; the department has to be reorganised and stimulated into fresh and renewed activity. They have very serious and responsible work lying before them; and it is only a temporary increase that we give them. We want to make them happy, contented and satisfied, otherwise their outturn of work will be poor. Having regard to all these circumstances, I hope the House will not accept this amendment, and may I appeal to my friend to withdraw it and not press it to a division.

The motion was then put and lost.

The following motion by Maulvi Muhammad Rafique Uddin Khan was withdrawn: "that the demand for Rs. 15,000 for the revision of the establishment of the Public Health Department be reduced to Rs. 5,000."

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur) moved "that a demand for Rs. 19,14,000 be voted by this Council as the grant under the head '34—Agriculture' for the year 1921-22."

This demand includes the expenditure on the Veterinary, Co-operative and Agricultural Departments.

To take the Veterinary Department first. It will be seen that the estimated expenditure for the coming year follows closely the estimated expenditure in the revised Budget for 1920-21. The bulk of the expenditure is incurred under the item "Veterinary Instruction" in connection with the Bengal Veterinary College. The small increase over the revised estimates is due partly to the normal growth of expenditure and partly to the fact that provision has been made for two additional Veterinary Inspectors and 15 additional Veterinary Assistants. Similarly, the Budget of the Co-operative Department follows the revised estimates for the current year, but allowance has been made for the rapid expansion which is taking place in the Department. The number of societies is increasing by leaps and bounds. The increase in the year ending the 30th June last was 1,150, or more than 27 per cent. over the preceding year. The total working capital on the 30th June 1920 reached 2 crores and 82 lakhs. It is clear that with such a large sum at stake the efficiency of the Department must be maintained and the standards of inspection, which Government have laid down, cannot be relaxed. This necessitates an increase in the inspecting staff, proportionate to the increase in the number of societies, and due provision for this has been made.

I must deal at some length with the estimates of the Agricultural Department proper, as an attack has been made on this Department by way of motions for reduction, which, if carried, would bring the activities of the Department to an end. I confess, Sir, to my feelings of surprise at these motions for the reduction of the grant for the Agricultural Department. In the course of the general discussion on the Budget, attacks were made upon the Ministers, including myself, on the ground that the allotments made for the Departments in our charge were inadequate and I did not anticipate that members of the Council would propose to reduce these grants still further.

The work of the Agricultural Department falls into two main branches, research and demonstration. The former necessarily precedes the latter, but, when research has led to practical results, these must be brought to the notice of the cultivators, and the demonstration work of the Department becomes a matter of the greatest importance. Research work has now been in progress on the Government farm at Dacca for a number of years past and has already been productive of remarkable results. The scientists of the Department naturally turned their attention first to the two main crops of Bengal jute and rice. By a process of selection, the Department have produced two varieties of rice, one transplanted aman paddy known as Indrasail and the other an aus paddy known as Kataktara. The success of these two seeds is proved by the great demand which exists for them among cultivators. Both the varieties give a yield of about 4 maunds per acre more than the ordinary variety. The area under these two new paddies is estimated at 100,000 acres. The food-supply has, therefore, been increased by 4 lakhs of maunds which, at the moderate estimate of Rs. 3-8 per maund represents Rs. 14,00,000 per annum.

In the case of jute, the variety known as Kakiya Bombai, which has been produced at the Dacca Farm, has been definitely proved to yield on the average 3 maunds more per acre than local jute. This variety of jute is now estimated to be grown on approximately 200,000 acres. This is equivalent to an increase of Rs. 6,00,000 maunds, which, at Rs. 8 per maund, represents Rs. 48,00,000, and the fibre is of much better quality and fetches a much higher price than local jute. Thus the work of the Department in connection with these two crops alone represents wealth to the country in the shape of increased crops worth Rs. 62,00,000 a year.

The Department has further introduced a new variety of sugarcane, which gives an increase of 5 to 15 maunds of gur per acre, and it is popularising Darjeeling seed potatoes and groundnuts, both of which are sources of great potential wealth to the country. It is spreading knowledge about the value of manures and of improved machinery. To make known the results, which it has obtained in every direction, we rely upon propaganda by the officials of the Department, upon demonstrations carried out upon farms maintained for this purpose, upon the distribution of seeds from a network of seed stores and also upon non-official co-operation. We have now District Agricultural Officers in every district, and are gradually appointing an increased number of demonstrators. We hope eventually to have one demonstrator for each thana in the province. With regard to demonstration farms, it is our policy gradually to establish a farm of this kind in every district in the Presidency. Seed stores have been established in every district headquarters, and it is proposed to establish them in subdivisional headquarters as well. As regards non-official co-operation, it is the aim of the Department to establish a network of agricultural associations throughout the province, and much headway has already been made. Thus, in Birbhum, there are 87 branch associations, in Faridpur, 53. In this matter the Director of Agriculture is working in close co-operation with the Registrar of Co-operative Societies. I think, Sir, that I have said enough to show that the Agricultural Department has already a record, of which it may be proud, and that there are infinite possibilities of development in the near future. The estimated expenditure for the coming year amounts actually to less than the original estimated expenditure for the current year, though it exceeds the revised estimate. The revised estimate shows a decrease, as compared with the original estimate, owing mainly to the transfer of Rs. 50,000 to the Public Works Department for the construction of farms, to savings under Salaries, due to vacancies, to the transference of the provision of pay for certain technical staff to the head "35—Industries," to the non-utilisation in full of the provision for the Sericultural Nurseries at Bholaaghat. The estimate for 1921-22 makes a larger provision for the purchase of cattle, distribution of paddy seed, and for an increased grant under "Sericulture and Contingencies." Provision has also been made for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Agriculture and a Deputy Director of Sericulture. As notices have been given of motions for omitting the allotment for these two officers, I shall have an opportunity later of dealing at greater length with the necessity for their appointment. I need only say now that it has long been recognised that the Agricultural Department in this province is greatly under-staffed and that further development of the Department is only possible if an adequate number of superior officers is provided. I think, Sir, that I have said sufficient to show that the Agricultural Department has amply justified itself by the results which it has attained, and that expenditure on this Department will bring an ample return to the province.

As regards the particular items, which certain members wish to reduce, I shall deal with them in detail in replying to the various motions. but I may explain briefly that the item, of Rs. 1,37,000, referred to in motion 108, is for the working expenses of the agricultural farms; Rs. 1,19,000, referred to in motion 114, represents the working expenses of the Sericultural Department, and the estimated receipts from this Department amount to Rs. 90,000. An examination of the Budget will show that the item of Rs. 66,000, referred to in motion 109, is not only for the distribution of improved seeds, but also for other contingent charges. Only Rs. 15,000 is in fact for the distribution of seeds, while Rs. 44,000 is to meet the cost of the experimental work of the Department.

The mover of the following motion, being absent, the motion failed.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: "That the demand for Rs. 6,000 for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Agriculture be refused."

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur moved "that the demand for Rs. 6,000 for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Agriculture be refused."

Before speaking on the merits of these items, I wish to make some general observations. Formerly this Department, as we all know, was a part of the Department of Land Records. It was then divided into two parts, the Department of Land Records and the Department of Agriculture. When the separation was effected, Government appointed a Director of Agriculture, and now we have three Deputy Directors. If my figures are correct, we have now an establishment of one Director of Agriculture, who gets a salary of about Rs. 2,000, three Deputy Directors, at a monthly cost of Rs. 2,600, a Fibre Expert on Rs. 1,450, an Economic Botanist on Rs. 1,100, an Agricultural Chemist on Rs. 500 and a whole host of underlings. In view of this staff, I do not see why there should be another highly-paid officer as an extra charge on the provincial revenues. So far as I have been able to follow, no case has been made out for this additional post. The question is how can we alleviate the miseries of the illiterate masses or the raiyats by importing raw science graduates from England, who have yet to make the acquaintance with paddy or the jute plant. They have no knowledge of the vernacular, no smattering either, drawing princely salaries for only writing reports. In Bengal we have already got a top-heavy administration. In reading the report of this Department, it has struck me that there is one thing, for which I must give credit to the Department, and that is the work of the demonstration conducted by Indian demonstrators under the supervision of an Indian district agricultural officer. These demonstrations have shown fruitful results in the improved quality and outturn of crops shown by experiments upon the land of the raiyats themselves. This work, I understand, requires no great vigilance of the Imperial officers for its success and popularity. That is why, while I oppose the appointment of a Deputy Director on a salary of Rs. 6,000 a year. I also congratulate the Government on the provision, however scanty, of Rs. 21,000 for the appointment of 55 demonstrators, who are expected to do real and solid work for the benefit of these raiyats.

Is not the comparison of these two figures significant? It is proposed to have two highly-paid officers on Rs. 17,000, while only

Rs. 21,000 is provided for 55 demonstrators, which, it is admitted, is for the development of a scheme of work of unquestionable utility. What I further want to point out is that out of the total expenditure of Rs. 13,48,000, for the Department of Agriculture, only Rs. 66,000 is provided for the distribution of improved paddy and jute seed. What is the use of another Deputy Director, if we have provided only this small sum for the distribution of seed? Bengal is divided into three circles, and each circle has already seven District Agricultural Officers, and therefore there is need to strengthen the lower rungs of the ladder, rather than make the top too heavy.

On these grounds, I oppose the demand.

The PRESIDENT: Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq has an identical motion, therefore, do not call upon him to move his motion but he may take part in the debate.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I do not wish to take up the time of the Council by delivering a lengthy speech, because the motion, of which I have given notice, is exactly identical with the one just moved. Briefly stated, my reasons, for suggesting that this money should not be voted, are these.

In the first place, I freely admit that the Department of Agriculture admits of great possibilities of expansion, and it is one of the most useful Departments under the Government, but that is no reason why money should be spent without, at the same time, planning that the expenditure must be on a productive purpose. In other words, that the money spent must be commensurate with the results obtained. It is no argument to say that the Department is a useful one. We always sail against expenditure on the Police Department. Who can say that the Police Department is not a useful one? The Police Department is not merely a useful Department, it is one of the most essential and responsible services under the Government. But when we see in the budget figures like a crore or so, we at once say it is too expensive. I admit that the Agricultural Department is very useful, but what I have noticed during all those years is this, that, although a very large sum of money is being spent, the corresponding rate of progress is not being shown by the Department. At the present moment there are three Deputy Directors of Agriculture, one for the Burdwan and Presidency Divisions, known as the Western Circle, one for the Chittagong and Dacca Divisions, known as the Eastern Circle, and one for the Rajshahi Division, known as the Northern Circle. So far as I have been able to gather from the departmental report, no good case has been made out for any addition to the cadre. On these very short grounds, I oppose the grant, and I support the motion of Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur.

Rai ABINASH CHANDRA BANERJEE Bahadur: I rise to oppose the motion. It has just been said by one of the learned members of the House that the Agricultural Department is a very useful Department, but he is strongly opposed to the creation of another Deputy Director in the Presidency. I think, if the learned member had studied the question in the way which its importance demands, he would not have raised such a frivolous objection as this. I am a cultivator myself. I own a farm of my own and have been working for the advancement of agriculture for the last 14 years, and every day I have been feeling the want of some more Deputy Directors, if possible, in this Presidency. I remember seven or eight years ago, when I tried to introduce certain new crops in my district of Birbhum, I wanted the help of a superior agricultural officer. In those days we had only one District Agricultural Officer in Chinsura in the Burdwan Division, and he was then called the Superintendent of the Agricultural Department, or something like that; there was only one man. I wired him to come to my village, but he could not come for seven or eight days together, and I was detained for seven or eight days in my village, simply because I was not anxious to get the benefit of his technical knowledge. Ten years ago again, when I wanted to introduce the cultivation of Indrasail paddy, I sent for the District Agricultural Officer. I could not get him, he was engaged in some other part of the district.

Well, as to the work that these Deputy Directors of Agriculture are doing and have been doing, I can bear testimony to it and can prove it by facts and figures.

The Deputy Director of Agriculture of the Western Circle, as the learned member remarked in which the Burdwan Division is included, is a gentleman who takes much trouble, and who mixes freely with the tenants, and whom I have seen sowing seeds with his own hand for the benefit of the tenants, in whose interests he is working. The officers have knowledge that will greatly assist us in the improvement of our agriculture, and I really think their number must be increased. If they do not help the improvement of agriculture, I do not know what else will.

For all these reasons, I oppose the motion that has been moved by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur.

The PRESIDENT: I think I may be permitted to interrupt the business of the House by putting one matter before the Council. It has been suggested that Saturday is not usually a day for a Council sitting. We are ahead of the time allotted for discussing the Budget by 2½ days, and it was represented to me that it would be very desirable not to hold a sitting on Saturday. I therefore wish to ascertain the pleasure of the House by a show of hands. Those who are not in favour of a sitting on Saturday will kindly raise their hands. [The members were declared to be against a sitting on Saturday, and 21 in favour of it].

The PRESIDENT: I shall have to represent the matter to His Excellency the Governor and take his orders on the subject.

Rai JOCENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: One thing should be remembered. Municipal elections are to take place on Monday; many members of this Council are candidates for seats——

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: I also wish to draw attention to the fact that the municipal elections will be held on Monday, and many of us are candidates for election, and wish to participate in the contest which will take place from one end of the city to the other; and most of us, as voters, will be required to attend the polling station at the 25 polling stations in Calcutta. It will be more proper to postpone the business on Monday and sit on Saturday.

Raja MANILOLL SINGH ROY: Is the Council especially intended for Calcutta and its people? We who come from outside to attend the work of the Council for days together——

The PRESIDENT: I have taken the vote of the Council. I cannot allow any more discussion.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: On looking through the agenda paper, I find that out of all the amendments proposed under this head, seven have been moved by Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq, one by a zamindar, who at least ought to be in favour of agriculture (Kumar Shib Shekhareswar Ray), two by Dr. Suhrawardy and two more by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, an eminent agriculturist.

Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq says that he cannot see the benefits that have already accrued from agriculture. Of course, he cannot see the benefits if he spends most of his time in the High Court instead of in the district of Barisal. That is the reason why he has not been able to see the benefits of agriculture and the effects of improvement in agriculture.

Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur also stated that he was not yet convinced as to the necessity of this appointment. I noticed particularly that while the Hon'ble Minister was delivering his speech in moving for the grant for Agriculture, neither the Rai Bahadur nor Mr. Haq were paying the slightest attention to what was being said. There are a few facts, which, I think, will convince all the members of this Council as to the necessity of this appointment for keeping up the prosperity of the people. I have been reading the Report of the Department of Agriculture, and I find that the departmentally selected rice and jute occupied 250,000 acres and 100,000 acres, respectively, in Bengal. The average increase is 3 maunds and 2 maunds per acre. Therefore, the Bengal cultivator in the last few years is 40 lakhs better off than he was before, owing to the work of the Agricultural Department. This, Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq cannot see, because apparently it does not go to his own pocket. The whole rice and jute crop will be affected, if the work is allowed to go on and not impeded by resolutions such as those on the agenda paper. It will mean that the net income of the cultivators of jute and rice will be increased by the astounding sum of 12 crores per annum. We are asked to postpone this prosperity on grounds of economy. The chief varieties of paddy discovered and distributed by the Agricultural Department are Indrasail and Kaktara, the latter being discovered by a process of selection. Without careful research, no work of improvement is possible, and a vast amount of skilful research, toil and patience is required to obtain the new varieties.

We see also from the Report on Agriculture that over 2,000 varieties of paddy had to be tested and examined before the Indrasail paddy was discovered. This was done under the supervision of the Director and Deputy Directors of Agriculture; and 200 varieties of autumn paddy before the Kaktara was evolved. Both these paddies are the descendants of one single ear of corn; and from that single ear of corn the Deputy Directors of Agriculture have been enabled to increase the prosperity of the raiyats by Rs. 40 lakhs; and if they are allowed to go on with these particular seeds along with jute, as I have said, the agricultural prosperity of Bengal will be increased by Rs. 12 crores. Surely, we want more Deputy Directors of Agriculture and not fewer. One of the easiest and obvious ways of improving agriculture is by the introduction of better yielding varieties, especially so for Bengal, where there are small holdings. The Council may be interested to learn that both these seeds, I have already referred to, namely, the Indrasail and the Kakiya Bombay jute, have both already been obtained. The Bengal raiyat, who knows a great deal more about this subject than the mover of the amendment, is not conservative, and his demand for increased seed is enormous. At Dacca only, there were registered orders for 5,000 maunds of Kakiya Bombay jute seed, while the supply of the Department was only 1,000 maunds to meet the demands of the whole of Bengal. You must, therefore, have an organisation to increase the supply of the seed, and the only district that has a sufficient staff is the district of Birbhum. If every district in Bengal were well staffed as Birbhum, you would immediately have to have seven Deputy Directors. At present, except Birbhum, no district has sufficient demonstrators to keep even the Agricultural Officers properly occupied. Demonstrators are no doubt more important than Deputy Directors of Agriculture; but the moment you appoint more demonstrators and more superintendents, more Deputy Directors become necessary. In Eastern Bengal, there are 10 trained District Agricultural Officers and 45 demonstrators, or 55 in all, in a population of 17½ millions, with a cultivated area of 8 million acres. This is equivalent to one trained officer for 800,000 acres, or one trained officer to 1½ million persons. I venture to suggest that a vote in favour of this amendment is a vote against the land, the raiyat, and the prosperity and happiness of the people of Bengal.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: I rise to oppose the motions of Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur and Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq. The two arguments that have been advanced by Radha Charan Pal Bahadur in favour of his motion are these: first, that raw European graduates cannot confer any benefits upon the poor raiyats of this Presidency. Now this argument amounts to this, that he objects to the personnel of the individual who is to be appointed as Deputy Director of Agriculture; but it does not deal with the question whether a Deputy Director of Agriculture should or should not be appointed. We all see that all that the Rai Bahadur wants is that raw men should not be appointed and that raw Europeans should not be appointed. Certainly I must say that I would not like to have a raw man, but I would like to have an experienced man; but, if I cannot get an experienced Indian, I would like to have an experienced European. Therefore, the question whether he is a European or an Indian does not affect us at all. What he wants is that he should be an experienced man and this relates to the question of the personnel of the individual to be appointed.

The other part of the argument is that the demonstrators have done very successful work, and the demonstrators are Indians. I do not think the Rai Bahadur wants to suggest that it is only the Indian demonstrators who can be successful in this work. Of course, regard being had to the salary we pay, we cannot expect to have European demonstrators. However, the Rai Bahadur has linked both the words "demonstrator" and "Indian" together. His whole argument amounts to this: The Indians are doing very good work; the Indians are generally demonstrators and the Deputy Directors are generally Europeans; therefore we must not have a Deputy Director; that seems to be the sum and substance of the whole of his reasoning.

Coming to the argument of Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq, we find that he argues like a subtle lawyer as is usual with him. To carry conviction he begins by saying that the Agricultural Department is a very useful department, because he will have to admit that we cannot at once abolish the department altogether; therefore I must ask him to move a resolution for the improvement of agriculture and not for the abolition of the department. Then towards the end of his argument he says: "I have watched very carefully the progress of the department for several years, but I do not find that the results achieved by the department are commensurate with the outlay that we have got to make on this particular department." When I read these resolutions I thought that the learned movers would give us certain facts and figures from which we, as practical men, would be able to find what amount of money had actually been spent and what outturn we had received in return for the outlay. Unfortunately both the speakers have given their reasonings and arguments in the vaguest manner and in the widest possible language—that the results were not commensurate with the outlay and nothing more than that. That usually is the argument of a subtle lawyer, when he cannot support his argument by facts and figures, putting his case theoretically in the widest possible language. However, we all know that the Deputy Director of Agriculture has combined in him two functions, one being theoretical and the other practical. He has got to do research work; then he has also got certain administrative functions. He has got to supervise the district agricultural officers and the demonstrators and other things. But the movers forget the other side of the work. What I want to impress upon the members of the Council is that research is a condition precedent to the starting of demonstrations. If you want to attach any pecuniary value to the research work, I should say that we, Indians, ought to be ashamed that in a matter like this, intellectual achievements by way of research are to be valued by pecuniary gain. But, we all know that, when a certain amount of money is devoted to research, and certain results are arrived at, the value of the results cannot be estimated in money. Therefore, the learned movers forget the other portion of the work. We have heard from the Hon'ble Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture that the persons in charge of research work have been able to discover at least two kinds of crop which have been proved conclusively to be far better than the usual crop which is now sown in the lands of our province.

The learned movers moved their amendments after their speeches and, when I heard the Hon'ble Minister in charge giving out these facts, I anxiously waited for what the movers of the amendments had to say on them, but they carefully avoided answering these points. It appears to me that they did not answer the points because they could not answer them. Therefore, it seems to me that the fruits which have been obtained from the research work are most valuable and we must have sufficient men not only to do the administrative portion of the work, but also to do the theoretical portion of it—I mean the research portion as well; and it is only when researches are conducted properly then we can arrive at successful results—results which can be successfully demonstrated. Certainly, when you are going to have more demonstrators, it seems very necessary to have one more Deputy Director to supervise their work. When we find that we have spent some money over research work and have been able to attain some sort of fruitful results, the temptation will naturally be to devote more money, in order to have more fruitful results. That would be the natural temptation and the natural desire of those who are in charge of the particular department in question, if they want to see the success and not the failure of the department. In this particular case, it has been pointed out by the Hon'ble the Minister in charge that he is anxious to make the department a success; and I think that we entered this Council at least with the idea that, as in regard to this Department some sort of power has been transferred to us, it must be a success; and, if we want to make it a success we must provide funds for it. The only dispute is about the details. The mover of the amendment says that the demonstrators can do the work and they don't want to have Deputy Directors. It means a question of facts and figures; and I would challenge the movers of the amendments to point out from facts and figures that really the time devoted by these three Deputy Directors is quite enough for the work allotted to them. They have not been able to tell the Council that these three Deputy Directors sit idle as they have got no work to do. They have not been able to do so because they have not got the facts and figures. I do not think that the movers looked into the diary of the Deputy Directors to convince themselves that they were not doing any work. The whole question depends on facts and figures. Are we in possession of facts and figures in order to enable us to decide whether we do not want to have one more Deputy Director? We have got the suggestion from the Government, and we must presume that they know the necessities of the department; and, unless and until we are convinced by facts and figures that the conclusion of the Government is wrong, certainly we must presume that Government know the necessities of the department and that the grant is absolutely necessary.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: The other day the Council attacked the Ministers, as they had provided a smaller amount than what was necessary for Agriculture and other transferred subjects; and it would have been more consistent with our conduct—conduct of the members of this Council—if we had not brought in this amendment that the grant for the Deputy Director of Agriculture be reduced. I think that agriculture is a necessity for Bengal, and it is borne out by every person who has any acquaintance with the mufassal and not with the town. One of the gentlemen who has brought these motions resides within the precincts of the Marhatta Ditch, and the other was for some time outside Calcutta, but he has been here for a long time; and both of them do not know, I beg to submit, what the requirements of the country are with regard to Agriculture. When the Ministers were driven to the necessity of explaining that after only 12 days of their appointment the Budget was prepared, I think it is obligatory on us now not to cut down any expenditure from the head of Agriculture. Our present action must be consistent with what we did before, and I do not think that that would be the sense of the Council if such an amendment were carried. I think, therefore, that from every direction so far as these amendments are concerned, the Council would be unanimous in rejecting it. I think that the statement that a European is expected to be appointed to the post of Deputy Director is without any foundation. I hope the Hon'ble the Minister will explain whether a European is going to be appointed. So far as I know, it is an Indian and a very competent Indian who is going to be appointed. I, therefore, think that these motions will be rejected by the Council.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I have to oppose these motions. I think that we have to bear in mind that our Government should not be in a bankrupt condition; and, therefore, we should try our very best to reduce the items in the Budget; but I am afraid that with regard to Agriculture not a pice should be reduced. Have those gentlemen who have proposed this reduction any idea as to how the agricultural work is done by the United States? Have they any idea of what amount of money they spend? I think that the money spent in Bengal is very insignificant; at least four times the money now spent on Agriculture should be spent for the improvement of agriculture of an empire—and Bengal is an empire; Bengal may not be nearly as large as the United States. Do we know the work they do? They have got not only research stations, but the results of research are brought home to every cultivator by the officers of the States. Have we got a machinery of that kind here? I hope that as long as I am here, I shall bring before you the system that prevails in America; and I do hope that a portion of it, at least, should be adopted in this country. It may be that you cannot adopt their expensive methods, because the United States is a very rich country; but something must be done and much more than what is now being done. I know that the work of the Agricultural Department is regarded as very unsatisfactory by the people of this country, notwithstanding the glorious accounts about Indrasul and other seeds. I know that every farm is a losing farm. I repeatedly asked, when I was a member of the Legislative Council before, the Agricultural Department to run at least one farm on a commercial basis and to show the people of Bengal that profit can be made by improved agriculture. What they now find is, not profit, but, that great deal of loss is incurred in the farms. Therefore, the people are very dissatisfied and that is the reason why not a single man would take to agriculture. I read in the papers that a Deputy Director of Agriculture said that a Bengali young man could make a decent living on 50 bighas of land; and he gave a very glowing account of Agriculture. Many young men took to it and failed. What does Mr. Smith say to that? It is desirable no doubt that a large number of people should take to Agriculture, but these are the defects which should be remedied. Then the representatives of the people will see that something practical and good is done by the Agricultural Department. But I shall be the last person to cut one pice from the grant for the Agricultural Department; on the other hand I would like to double it, so that we might adopt some of the methods of the American States.

Mr. R. M. WATSON-SMYTH: I beg to move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: I do not think that I should put the motion ' that the question be now put ' at this stage. After the Hon'ble Minister has replied, I shall consider such a motion if again moved.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I rise to support the motion. The other day we carried a resolution that an agricultural school should be started at Rajshahi, but instead of any provision for that, I find there are proposals for two new appointments. It is said more research work is necessary, but what good will that do? Will the Deputy Director go to the cultivators, go from house to house and tell them what sort of crops can be raised, what drought-resisting crops can be raised, and such other things. That is a thing which can only be done by demonstrators and not by those who are engaged in theoretical researches. I know a little about agriculture and, I appeal to the Chairman of the Rajshahi District Board who is present here, and I ask him to tell the House what great good the farms have done. Therefore, to my mind demonstration work is what is necessary, but, instead of that, only some high appointments are going to be made. I do not care whether Indians are appointed to the posts or not. But I want a start to be given to a demonstration farm with Rs. 6,000 a year, and local zamindars may also help. I am not aware what sort of research work is necessary and what experiments are to be made. Sums are spent for travelling allowances. These Deputy Directors inspect farms and a few agricultural exhibitions are held, but no real work is done. It is high time that some practical work is done of a nature by which the sons of agriculturists may be profited. With these words I support the motion.

The Council here adjourned.

After the adjournment.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I am sorry I have got to oppose this motion. I do not appreciate the point, from which this motion has been put, because what we all want is that this Department of Agriculture should be a success and that it should move as quickly as possible. If that is so, then I do not understand the policy of making a man a cripple if you want him to move. Next to Sanitation, I think Agriculture is the most important question in this province. We want to make it a success, we want to hold our Ministers responsible for this work, and now, when they come to us for a grant, saying that so much money is wanted, we say that we will not give it to you, but all the same we will hold you responsible for the success of the Department. The result would be that, when we would ask him, " What have you done for your Department?" he would say, " You did not give any money, and so I could not do anything." Sir, I am not going to place in the hands of our Ministers any excuse like that, but to give them every facility to the best of our power and then hold them responsible for their work and ask them to give an account of what they have done.

There is one other matter, to which I would draw the attention of this House, viz., that much of this opposition has come from a very narrow view of the word "Agriculture." Those who are responsible for the opposition—I speak with due deference to my Hon'ble friend—look upon agriculture from that old standpoint that agriculture means sowing a few potatoes and growing a little rice, but they forget that at the present time Agriculture includes many other things besides the growing of rice and potatoes, for instance, it includes such important subjects as horticulture, floriculture, dairy-farming, poultry-keeping, etc. These are the things which we want our young men to take to. Who are there to give them these ideas? Who are there to induce them to take to this sort of work? We want to say to our young men that, if you have got a capital of Rs. 2,500 to start a poultry business with you can earn Rs. 100 a month and you will be saved the trouble of writing applications to office, "Being given to understand that there was a vacancy." This is a necessity, and we must give these ideas to our young men, so that they may take up this sort of vocation in life. My esteemed friend, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, said that he knew agriculture and that much had been done in the Department in the way of agricultural investigations, and that nothing more was required. But I am afraid that he is still sticking to the old ideas of agriculture, which means a cultivator, a small plot of land to cultivate and a couple of wretched bullocks and the scratching of the surface of the earth. That is not agriculture nowadays. It is something quite different. You must look to agriculture from a different point of view.

Then there is another matter in this connection to which I would draw the attention of the Council. Who are the men that give the largest revenue to the country? It is the agriculturists. Why are you so anxious to take away from the grant which is meant to help them? Where is the justification for it? It is the tiller of the soil who contributes the largest possible amount to the State. Are you justified in spending large amounts of money for the Dacca University or the Calcutta University in preference to helping the agriculturists?

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: If I had the right of reply, I could have answered all his points.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Therefore, I think we ought to be more anxious to give our Ministers all the facilities that they require and hold them to their own ideas, and tell them that we have given you everything you ask for, and, if you have not done anything, we do not want you to remain in office any longer—if you have not done anything you have got to go. That is the whole position, otherwise I do not understand how the Government can go on. You take Rs. 6,000 from here, Rs. 10,000 from there, and Rs. 15,000 from another department. It may not matter much, as we have got a budget of 11 crores, but it will make the Ministers say that we took away the money and so they could not make any improvements in their respective departments.

Maulvi EMAUDDIN AHMED: Sir, I had no mind to speak on the subject. But I rise in response to an appeal that has been made to me as the Chairman of the District Board of Rajshahi by my friend, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. Sir, if I speak, I speak from experience. I am an agriculturist in a small way myself and I have been following it for the last 20 years. If I am the Chairman of the District Board of Rajshahi it is not because that I am a big man, but because the members thought me fit to occupy the post. And I regretfully say that the Deputy Director of Agriculture, who is in charge of the Rajshahi Division, has never yet shown his face to us. That is the sort of person who is appointed Deputy Director. On the other hand, I beg to mention one thing. Some three years ago I asked my servants to cultivate a plot of land, about two or three cottahs, and sow potatoes. They did it in their own way, and what was the result? I got ten seers of potatoes for five seers of seed. So I gave up the idea of cultivating potatoes any longer. Now, a simple demonstrator of an agricultural farm near by somehow came to know of this. He came and saw me and showed me the improved method of sowing potatoes and I am glad to say that from that very plot of land, I had three and a half maunds of potatoes. So I say I do not care whether you appoint Deputy Directors or not, but it would be more useful if you appoint low-paid officers who would bring the results of research work on Indrasail paddy, etc., to the cultivators. We do not demur to the payment of this amount, but what we want is that we should have more low-paid officers who could go to the interior of villages. If you want to improve agriculture, it is necessary that there should be more low-paid officers who would not mind going into the interior of villages and carry agricultural knowledge to the cultivators. Of course, I do not like to fetter the hands of the Minister if he says that a Deputy Director will be useful, but, at the same time, I must say that it would be more useful to appoint demonstrators.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I did not want to say anything on the subject, but something has been said which demands a reply. The main issue has been confused by an implication that those, who are in support of the motion, are going to do away with or at least diminish the importance of the Department of Agriculture. Sir, I have been associated unofficially with this Department for more than four years. I have looked into the working of the Dacca and Comilla Agricultural farms, I have attended agricultural conferences and I have been hand and glove with many agricultural officers, and I know how the work of the Department is done. My esteemed friend, Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, said that agriculture has entered a new phase, but I should like to ask the House where is the field for agricultural work? Is it in the head office at Calcutta or in the countryside? We want men in the countryside and not in the head office. As regards new paddy and jute seeds I have heard that some of the higher officers wanted to have them grown as experiments on fields situated along railway lines so that they might be able to see from railway carriages how the crop prospered and that they did not care to go into the mufassal. Sir, that is not the sort of office we want. We realise that this Department has got to be developed but we want it to be developed along healthy lines. We want men at the bottom. We want demonstrators, who would go into the village who would talk to the villagers, who would show them the improved methods of agriculture, and not men who would sit under the electric fans and draw high salaries month by month. With these words, I beg to support the motion.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI Khan Bahadur: I oppose this amendment. It has long been recognised that the Agricultural Department of this province is working at a great disadvantage owing to the shortage of superior officers. In 1916 the Government of India addressed the Government of Bengal on this question and suggested that it was desirable to have a Deputy Director of Agriculture for each Commissioner's Division and they pointed out that in that case Bengal would require two more Deputy Directors. The Government of Bengal agreed with the Government of India that two more Deputy Directors were necessary.

In recent years the number of officers in the lower ranks of the Department has been greatly increased. We have now a Superintendent of Agriculture in every Division, a District Agricultural Officer in every district, and, in certain important subdivisions, new demonstrators are being appointed every year. To guide and supervise these officers in their work, an increase in the number of Deputy Directors is essential. The Agricultural Associations, on which we rely so largely, as I have already explained for making known to the public the results achieved by the Department, require constant attention in the early years. Further expansion in this direction is not possible on a large scale, unless the superior staff of the Department is increased. I doubt if the Council are aware how far Bengal has fallen behind other provinces in the matter of appointment of officers of the Indian Agricultural Service. In this great province we have only seven posts sanctioned for Imperial Officers, including three Deputy Directors. The Central Provinces have 13 such posts, including seven Deputy Directors in charge of circles. The United Provinces have 15 Imperial posts sanctioned, including six Deputy Directors. Bihar and Orissa have ten Imperial posts, with seven Deputy Directors. Burma has 11 Imperial posts, including 11 Deputy Directors. Madras has no less than 25 Imperial posts, including eight Deputy Directors. The figures will, I think, Sir, convince the Council that the Department:

this province is working under a very serious handicap with its meagre staff of seven Imperial Officers, including three Deputy Directors. I trust that they will recognize the necessity of strengthening the Department and will reject this motion.

Before sitting down I wish to refer to the point raised by Rai Radha Charan Pal, that a raw European may be appointed to the post. The selection of an officer has not been considered, but I may point out that Indians are eligible for the post and that the last Deputy Director appointed in Bengal was an Indian. I can only say that whoever is selected he will be a thoroughly qualified officer.

The motion being put, a division was taken, with the following result:—

The Ayes being 15 and the Noes 69, the motion was lost.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: There are some motions which stand on the agenda against my name, and, before I speak on these motions I wish to make a few remarks preliminary to what I propose to say with regard to the motions themselves.

The PRESIDENT: I have nothing to do with the other motions present. You must confine yourself to the motion which I have called upon you to move.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I am confining myself to the motion which I have been called upon to move.

The PRESIDENT: I do not think I can allow you to make observations without first saying whether you move the amendment or will draw it.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: If I am to withdraw the motion, I think under the rules I am entitled to give reasons for so doing. I don't think I am doing anything more.

The PRESIDENT: Then I understand that you are withdrawing your motions.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: Yes.

The PRESIDENT: You may now offer any explanation you like.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: It is with some regret that I am going to make a little statement by way of a personal explanation, and I think I owe it to myself and no less to the members of this Council that I should make one point clear. For the last few days I have heard it said that these motions have been brought forward by way of spite in order to thwart the activities of a very important Department of Government. I would not have cared to take notice of remarks like these, but only a few minutes ago remarks have been made by a gentleman who attributed these motions to a bad motive on my part, but about which I can assure the Hon'ble Minister that there is absolutely no reason to suspect. I know, as I said when I moved other motions, that this Department of Agriculture is a very useful Department. I made a free and frank confession of that fact even in the old Council, not once, but several times when I tried to draw the attention of the Member in charge to the manner in which the responsible officers of that Department were doing their duty. I think that as representatives of the people it is our duty to those who have sent us here, that we should try to bring to the notice of Government through Members or responsible Ministers what actually the public opinion is on a certain matter. Because a certain motion is made it ought not to be concluded that the mover of the motion is actuated by motives of thwarting the activities of a Department. The motion is made not only to draw the attention of the members of the Legislative Council, but of the Member or the Minister in charge to the importance of the issues that are raised by the discussions that follow on these motions. It has been said that the Agricultural Department is a Department whose activities lie somewhere outside those places where we generally pass our days and are disassociated from our sphere of activities. Colonel Pugh has said that, if I had taken the opportunity of going to some farms, I would have known what useful work is being done by this Department. I may tell Colonel Pugh that, so far as that particular matter is concerned, he may rest assured that I know my duty. I know my countrymen better than Colonel Pugh is expected to, and I am not wanting in sympathy with my own countrymen. It is not because I have no sympathy for the Department, but because I have the greatest sympathy for this Department that I want to bring the work of this Department into line not merely with modern requirements, but also with the highest standards of efficiency. By bringing to the notice of Government that money is being wasted on certain matters and suggesting that certain expenditure should be curtailed, it was never my intention that the activities of the Department should be thwarted in any particular way.

Colonel Pugh and my friend, Mr. Syed Nasim Ali have both challenged me to bring forward facts. Well, if I had really wanted to move these motions, I would have brought forward certain facts. I may tell Colonel Pugh and others, who are opposed to my motion, that it is not by debating in this Council in an off-hand manner or challenging people to bring forward facts that questions like these can be effectively debated. In the Government reports there is a good deal of mention of the activities of this Department. But let us remember that Government reports cannot alter facts; Government reports cannot make white black and black white, and I say with all the emphasis that I can command that Government reports, even though well written and written by the highest authorities, cannot convince us that 2 and 2 cannot make 4 and black is white and white is black. I have read those reports over and over again, not only with the Departmental reports, but also those reports that issue annually from the head office of the society for the mutual admiration of officials which is situated in the north of Laldighi and popularly called Writers' Buildings, Calcutta. These officials reports do not alter facts, and it is from these official reports that I have gathered my knowledge. I have looked into several of these agricultural farms and I know that this kind of paddy—Indrasail paddy—has been a disastrous failure in Bengal; it has been a failure in my own district of Bakarganj, in Rangpur and in many districts, and yet Government persist in saying that that is an improved kind of paddy. This is what I object to.

There seems to be a feeling in the House that the activities of the Department will be thwarted, if we do not grant the money. Therefore I do not object to the grant being given this year, but next year we will raise this question and we will see what progress is made. So far as these motions are concerned, I beg leave to withdraw them.

The following motions were then withdrawn:—

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand for Rs. 6,000 for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Agriculture be refused."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demands under head '34 B.—Agriculture' be reduced by the reduction of the Budget provision given in detailed account '34 B.—Agriculture' of the following items:—

- (a) Other gazetted officers from Rs. 43,000 to Rs. 20,000.
- (b) Technical staff from Rs. 70,000 to Rs. 30,000.
- (c) Temporary establishment from Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 10,000."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand under head '34 B.—Agriculture' be reduced by the reduction of the provision under head 'Other Supervising Staff' of the following item:—

Travelling allowance from Rs. 1,00,000 to Rs. 20,000.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand under head '34 B.—Agriculture' be reduced by the omission from the Budget the provision under detailed account '34 B.—Agriculture,' head 'Experimental Farms':—

Other charges, Rs. 1,37,000."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand under head '34 B.—Agriculture' be reduced by reduction of the Budget provision under head 'Agricultural Experiments' of the following item:—

Provision for the distribution of improved paddy and jute seed from Rs. 66,00,000 to Rs. 30,000."

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: "That the demand for Rs. 11,000 for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Sericulture be refused."

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: "That the demand for Rs. 11,000 for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Sericulture be refused."

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY moved "that the demand for Rs. 11,000 for the appointment of a Deputy Director of Sericulture be refused."

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, K. Bahadur: The proposal to appoint a Deputy Director of Sericulture

Bengal has been before the Government for many years. Mr. Lefroy, the well-known Sericultural expert in his report of the silk industry, in India, which was published in 1917, strongly urged the necessity of creating such a post. His proposal was supported by the Bengal Silk Committee, an advisory body consisting of members in close touch with the silk industry of the province. Mr. Lefroy's proposal was accepted by this Government, and, in February 1920, the Secretary of State sanctioned the creation of the post. The work of the Sericultural department is expanding rapidly. As is well-known, the main cause of the decline in the silk industry of Bengal, was the spread of a disease known as "pebrine." The main work of the Sericultural Department is to provide the cultivators with a seed which is free from this disease. Practical demonstrations are also given to the professional rearers who grow seed for sale to the cultivators. The cultivator who buys his seed in the market runs a very great risk of loss from pebrine. If he buys a bad batch of seeds, the disease may destroy as much as 50 per cent. of the worms before they begin to spin. In the case of Government seed, the percentage of disease is less than 2. This is now well-known to the cultivators, with the result that the demand for Government seeds is very much greater than the supply, and is constantly increasing. The receipts from the sale of silk cocoons in 1919-20 amounted to Rs. 84,000 and we estimate receipts for the current year at Rs. 78,000 while for the year 1921-22, the receipts are estimated at Rs. 90,000.

There has recently been an improvement in the condition of the silk industry in Bengal. Its progress may be measured by the fact that the area under mulberry on which the worms feed has increased by 33 per cent. in the last three years. This improvement is partly due to an increase in the price of silk, but it is also in a very large measure due to the confidence which the cultivators feel in the Government seed, and there is every reason to believe that the demand will continue to increase. At present the supervision over this Department is exercised by the Director of Agriculture, but, with the growth of the Department under his charge, it is impossible for him to give adequate supervision to this particular branch. A superior officer with expert knowledge, who can give his whole energies to the work of organising the sericultural industry in Bengal, is absolutely necessary.

In opposing the motion for omitting the provision for a Deputy Director of Agriculture, I dealt with the inadequacy of the superior staff of the department. I need not repeat what I then said, but I may remind members that we have only seven members of the Indian Agricultural Service in Bengal as against ten in Bihar and Orissa, 13 in the Central Provinces, 15 in the United Provinces, 15 in Burma and 25 in Madras. I ask the Council, to reject this motion.

The motion was then put and lost.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I beg leave to withdraw my motion, which runs as follows: "That the demand under head '34 B.—Agriculture' be reduced by omission from the Budget of the following item under detailed account '34 B.—Agriculture':—

Other contingent charges, Rs.1,19,000."

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to Monday, the 21st March, 1921, at 3 P.M., in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall Calcutta, on Monday, the 21st March, 1921, at 3 p.m.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 102 nominated and elected members.

Voting of Grants.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Order! Order! the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur) moved "that the amount of Rs. 7,99,000 be voted by this Council as the grant under head '35—Industries' for the year 1921-22."

This covers the demands of the Director of Industries, the Fisheries Department and the Electrical Adviser.

The Department of Industries is a young one, but the necessary officers are being recruited, and in its organisation we are closely following the lines laid down by the Indian Industrial Commission. The functions of the department, as indicated by that commission, are being gradually initiated. The work of the department falls into three main branches. First, there is the development of the knowledge of the natural resources of the province; then the department must encourage by research and demonstration the application of what information they already possess, and what new information it obtains, on an industrial scale. Its third function is to develop the facilities for the training of young men for technical and industrial occupations. As an example of the working of these functions I may take the Calcutta Research Tannery. First, information had to be collected regarding the existing state of the hide trade industry and regarding the tanning materials available in the province. When the information had been obtained, experiments and researches had to be conducted with a view to modifying the existing processes to suit Indian conditions. When good experimental results are obtained, they are applied on a commercial scale in the attached tannery. If these results are successful the processes are published in full detail for the benefit of the trade. Thirdly, during all this experimental work and in the application of the experimental results young men are being trained along the best lines in tanning-chemistry and in practical tanning. Tanning, however, is only one industry, but as funds are available other industries will be taken up and dealt with on similar lines. As is natural in the case of a department which is only just being organised, the estimates of expenditure for the coming year show a considerable increase over the estimates for the current year. This is accounted for largely by the filling up of the posts required for the working of the department and by the transfer to the Director of Industries of the expenditure incurred on the School of Art, the Survey School at Maynamati and the technical and industrial schools, which were formerly shown in the Education Budget. In addition, there is a lump provision of Rs. 1,20,000 for the development of industries. There is also a demand for Rs. 79,000 for the development of evening classes in the mining centres of Bengal. I shall have an opportunity of explaining this demand more fully in replying to the motion, of which notice has been given, for the omission of this sum. I need only say now that in view of the general demand for vocational education, I hope that the Council will vote the grant proposed.

The estimate for the Fisheries Department amounts to Rs. 54,000. Notice has been given of a motion to omit this estimate, and in replying to that motion I shall deal more fully with the work and prospects of the Fisheries Department.

The estimates for the Electrical Adviser and his staff are now shown under the head "Industries" instead of under head "41—Civil Works—Public Works Department," as the establishment has been transferred to the control of the Director of Industries.

I ask the Council, Sir, to vote the demand for Rs. 7,99,000 under head "35—Industries."

The PRESIDENT: The next motion (No. 116) of Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta has been inserted in the List of Business by mistake, for we are informed that the demand for Rs. 5,000 for revision of pay of the Electric Inspector is a non-voted item.

The next item (No. 117) will come under "41—Civil Estimates." I therefore pass it over.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I beg to withdraw my motion.

The following motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn: "That the demand under the head '35—Industries' be reduced by the omission of the provision of Rs. 79,000 for development of evening classes at the mining centres in Bengal."

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA moved "that the demand for Rs. 54,000 (detailed account No. 35 B.—Fisheries) be refused."

It appears that this Department of Fisheries was started in December, 1911. Before that there was no such department, and since 1911 up till now it appears from official papers and also from the answer that was given by the Hon'ble the Minister to the question put by my friend Babu Surendra Nath Mullick that up till now Rs. 3,82,450 has been spent upon this department, and, I may add, without any appreciable return; and it strikes me that this department, however useful it may be to other provinces, is not at all useful to this province. Sir, we, Bengalis, are a fish-eating people, we know the food value of fish, and we want that the supply of fish should be abundant; but at the same time we cannot afford to see that money should be wasted and without any adequate return. Sir, the organisation of a department like the Fisheries Department may be desirable where there is maritime or foreshore fishery. Now, in order to maintain this department, it seems that the province of Bengal and the province of Bihar and Orissa have been tacked together, and the same Director has to work for these two provinces. Something can be said in support of the existence of this department for Bihar and Orissa, because you know there are foreshore fisheries at Balasore, at Puri and other sea-coast towns and also there is an important fishery at Chilka Lake; but, as far as this province is concerned, there is no foreshore or estuarian fishery. All the fisheries are riparian. As far as the deltaic area is concerned, we know that the fish supply was quite abundant, but, Sir, in an important and growing town like Calcutta the supply may be at times scanty on account of the difficulties of transport. It cannot be said that in Bengal there is paucity of fish, but I confess that, as our old ideas have changed, the protection of fisheries has become a thing of the past. We have become more voracious. We do not care for certain periods which are called close seasons. Now, according to our Hindu ideas, we in former days used to observe strictly these close periods and these are the periods for breeding, but with the dissipation of that idea now the fish supply has become limited, and that is not the only reason, and with a good deal of hesitation I want to draw your attention to the fact that in the rivers the constant steamer traffic has also interfered with the rearing and the breeding of fish. Now, Sir, it strikes me that there is very little room for the development of Sunderbans fishery. I have carefully gone through the official reports about these fisheries. It seems to me that all the efforts up till now put forth have been directed towards Bihar and Orissa and the real difficulty appears to me to be this. Of course, I would be the last man to ask this House to vote out any sum which may be considered as capital laid out for future profit, but, Sir, there is no chance for future profit, because in these Bengal rivers the fishery rights are generally permanently settled and belong to private parties. There may be some belonging to Government, and these rights are farmed out or leased out to private parties. So, where is the room for the development of this department in the province of Bengal? I am not speaking in general, nor am I speaking of other provinces. For instance, I can well understand that the Fishery Department in Madras is a very important department, and there are many workshops for the manufacture of fish oil started in Madras, and there is a very good chance for the development of that industry in the province of Madras, but in Bengal I submit that there is no such chance. Then, Sir, the real difficulty with regard to the fish supply is that these fishermen constitute a class of people who are extremely poor, extremely uneducated and they are entirely helpless. Now to improve their condition we have two other departments, which have to work with very great zeal—I mean the Department of Co-operative Credit Societies and the Department of Education. For want of education these fishermen do not grow beyond their traditional ideas. Then for want of funds they are so very poor that they cannot make two ends meet and most of the fishermen—the jelias—give up their own paternal profession and take to agriculture, if land be available. The reason is not far to seek because whatever they earn is ruthlessly exploited by middlemen, and in order to put a stop to this the work of the Co-operative Credit Societies Department is most welcome. Now that the Department of Co-operative Credit Societies has been made permanent by the Secretary of State, it can be expected, that the department will work for the good and benefit of the fishermen. So the Council will see that as far as this province is concerned, this department has been a losing concern from the very beginning, and there is very little chance of its future development. Money has been wasted. This post of Director of Fisheries has been lying vacant for some length of time. But it may be said that we want research work, and we want some experiment. If that is desirable, I think that can be done as a part of the Agricultural Department, and also as a part of the Education Department, but a separate Department of Fisheries, with a Director of Fisheries drawing a large salary, is not necessary for this province. Of course it has been said by a friend of mine that Bengal is an advanced and civilized province and that every civilized Government ought to encourage an industry like this. If that be the consideration, I have very little to say; but, Sir, that is not the consideration. We have fallen on evil times. We should try our best to effect retrenchment wherever possible. If the members are all convinced that this department has a great future before it, that this department will tend to the abundant supply of fish, and that it will in the long run bring in a large amount of revenue to our coffers, I would not have the slightest objection to the continuance of this department. But from facts, which appear on the face of official reports, and from the facts which we ourselves know living in villages, living in the mufassal, living in the riparian districts—we know something of the life, the habits and the condition of the fishermen, who supply us with fish—I know that this department is perfectly useless, and, if any department can be of any use in organising these fishermen into a class of labourers or industrials, or will bring in some appreciable amount of money to the country, or will bring comforts to the fishermen themselves, I think that department is the Department of Co-operative Credit Societies. We want much propaganda work on the part of the Co-operative Credit Societies Department to go to villages, where these fishermen live, and it may be that zamindars will be induced to advance a little money or a little capital to these fishermen, who for want of money cannot work properly. I have a number of fishermen as tenants under me. They are extremely poor. They cannot even pay their rents. They do not know what it is to have a full meal from year's end to year's end. So they hanker after lands, but lands are not easily available. They cannot even turn to agriculture, though they like it very much, and the help that you can render to these fishermen is to organise them, to give them some capital to start fisheries, and to help them as much as possible by removing the middlemen, the profiteers. These middlemen advance small sums of money to these poor fishermen, and take away all the fish they catch, and sell it at a very high price and they manage to send it to Calcutta. I refer to the difficulty of transport, but that difficulty has been to a great extent removed by the cold storage system, which has been introduced. I think that with the development of railways in the province this difficulty will be further reduced, but all that is necessary is to give these poor fishermen some primary education by publishing leaflets in very common Bengali explaining the proper principles of pisciculture in order that they may take advantage of the scientific knowledge gained by experiments or research work in other parts of the world. This can be done by the Department of Education or Co-operative Credit Societies. There will be no necessity for a Department of Fisheries. Besides the departments I have mentioned, there is the Department of Agriculture, which is quite competent to look after the interests of the poor fishermen. My motion is based upon the consideration that during the last nine years we have spent Rs. 3,82,450 and have not derived any benefit therefrom. My suggestion is that in this year of our financial deficit we should not and we cannot spend Rs. 54,000 for a department which will give us no return and which gives us no promise of any future development. With these few words, I commend my amendment to the acceptance of this House.

Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: I beg to support the motion and I beg to lay before the Council a few facts which have induced me to support the motion.

In July 1906, Sir (then Mr.) K. G. Gupta was placed on special duty by Government to make an inquiry regarding the fisheries of Bengal and its fish supply. He submitted his report on 20th February, 1907, and he suggested "a constitution after the model of the Scottish Fisheries Board" and also adequate provision for the furtherance of scientific investigation into matters relating to fisheries. Mr. Gupta was succeeded by Mr. Ahmad, and the work was continued without any appreciable result. In May, 1917, the Department of Fisheries was inaugurated as a separate department, the object of the department being twofold, namely—

- (1) the increase in the number of fish available; and
- (2) the organization of the trade in fish.

As regards the first, there has been a sad failure; the department did what had been done and is being done by private traders, viz. supplying carp fry for cultivation in tanks. If the department had supplied guaranteed fry—scientifically tested—there would have been some justification for the expenses incurred by the Government. A question asked in the Bengal Legislative Council elicited the fact that the carp fry supplied to the public by the department was not even tested under a microscopic examination to obviate the charge of mixing up varieties. Thus the fry supply of the department was in no way superior to the fry supply in the hands of ordinary private traders, and I may tell you, Sir, that in most cases, the department made purchases of the fry from the private traders.

As regards the organization of the trade in fish, let us see what Mr. Southwell, Deputy Director, said in his report in 1917—I quote his own words: “The Calcutta fish-kings have agents everywhere throughout the province. These agents make advances of money to fishermen. The fishermen repay in fish the value of which is determined by the agent, who also keeps the account and forwards the fish to Calcutta. As a rule the fishermen are badly in debt to the agent or mahajan, and it is for this reason, amongst others, that even when willing (which is seldom), they are unable to break free from the nikari.”

The co-operative system suggested itself as a remedy. But the difficulties of introducing co-operation among the fishermen were illustrated by the Rajmehal experiment, which resulted in the fishermen turning themselves into middlemen.

In despair, Mr. Southwell said that the conditions will be improved only—I quote his own words—“when fishermen are educated and trained and when the moneyed classes of the province are ready and willing to interest themselves in the matter by providing the organization, the capital, and the banking facilities necessary to develop an industry which is of the greatest possible importance to all sections of the community.”

But if we have to wait for the education of the fishermen and the enlightened interest of the moneyed classes, we cannot expect to see any general reduction in the price of fish in our own time or in the near future.

As the department has not been able to show a record of useful work I feel bound to oppose the demand.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: This is a subject to which nothing new need be added. So far as I know, this department serves no useful purpose for Bengal. Even in England, I hear, they have agriculture and fisheries under one department. I cannot understand, why, if anything is to be done, it cannot be done by the Agricultural Department. Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta has said all that should be said. I appeal to the Hon'ble the Minister in charge to consider whether this department should be retained. He, as an inhabitant of the Eastern Districts, knows full well what useful purpose is served by this department. I hope the unnecessary expenditure will be cut down. With these few words, I support the amendment.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I have the disagreeable task of having to oppose this amendment. Is it known to the gentlemen who are trying to abolish the Fisheries Department that there is no civilized country in the world, in which there is not this department? Do they know that in the Empire of Austria it was the Fisheries Department that was the most lucrative department in the whole Empire? Do they know how the fisheries of this country may be developed to the great and lasting benefit of the country? Do they know that in every State of the United States of America there is a Fisheries Department? My friend Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri said that the Fisheries and Agriculture Departments in England are one. They may be one there. Is that a reason for abolishing it? Now, Sir, one of these gentlemen has said that, if ours is a civilized Government, we must have a Fisheries Department, but the reply was that we are not a civilized Government and we should not have one. Now, Sir, if we, poor people, are to be troubled in this fashion, I shall be very sorry indeed.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I think I can claim to be a civilized man, and after all, I am also a fish-eater, but I am opposed to this grant for the simple reason that for all these nine, or I suppose fifteen years, ever since this department was started, it has done no good either to the fish or the fish-eater. The only good that it has done is to those gentlemen, who are employed in this department, and therefore this is a department that stands absolutely self-condemned. From time to time, efforts, misguided, even mischievous, were made; for instance, when they started the Golden Crown to bring salt fish into Calcutta. This was done from want of information and stupendous ignorance as regards the habits of the people of this country; not knowing, or possibly not caring to know, that we, as a nation, are opposed to eating salt fish; we do not like them, but still we are being provided with them! These erratic efforts led to no benefit to the people——

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: That is no reason for abolishing the department.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: It is no reason certain but it is a reason to prevent waste. Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose under the impression that we should have a Fisheries Department whether the money is wasted or not. Just because this is a civilized country, there must be empty show bottles in the windows in the shape of a Fisheries Department. I am certainly opposed to this. Why must we keep a Fisheries Department just because of an empty show bottle to make-believe? If we must keep this department, keep it in a way in which it can be of use to everybody. I am one of those whom my honorable friend Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose began by saying that I was very much annoyed to find himself opposed to. I do not want to oppose other things, but I would certainly oppose this grant of Rs. 50,000 which is of no use either to the fish or the fish-eater. Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose said, why abolish it? That is not the question. The question is whether we should give this additional grant. May I ask if this is the whole of the money required, or only an additional grant?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHUR Khan Bahadur: This is the whole amount.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: If this is the total amount I am straightway for its abolition; it is a mere waste of money absolutely. It has been given a trial for 15 years, and it has been found sadly wanting. Is there any solid reason for incurring any further expenditure in this direction?

The whole thing started in this way. Mr. K. G. Gupta was to be given an appointment; there was no appointment to give him. The department was formed, and he was put in charge of it; it has continued since then. That is the real thing. In this Government, once a thing is started, it goes on, whether it is desirable or not. The department has failed in its object, which is to increase the supply of fish, to organise better methods of transport, and therefore it has not been able to do any good at all. Therefore, without any compunction I oppose this grant altogether.

Mr. S. R. DAS: I only desire to say a few words on this subject because I am sorry to find that there are so many speakers supporting a motion for a reduction of this grant. I do not think these members who supported this motion will deny that a good deal can be done in this department, that a good deal can be done not only to increase the supply of fish as well as the means of transport, but to make the department a paying one, if properly looked after. Now, assuming, I do not know myself, that nothing has been done in the past at all, assuming for a moment that the speakers are entirely in the right in saying that money has been wasted for the past nine years; we have now a reformed Government, we have our own Ministers in charge, we are going to ve a Standing Committee for this department, and in the circumstances, do the members consider it right to abolish the whole department altogether without giving the new Minister and the Standing Committee an opportunity of showing that something can be done? If at the end of this year nothing has been done, then the department can be abolished. But I would ask the members to remember that this motion really means the abolition of the department. It is not an additional grant that is asked for.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I wish to point out one thing to the House. It has been said that there is no civilized government where there is not a Department of Fisheries. That is quite true, but, so far as my information goes, there is nowhere a separate department for fisheries; everywhere the work of this department is being done by officers of the Agricultural Department. This is so in England, where there is a Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. What we propose is this: that this department must go; this window-dressing must cease, and the work that is being done by officers of the Fisheries Department must henceforth be done by the officers of the Agricultural Department. That can easily be arranged, because I maintain that, in spite of the adverse vote recorded a few days ago, the officers of the Agricultural Department have not got enough work to do.

With these few words, I support this motion.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: The Fisheries Department has for the last two or three years been labouring under great disadvantages in the matter of its superior staff, which consists of a Director and two Superintendents. In 1917, Mr. Mohsin, one of the Superintendents, resigned his appointment. In 1918, Mr. Southwell broke down in health and went on long leave, ultimately resigning his appointment on medical grounds. Mr. B. Das, the other Superintendent, died of cholera in September, 1919, and Dr. Beni Prasad, Mr. Mohsin's successor, who was appointed to officiate for Mr. Southwell, left the department for a better post as Assistant Superintendent of the Zoological Survey of India. The superior staff of the department now consists of one probationary Superintendent. The duties of the Director are being carried on by the Director of Agriculture.

In spite of being thus handicapped the department has done much useful work. It is reported that the important and difficult problem of breeding carp in confined waters is approaching solution. The scheme for distributing fry is gaining increasing popularity. In the last season 517,000 fry were distributed to the public and orders for 200,000 more were received too late for compliance. The scheme for a carp-breeding station is practically ready, but must await the appointment of a new Director.

As in the case of the Agricultural Department, so with the Fisheries Department, research must precede demonstration. Up to the present the Department has been largely engaged in research. It is in the stage of propaganda and demonstration that the work of the department will become known to the public and be appreciated by them. In a province, where fish forms such an important part of the diet of the people, an efficient Department of Fisheries has great openings and may do work of inestimable value to the people. It is in this belief that we are now reorganizing the Department. We have asked the Secretary of State to recruit an Expert for the post of Director and we have advertised for a new Superintendent.

Three days ago, however, we received certain information which will involve a reconsideration of our plans. Hitherto the cost of the superior staff has been shared between this Government and the Government of Bihar and Orissa. The Government of Bihar and Orissa have now intimated to us that they are unable in future years to bear any part of this expenditure. In view of this decision we shall have to consider the whole question of the permanent organization of the Fisheries Department. As this information was only received three days ago, it has not been possible to go into the matter yet. But I may point out that, even if it is decided to abolish the department altogether, or to reorganize it on a more modest scale, some expenditure will necessarily be incurred. To those officers, whose posts are to be abolished, some period of notice must be given, and permanent officers of the department, whose services may be dispensed with, will be entitled to gratuities or pensions according to the length of their service. This motion, if carried, will mean that we have no money at our disposal even for such unavoidable expenditure. I may point out that payment for the services of officers rendered in March is made in April and that, if the motion is carried, its effect would be that no money would be available to meet the pay already earned. I therefore ask the Council to reject the motion, and in doing so I may point out that the whole question of the retention and reorganization of the Fisheries Department will be laid before the Standing Committee.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I ask the Hon'ble Member to state any individual, single or specific good work done by this department?

The PRESIDENT: That is too general a question, and I cannot allow it.

The Ayes being 43 and the Noes 45, the motion was lost.

The original motion was then put to the vote and agreed to.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr) moved "that a sum of Rs. 2,08,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '37—Miscellaneous.'"

It will be observed that I am not asking for the full amount of Rs. 3,70,000 as shown in the Civil Estimates and in the List of Business under this head. I have cut out the provision of Rs. 1,62,000 for the Steam Boiler Commission. This item has not escaped the eagle eye of my friend Babu Surendra Nath Ray, and, as it seems to have raised a certain amount of interest, I may briefly say what the present position is with regard to this matter.

The Steam Boiler Commission of Bengal is a very old body dating back to 1863. Up till that year there were no arrangements for the inspection or testing of boilers, but in that year there was a very serious explosion in the Great Eastern Hotel, Calcutta, resulting in a considerable loss of life. This caused a strong public demand for an authority, which should test boilers before they were brought into use, and inspect them periodically to see that they were in a safe condition. The Calcutta Boiler Commission was accordingly set up in 1864 for this purpose. The Commissioner of Police has always been the Chairman of the Commission, and it is what is called a local fund; that is to say, it administers its own revenues and pays its own staff out of the fees which it collects for the inspection of boilers. These fees have generally exceeded the expenditure, and at the present time the Commission has a surplus of over Rs. 2,00,000. One of the incidental results of taking over the Commission's work by the local Government would have been that we should get this surplus, and we should of course take care to see that the department should continue to pay its own expenses, but of course, the financial aspect of the case is not so important as that of the public safety. The arrangements for boiler inspection in different parts of India vary very much. Bengal is the only province, except Burma, where the work is entirely in the hands of an independent body. In Bombay, the administrative work is in the hands of a commission, but the financial part of the business is managed by the Government. Elsewhere, I think, the whole thing is run by Government. Both the Public Services Commission and the Industrial Commission condemned the haphazard arrangements which exist in different provinces in India, and recommended that boiler inspection should be regarded as a function of the local Government, in the same way as factory inspection is. The Government of India accordingly appointed a committee in the beginning of last cold weather to go round the different provinces and submit a scheme for co-ordinating the work of the Boiler Commissions in different parts of India. The committee came to Calcutta last December, and gave us to understand that we should be prepared to take over this work very early next financial year. This accounts for the provision which we have made in the Budget. The committee, as is the way of committees, is still wandering over the country, and has not yet produced any report. After the receipt of the report, legislation will be necessary, and if, as we understand, that legislation will take place in the Imperial Council, we shall not get a new Act before next September at the earliest. After the Act comes into force, rules will have to be framed, and negotiations entered into with the present Boiler Commission as regards taking over its staff and surplus, and so on, and it will be well on in the financial year before we are called upon to assume any responsibility for the work which is at present done by the Boiler Commission. It may be found advisable to defer any change until the beginning of the next financial year. Anyhow, we see now that we shall not want the whole of this provision put down in the Budget; we may want some of it, but as things are at present, we cannot say how much we shall need.

In these circumstances we think our best course will be to withdraw this demand for the present, and, if necessary, we will come up later on in the year for a supplementary grant.

The remaining items of Rs. 2,08,000 which we now ask the Council to vote are composed of a number of miscellaneous heads mainly connected with industrial subjects. The most important is factory inspection, which accounts for Rs. 91,000, then we have the Smoke Nuisances Commission, which costs Rs. 22,000; and the Rent Controller's Office, Rs. 39,000. Then there is our usual grant to the Asiatic Society the cost of examinations and various other small items.

I need not take up the time of the Council by going into further details.

The motion that a sum of Rs. 2,08,000 be granted for Expenditure under the head "37—Miscellaneous" was then put and carried.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee) moved "that a sum of Rs. 12,20,000 be granted for expenditure under the head '41—Civil Works in charge of Civil Officers.'"

The Budget estimate of receipts for the current year was Rs. 1,35,000, which has been raised in the revised estimate to Rs. 1,40,000, while the revenue for 1921-22 has been estimated at Rs. 1,45,000. The fluctuation is slight and calls for no remarks. As regards expenditure, the estimate for 1921-22 is Rs. 12,36,000, of which Rs. 12,20,000 are voted. Details for Rs. 10,98,000 are given on page 48 of the Budget Statement. It will be seen that under this head there is a provision of Rs. 1,52,000, which will be placed at the disposal of Divisional Commissioners and District Collectors. As expenditure from the allotment will be debitable to the proper heads, the grants voted by the Council under those heads will be exceeded by the amounts added. I am therefore to ask for the sanction of the Council to the debiting of expenditure from this sum of Rs. 1,52,000 to the proper heads of account, when disbursement is made by Commissioners and Collectors.

The motion was put and agreed to.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC WORKS (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur) moved "that a demand of Rs. 1,29,35,000 be voted by this Council as the grant under the head '41—Civil Works (in charge of Public Works Officers)' for the year 1921-22."

The first item is "Civil Buildings," for which the amount is Rs. 71,98,000. This item is made up of items shown in the Public Works Department Budget notes, dated 2nd March, which were placed in the hands of members on that date, and therefore needs no further explanation.

The next item is "Communications," for which a sum of Rs. 6,25,000 is shown as required. Of this sum, Rs. 6,00,000 are required for works in progress.

The principal works in progress are:—Improvement of the Barnes-Mainaguri-Dhupguri Road in the Jalpaiguri district, including the construction of a major bridge over the Jhaldhaka river. The sum required for this work is Rs. 3,50,000. It is part of a scheme of road improvement in this important tea district, which embraces the opening up, not only of tea areas, but also of rice-producing areas, which supply food to the employees of the gardens. Better road communications for the above purposes, as well as for the efficient administration of the district, are an important asset, and the Government of Bengal have decided to proceed with this scheme in so far as funds can be set aside each year.

Other works in progress in the district, involving the metalling and improvement of existing roads, account for Rs. 90,000. A sum of Rs. 30,000 is required for carrying on the metalling of the Hilli-Balughat Road in the Dinajpur district, which it is proposed to complete, if funds can be found, during the year 1921-22.

The completion of the project for widening the Eden Gardens Road on the Calcutta Maidan and provision of footpaths on each side and the laying of a better surface on the road accounts for Rs. 60,000 of the works in progress. Another work in progress is the improvement of the surfaces of all the Maidan roads by laying tarmacadam instead of relaying the present water-bound macadam surface. For this a sum of Rs. 70,000 is required during the year. There can be no question in view of the heavier loads and faster traffic which the Maidan roads are now required to carry, that the surfaces of all roads must gradually be improved.

A small reserve of Rs. 25,000 is also provided under this head "Communications" for unforeseen minor works.

The next item in the account is "Miscellaneous Public Improvements," for which a sum of Rs. 1,58,000 is provided. This is made up of Rs. 1,50,000 for a work in progress, viz., extending the revetments required for the protection of banks at Surdah and Pabna from the erosion of the Ganges river. The remainder, viz., Rs. 8,000, is for a reserve to meet new minor works as they arise.

For the next item, "Repairs," a sum of Rs. 32,68,000 is provided. This is intended for the repairs and maintenance of buildings, communications and miscellaneous public works which are the property of Government and entrusted to the Public Works Department, for maintenance. It is an important item, for which the provision is none too liberal.

The next item, "Establishment," accounts for Rs. 13,98,000 and is based on the actuals required during the current year and the cost of the same establishment next year.

The last provision is Rs. 2,88,000 under the head "Other Items." This provision is intended to meet the cost of stock and tools and plant, both new supplies and repairs of existing tools.

The Council will observe from the Budget notes put before them relating to both "new works" and "works in progress" that almost the whole of the sum involved under this Budget head is required for the construction and maintenance of buildings required for the various departments of the administration, and that in these matters the work of the Public Works Department is in the nature of an agency; the heads "Communications" and "Miscellaneous Public Improvements" alone being under the administrative control of the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works.

The total of the above provisions amounts to Rs. 1,29,35,000, which the Council is now asked to vote.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY moved "that the demand for Rs. 30,000 on account of cost of increased establishment owing to separation of Roads and Buildings from Irrigation be reduced to Rs. 20,000."

The motion which was sent by me to the Legislative Department was that the demand for Rs. 54,000, on account of cost of the increased establishments owing to separation of Roads and Buildings from Irrigation, be reduced to Rs. 20,000; but in the printed list which we have got from the Legislative Department the demand is put down as Rs. 30,000. You will find, from page 62 of the Budget, that the cost of the Public Works Department on account of the increased establishment owing to separation of Roads and Buildings from Irrigation is Rs. 54,000 (the first item), and I do not know how this amount of Rs. 54,000 was reduced to Rs. 30,000—

The PRESIDENT: Because the rest is non-voted.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: But there is nothing to show in the Budget that the rest is non-voted.

The PRESIDENT: That is owing to a mistake. You are to confine yourself to Rs. 30,000.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I had a talk with Mr. Walsh on Friday last and he told me for the first time that Rs. 24,000 consisted of non-voted items. Unfortunately the Budget was not prepared in a proper way. More attention ought to be paid to its preparation in future.

The PRESIDENT: You accept Rs. 30,000.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: Yes, I accept it. Then, it appears that Rs. 4,500 per month extra is too much for two separate departments, which were formerly also under two Secretaries. Even now, it would be under two Secretaries, and the extra cost, I was told, was owing to the appointment of Executive Engineers on high pay. Neither do we know whether there is any necessity for such appointments, nor has the Hon'ble the Minister in charge explained to us why these appointments are necessary. As I have already said, both the Irrigation and the Roads and Buildings Departments were under separate Secretaries and they will now also be under separate Secretaries. Then, why this additional establishment? If he gives a satisfactory explanation, then I shall consider whether I should withdraw the motion or not.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: It is desirable that I should explain to the Council the purposes for which a provision of Rs. 54,000 has been made in the Budget. Of this sum, Rs. 30,000 is subject to the vote of the Council, and Babu Surendra Nath Ray desires that this should be reduced to Rs. 20,000.

As no doubt the Council is aware the Public Works Department is concerned with the operations of two branches, viz: "Irrigation" and "Roads and Buildings." The operations of the Irrigation Branch are reserved with Government, while those of the Buildings and Roads Branch are "transferred" to the charge of a Minister. While the operations of the department are clearly divided, the establishment both engineering and ministerial, which carries out and administers the operations, is borne on one common list, and forms part of the subject transferred to the Minister. This does not mean that the Buildings and Roads Branch of the department bears the cost of the establishment employed on irrigation operations, as the Irrigation Branch bears the cost of the establishment employed on its own operations.

It has long been recognised that the arrangement of a joint establishment is unsatisfactory, and the recent introduction of the reformed system of government has emphasised the necessity of complete separation; so that the establishment employed on irrigation operations may be administered by the Member in charge of the reserved branch, while that employed on buildings and roads operations alone may come under the administration of the Minister in charge of that branch.

The proposition for separation has been accepted by the Secretary of State, and it is the intention of Government to give effect to his orders as soon as the requisite number of engineer officers can be secured and necessary Budget provision has been made.

Hitherto there have been three *buildings and roads circles of superintendence, while a fourth †circle, engaged in both buildings and roads and irrigation operations, has been treated as an irrigation circle. As soon as separation takes place, it will be necessary, therefore, to create this fourth circle, which will then be concerned entirely with buildings and roads operations.

*Presidency Northern. Eastern.

†Central.

Turning to the divisional charges, they are at present 14 in number, of which only 8 are in charge of permanent service officers of the full rank of an Executive Engineer. Two of the divisions, which are of a temporary nature, are in charge of temporary Engineers, while the remaining four divisions are, in consequence of shortage of staff, held by Assistant Executive and Provincial Service Engineers. This arrangement is unsatisfactory, as it weakens the strength of officers whose proper functions are as assistants to Executive Engineers and as Sub-divisional Officers. The intention is to provide five additional permanent service officers of the rank of Executive Engineer for divisional charges which number includes one officer to provide for a leave vacancy.

Then again the branch is entitled to a cadre of ten regular service Assistant Executive Engineers, but at present only seven officers of that rank are employed. The deficiency is thus three. The intention is to make good this deficiency.

The pay of the regular service officers, in which the department is deficient, together with the cost of the establishment required for the fourth Superintending Engineer's office, amounts to a sum of Rs. 1,08,000 per annum, and this was the amount for new regular service establishment originally demanded. In view of the paucity of funds during the coming year, however, it was agreed on the representation of the Hon'ble the Finance Member that the demand should be cut down to one-half, with the result that the additional regular staff required to efficiently carry on the operations of the Buildings and Roads Branch of the department will not be brought up to full strength during 1921-22 but that recruitment will be spread over two years.

Now, of the sum of Rs. 54,000 which has been provided in the Budget, Rs. 30,000 only is subject to the vote of the Council, as the salaries of those officers of the superior engineering service who are appointed by the Secretary of State are not subject to vote.

It is this voted item of Rs. 30,000 which the mover desires should be reduced to Rs. 20,000, that is, by Rs. 10,000.

In view of the reduction in the original demand made by this department, which has already been agreed to, the only effect of the further reduction urged by the mover will be to hamper the department in its endeavours to give effect to the settled scheme of separation, which has been decided on solely with a view to greater efficiency in the important spending department of Public Works.

I trust, therefore, that the mover will see the wisdom of withdrawing this motion on my giving him an assurance that the intention of separation is greater efficiency and not mere extravagance.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The following amendments were, by leave of the Council, with drawn :—

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: “ That the demand under the head ‘ 41.—Civil Works ’ be reduced by the omission from the Budget of the item ‘ Construction of Pabna-Bogra settlement buildings at Serajganj —Rs. 40,000.”

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: “ That the demand under the head ‘ 41.—Civil Works ’ be reduced by the reduction of the allotment for ‘ the construction of Survey office at Alipore ’ from Rs. 1,25,000 to Rs. 75,000.”

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: “ That a sum of Rs. 30,000 provided for settlement buildings at Suri be refused.”

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand for Rs. 10,000 for the construction of a combined liquor warehouse and ganja gola at Diamond Harbour be refused."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand under head '41.—Civil Works' be reduced by the omission from the Budget of the provision for Rs. 19,000 for 'the construction of certain buildings for the Agricultural Farm at Suri.'"

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand under head '41.—Civil Works' be reduced by the omission from the Budget of the provision for Rs. 30,000 for 'the construction of buildings in connection with the establishment of Agricultural Farm at Goalehamot.'"

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand under head '41.—Civil Works' be reduced by the omission of the provision of Rs. 40,000 for seven sets of quarters for the assistants of the Dacca Farm.'"

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ formally moved "that the demand under the head '41.—Civil Works' be reduced by the omission from the Budget of the provision of Rs. 6,00,000 for raising the site of the proposed rural magistracy at Itna, raising the site at Dhanbari, and supply of bricks for the Mymensingh partition scheme.

The PRESIDENT: The next three motions (Nos. 149 - 151) are the same as motion No. 148. Those who have given notice of them may speak if they like.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I support the motion formally moved by my friend Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq. The partition of Mymensingh was, so far as I remember, proposed in the year 1916-17 upon the recommendation of the District Administration Committee. As far as I have been able to see, this proposal was mainly based on political considerations. For political unrest it was then thought advisable that the district should be partitioned and arrangements made for proper control, but that state of things, I am glad to say, no longer exists. So, if now we are to launch upon any such scheme, if we are to spend a lot of money upon the partition of districts, we must first of all be satisfied of its necessity. If necessity has been established, then it must be done. It is for the Government to satisfy us whether there is such a necessity.

It may be said that this is also an irresponsible motion. I do not really understand to whom we are irresponsible; if it is to the bureaucracy, I for one plead guilty to the charge. It may be said that some years ago it was decided that the partition should be proceeded with, but as for want of funds it could not be done then, it may be done now.

I do not know whether the Hon'ble Finance Member has got any assurance of special financial help from the Government of India, so that if we are now very prosperous we might undertake this partition affair. The question of partition of the district of Mymensingh was raised in this Council once before, and we were told upon an estimate, put forward, I believe, by my friend Mr. Kerr, that about Rs. 45,00,000 would be required for capital expenditure, and the recurring expenditure would be about Rs. 3,00,000 or so. At that time the people had practically no voice in this Council; our protests were simply pious wishes. Now that the beginning of a responsible Government has been made, it ought to be shown to the people that the partition is necessary. So far as I remember, it has been said in the District Administration Committee's Report that some objections were made with a view to retain the district as it is and that these objections were made by some interested persons, viz., by some pleaders; but, Sir, I am not yet satisfied that the partition is really wanted by the people in general. How is it that funds are forthcoming to undertake this partition scheme against the wishes of the people at a time when vocational education cannot be arranged at Dacca, I understand, simply for want of funds? People are not at all keen about it. I have been told by a member of this Council who is an inhabitant of the Tangail subdivision, that people do not think it is at all necessary. There may be a few interested persons in favour of the proposal, but we must be satisfied that it is really intended for the benefit of the people. Unless that is established, we should consider whether we should undertake such a costly scheme. It is simply for luxury, for increasing the number of district officers that this scheme has been brought forward. We should not therefore support it, or at any rate I think there is no hurry for it. If the thing could not be done for so many years for want of funds, I do not think that we should undertake a costly scheme like this this year, when, also we have not sufficient funds.

Then, Sir, I believe a committee is about to be constituted with a view to suggest retrenchments where necessary. There are many who are of opinion that instead of partitioning the bigger districts the smaller districts should be combined and the cost of administration thereby minimised: this I think a very important suggestion, and the said committee should consider whether it is possible to effect some retrenchment in this direction. Further, when the idea of district partition cropped up, there was no proposal of increasing the cost of ordinary administration by increase of pay of the various services, for which about a crore of rupees, I believe, would be added to the cost of administration by the end of next year. So we should consider whether under the circumstances it would be reasonable and proper to add that heavy expenditure to the cost of administration: even if it be Rs. 3,00,000, still it is very considerable, and my information goes—we were assured by Mr. Kerr last year—that the estimate would be about Rs. 45,00,000. But I think that that estimate was an underestimate. This year the estimate will be about nearly Rs. 16,00,000 only for bricks and raising the sites, and then lots of money will have to be spent over the construction of buildings, schools, hospitals, etc. Apart from these facts, it is for consideration whether this expenditure from the public exchequer is at all necessary. If it is not necessary, then we should not do it. I believe I voice the sentiment of a large section of the people when I say that this should not be done.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I believe that this grant of Rs. 6,00,000 is wanted in connection with the partition of the Mymensingh district. Sir, this proposal for the partition of the district of Mymensingh, which was, I believe, carried in the teeth of opposition from many of the people of the district some years ago, has got to be viewed from a different standpoint now. Many things have happened since this proposal was accepted. It was a pre-Reform measure. Since then, the Reforms have been passed, and it has been repeated in this House often and often that the angle of vision has changed in many matters—and I think in the matter of the partition also, the angle of vision has got to be changed. The formation of Standing Committees has been mentioned several times in this House, and many things are to be referred to them, and I think it is advisable that this question of partition should be referred to one of the Standing Committees that are going to be formed. Then again, when the question of partition of districts was taken up, it was found that the District Magistrate had so many and multifarious duties that he could not very well manage them. Since then the duties of the District Magistrate have been lightened. The Chairman of the District Board is now a non-official gentleman, and the post of Additional Magistrate has not been abolished and is not going to be. In this view of the case, the question has got to be reconsidered. It is a very fortunate thing for this Council that we have been able to touch this matter at a very preliminary stage. We notice that these Rs. 6,00,000 are wanted to raise lands in some villages in Itna and Dhanbari. Where are these villages that we should spend money there? Let the Standing Committee decide that this is absolutely necessary, and then and then only it will be time to ask the Council to vote on this question. Our financial difficulties are known to all and we cannot spend this money now.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: The placid water, upon which the bark of the Budget is being piloted by the Hon'ble Member, shows that there is not much desire on the part of the members of this Council to hamper the Ministers in the discharge of their duties. It is perfectly clear from the number of resolutions that have been withdrawn that there is no desire to embarrass the Government. In regard to the matter of the partition of Mymensingh the fact that notice has been given by no less three members of this Council shows that they attach more than ordinary importance to this item of expenditure.

The question of the dismemberment of the district of Mymensingh has been discussed threadbare. As a member of the old Council I know that it was very fully and exhaustively discussed and I need not travel over the same ground again. But I would confine myself to the situation in which we are now placed to-day, and that is, the peril of deficit. Well, it is a natural desire on the part of any member of this House to find out and to suggest if it is possible to make any retrenchment, however small it may be, with a view to replenish our exchequer. Here is a big sum of Rs. 6,00,000 required—for what purpose?—required to carry out the partition of Mymensingh. The question naturally arises, is it such an important item for which this immediate grant of Rs. 6,00,000 is necessary? Does the Hon'ble Member think that the administration would come to a deadlock if the grant of Rs. 6,00,000 is not made immediately? Mymensingh is a prosperous district. Its prosperity both in wealth and education is well-known. It has got a water supply of its own and a first grade college. You cannot expect, if you dismember the district into three parts, that you will at once be able to install separate water-works in the three districts or a first grade college in each of the districts. What is the hurry then? It may be said—it is a question of administrative efficiency—the administration cannot be carried on with such an unwieldy district. I do not want again to travel over the same ground, as I have already said, but is that a sufficient argument for which we should at once make a grant of Rs. 6,00,000 from our depleted exchequer? Take, for instance, the land revenue—the land revenue of the 24-Parganas, I find, is Rs. 18,00,000, of Barisal Rs. 19,00,000, Mymensingh Rs. 9,00,000. Is the collection of land revenue—take it as an item of the administration—such a heavy work that you would require the immediate creation of the three districts and that you cannot wait till you see whether your financial position improves? Then as regards magisterial work. While the 24-Parganas had 35,000 cases Mymensingh has only 12,000. I again ask, is this such a heavy work that the district officers with their regiment of officers are unable to cope with it? The I find that last year a grant of Rs. 2,40,000 was made, and out of that Rs. 1,40,000—was spent over this partition scheme—Rs. 1,00,000 for the raising of the Dhanbari site, and the remaining Rs. 40,000 for the raising of sites and for the provision of subdivisional headquarters. Bajitpur, etc. This year I find only one mystic figure in the Budget Rs. 6,00,000. Are we not entitled to know how it is proposed to be spent? Nothing is shown in the Budget Statement that has been circulated to us. I think, therefore, that the scheme is yet immature, and that there is no hurry in allocating such a huge sum in the Budget which may not perhaps be spent, and that it is possible to carry on the administration with the present staff. It would appear from the figures which I have collected that the work in Mymensingh is half that of the 24-Parganas which has not yet been dismembered and if the pre-staff at Mymensingh is not sufficient then it is open to the Government to appoint one or two officers more, and it would cost much less than this sum of Rs. 6, 00,000. I would therefore support the motion, and I hope the Hon'ble Member will see his way to accepting our request; and I hope that the question will not be decided on the basis of what is sometimes called izzat or simple zid.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: It may not be known to all the members of this Council that the works in connection with the partition of the Mymensingh district would cost Government Rs. 73,58,100. That is the figure which was given to me by Mr. Kerr the other day. And what is the financial condition of the Government. Mr. Kerr in his Budget Statement said—I shall quote his own words—"our financial position is unsatisfactory—most unsatisfactory—but in our everyday administration we are always running up against something unsatisfactory." This is no doubt the consolation which the Government wants to give us. I would ask: Is this the time to launch a scheme which would cost Rs. 73,58,100 or close upon Rs. 80,00,000? We know very well that the Public Works Budget is sure to increase by leaps and bounds within a very short time. We know also that the price of materials is now very high. Is this the time—even if you concede that the partition of Mymensingh is necessary—to launch a scheme like this? What are you going to do then? One district of Mymensingh is going to be divided into three districts, and I have been told by a gentleman who is a resident of Mymensingh that the distance of one of the districts from the other is only 4 hours' journey by rail, that from Jamalpur to Mymensingh it is only about 4 hours' journey. What is, then, the necessity of incurring this large expenditure when you know that you can go to the headquarters within 4 hours? Of course you know also that Mymensingh has now a network of railways. Formerly it was no doubt very inconvenient for the people of the mufassal to go to the headquarters, but now you have got a network of railways, you have got the Dacca-Mymensingh railway, and I think a survey is going to be made for a loop line also. Having this convenience and this advantage, I think it is time that the thing ought to be put a stop to at once. No doubt we are drawing upon our reserves and we shall have Rs. 52,00,000 from our net reserve of about four crores of rupees. Next year if the Government of India do not make any adequate provision for us, we shall be forced to impose fresh taxation. Is it proper for us to launch this heavy expenditure without first knowing what our position would be in the near future? Let us see what the Government of India does for us, what additional money is added to our income. Unless we know that, I think it is not proper that we should launch further schemes which would cost an immense sum of money; and is it fair to the public, to the poor, to the masses, that we should launch such schemes by which fresh taxation would be unavoidably necessary? With these words, I beg to support the motion.

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): This batch of resolutions and the batch that comes after have reference to a subject of very great interest and importance in provincial administration—a much discussed subject, but a subject which is of vital importance to the efficiency of administration in certain parts of this province—and it behoves the Council, therefore, to examine the question strictly on the merits and equally free from considerations of izat and ad to which Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur has made reference, and which I, on my part, most emphatically disclaim.

This whole question of overgrown districts has fortunately been examined at length in fairly recent times by a very responsible body composed of experienced administrators, not only of this province but of other provinces, and if I base my remarks largely on the report of that body it is because that constitutes a convenient compendium of the arguments on either side. If any member of the Council wishes to get a succinct idea of the merits of the question I would commend to him perusal Chapter III of the Report of the District Administration Committee entitled “The excessive size of certain districts and subdivisions.”

Although these two batches of resolutions deal specifically only with Mymensingh and Midnapore, it is unfortunately the case that the characteristic of overgrowth distinguishes other districts in Bengal also. That is the answer to Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur's argument that because Mymensingh is not much bigger than the 24-Parganas, why should it be necessary to partition it? The truth is that the districts of the 24-Parganas, Dacca, Bakarganj, Faridpur, are all, under modern conditions, of inconvenient size, and regarding them the same committee also made proposals. But it is, of course, obviously impossible to undertake changes in six districts at once, and, therefore, our present proposals are concerned with two only. But on the merits changes in those other districts are equally justified.

Now, Sir, what is the general position about the partition of districts? We have found after many years' experience that, in modern conditions, some of the district officers' charges in Bengal cannot be efficiently and properly run as single units. Whatever may have been the case in the past, modern conditions of administration have altered the position, and we have a long and consistent testimony from those who have been in charge of the districts, as well as from a series of experienced administrators who have looked into the matter, that, unless something can be done to relieve the territorial burden on our officers, the work of these districts cannot be properly supervised. I will read a quotation from the District Administration report which puts the facts in a nutshell. They say:

There are certain things such as the supervision of the courts, the disposal of case-work, of current references and correspondence, the control of existing institutions, that, though by no means necessarily constituting the most important part of a Collector's work, yet make the most insistent demand on his time. This lass of duties has assumed such proportions that they leave the Collector hardly any leisure for other tasks, with the result that the latter, which are often of deeper necessity and more essential to the true welfare and advancement of the people, are left undone. We allude to such matters as the supervision of education; personal intercourse with the people; the collection and assimilation of detailed economic, social and political knowledge, and the elaboration of schemes which require such knowledge. The neglect of these is not so readily apparent or so easily discerned by an official inspection, but sooner or later some deep-seated evil is bound to make its appearance in the administrative organisation from this weakening of its vital impulse. We have dwelt more particularly on the necessity for the relief of the Collector, the officer with whose functions our report is principally concerned; but the pressure of the work is almost as great in the case of other officers. The District Judge is seldom able to visit his outlying courts, and he has to rely on the Additional Judge to deal with many of the appeals that come from them, the Civil Surgeon rarely inspects a tithe of his outlying dispensaries, and the Superintendent of Police has to delegate an undesirably large portion of his authority to an Additional Superintendent, an expedient to which the objections taken in the case of Additional District Magistrates apply with equal force.

That, Sir, concisely sums up the issues. The work cannot be done, while important portions of it have a vital bearing on the interests of the people. To take one example,—the growth of village government. We hear much about that nowadays, and it is a subject in which we are all interested. But if village government is to be fostered and encouraged it must be possible for superior officers to give sympathetic help to these bodies, and if there is a very large number of them it is absolutely impossible for the Collector to be in any sort of personal touch with their members. In the absence of this stimulus enthusiasm will fade and the experiment will fail.

But this same committee were not merely content to emphasise the difficulties; they also examined in detail various suggestions, such as the appointment of Additional Magistrates, etc., which were advanced in different quarters by way of solution, and they finally arrived at a very clear and specific finding, namely:

We have, therefore, come to the deliberate conclusion that there is no objection of real importance to the partition of unwieldy districts and subdivisions, and that this is the only real solution of the difficulty. The district and the subdivisional boundaries are not sacrosanct, and the sooner this is realised the better. These boundaries have been repeatedly altered in the past. In all branches of the administration work is daily becoming more heavy and more complex with the increase in population and education; and there is no reason why Government should hesitate to do now what it has so often done before—to modify the administrative charges of its officers in such a way that the work will be efficiently performed and the real wants of the people will be met.

That is a very definite finding, and in the same paragraph it is supported by a remark which has a very distinct bearing on the argument which we have heard to-day, that these changes are not wanted by the people. They wrote:—

There are some others who deny the necessity of reducing these heavy charges, as they have no means of gauging the volume or appreciating the difficulties of the district officer's work. But the mass of the population entertain no objection whatever to the proposals for the partition of districts and subdivisions. In fact they welcome changes which are so obviously undertaken for their own protection and for their own convenience.

The committee admitted that opposition was shown in some quarters. Obviously that was likely. None of us like change, especially when it means parting with old associations and upsetting long-standing arrangements. But the committee said clearly that the opposition came mainly from headquarters, where the course of life would necessarily be somewhat disturbed by a modification of boundaries of this kind, however little the people at large shared in that feeling. In this particular case of Mymensingh it is particularly noticeable that the committee remarked:—

The Muhammadans, though somewhat nervous as to the effect of the partition on their numerical position, were decidedly in favour of the measure; and there were also whole-hearted supporters of the proposal among the Hindu zamindars.

In fact a considerable rivalry sprung up between outlying centres as to which should be the headquarters of the new districts and subdivisions.

So much for the general case, and before I leave this part of the subject I would like to emphasise that the question rests on the administrative merits to which I am making reference, and not, as Babu Kishor Mohan Chaudhuri would make us believe, on what is known as the "unrest" which prevailed in Bengal some years ago. The issues are the wider administrative ones which I have been outlining.

Now, turning to this particular case of Mymensingh, let us see what the area is with which we are dealing. The committee's description of the district is not without interest:—

It contains five subdivisions, of which the areas vary from 1,822 square miles to 985 square miles, and the population from 1,185,330 to 655,295 persons. The population of any one of these exceeds the average population of a district in most provinces of India. Large areas in the south-east of the district are covered with swamps, which the rains convert into wide stretches of water. They are intersected by numerous channels, communications are decidedly deficient, roads are few and bad, and only one of the subdivisional headquarters is connected with Mymensingh by railway.

The district is doubtless known to many of us, and I think that this will be accepted as a fair description of this area. That being so, and combining these facts with the general arguments upon which I have touched, I put it to the Council that there is a strong prima facie case for relief in this particular instance. Neither can it be said that in applying that relief Government have been unduly precipitate, and this point has a bearing upon the argument which we have heard from Babu Surendra Nath Ray, to the effect that "When so much expenditure is involved, why not postpone it—why spend so much money on it now? My answer to that is that the members who talked in that strain, though urging ostponement, are really in their hearts desiring abandonment, because, we take a case that has been going on, as this one has, since 1876, cannot be said that in finally carrying it into effect now and in the few succeeding years, we have not already given fully weight--almost excessive weight--to the expediency of delay. Neither can it be said that this project has been embarked upon without the fullest consultation of all interested, and the most complete endeavour to meet all reasonable wishes. Let me just outline some of the more important stages. As I have already said, this proposal was initiated in 1876, when it was postponed for financial reasons. It was again examined in 1884, when the solution of a new subdivision was tried. In 1904 it came up in Mr Andrew Fraser's time and was shelved by the partition of Bengal. The Eastern Bengal and Assam Government took it up in 1908, and made detailed inquiries which rather came to grief over the problem of where the headquarters of the new district were to be. Lord Carmichael took it up again in 1912, published a resolution detailing very argument that was relevant, while he himself went to the spot, held conferences, and discussed the problem with all the leading men. In 1913 the District Administration Committee examined it, while in 1915 the whole result of previous inquiries was again summarised in a resolution, opinions were collected, and detailed changes were made by way of meeting local sentiment to a certain extent. So we have had a protracted inquiry of some 44 years preceding this action which we have now begun and which we wish to complete in the approaching and subsequent years. Moreover, in this Council the question has been more than once debated in connection with recent budgets, and various resolutions connected with it have at one time or another been either lost or withdrawn. Therefore, our proposals are no haphazard happy thoughts, but are based upon exhaustive inquiries and a general consensus of administrative opinion that it is expedient that this change should be effected, and in no respect is it more important than in that of the District Board. Non-official chairmen have lately been appointed to District Boards, but I say without hesitation that a non-official chairman, who will normally find it difficult to spend much time in the mufassal, will find it absolutely impossible to supervise his subordinates in a district of the area of Mymensingh. Mr. Hopkyns, who was for three years Collector of this district and is one of our most capable officers, has just told me that during his tenure he was not able to visit all his thanas. Now three years is rather longer than the ordinary time which a District Magistrate remains in one district, and if even in that time an energetic officer is not able to visit all the outlying thanas, it is unfair to accuse the District Magistrate of not exercising efficient supervision.

There is one final argument and that is the financial one. I freely admit that these partitions of districts are most unfortunately an expensive remedy, which nobody can regret more than we do. If we could have taken them in hand many years before, they could have been done far more cheaply than is the case now. That general point is unfortunate true, and it is equally true that the bill for this particular partition is very large one—a matter of some Rs. 73,00,000. But we have already commenced work, and it is only right that the Council should clearly recognise what money we have already spent and to what extent we are committed to the scheme. We have spent about Rs. 7,50,000 on acquiring land, and with minor incidental expenses the total comes to Rs. 7,64,000, while we are at the present moment practically committed to works in progress in connection with the preparation of the site which will account for another Rs. 85,000. That is to say, we have already practically spent nearly Rs. 8,50,000 on this scheme. The Council may perhaps say, “Well, Rs. 8,50,000 is something, but Rs. 73,00,000 is more.” That also is true. But let it be remembered that if we adopt this plea of postponement, the cost will not go down, it will go up; and if this change is ever to be effected, then sooner or later we shall have to face the expense. Mere postponement will not afford a solution. The question is whether we are going to give the administration of these overgrown districts a fair chance at this considerable and regrettable cost, or are we to continue to say, as we have for so many years said, “We will just carry on as best we can.” Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur has urged that if we postpone this partition it will not bring the administration to a standstill. That is true, as obviously the administration has been going on in a way for many years. But it will mean that the administration will go on under thoroughly unsatisfactory conditions, and it will be unfair to complain if District Magistrates are unable to exercise the supervision for which we ordinarily look to them.

For these reasons I put it to the Council that the project is very important and fully justifiable, even though costly.

The motion then being put, a division was taken, with the following result:—

The Ayes being 61 and the Noes 31, the motion was carried.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: This motion depends upon the consideration of motion No. 153. If I am permitted to speak, as I was allowed to do with reference to amendment No. 15, on both these motions, I think that will be convenient. I think the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler will consider the question.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I would point out that motion Nos. 152 to 157 are all identical as regards the main issue.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: If motions Nos. 153 to 157 are carried, then I think this will also go along with them.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: The position is the same, as in connection with an earlier resolution of the same member about establishments in the Hijli district. If the partition of Midnapore, is abandoned the provision for a water-supply scheme at Hijli would naturally go out along with it.

Amendment No. 152 was then withdrawn.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY, in the absence of Babu Sarat Chandra Janah, moved "that the demand of Rs. 7,25,000 for the partition of Midnapore be refused."

The principal ground generally advanced in support of the proposal to divide the present district is, that the district with its large area of 5,150 square miles and a population of 2,821,201 entails an amount of heavy administrative work. Midnapore is a purely agricultural district without any mills or factories. There are no factories or mills within the area. For the last century and a half of the British connection, during the early part of which a considerable amount of spade work had to be undertaken and carried out, one single district officer was found to be quite sufficient to cope with the work of administration. In those days there were no well laid-out kutchra and pucca roads or canals and other convenient means of communication from one part of the district to the other. Within the last twenty years, however, the aspect of the entire district has been changed almost out of recognition by the introduction of railways. If you look at the map of Midnapore you will notice that the configuration of the district is almost like a circle and the town of Midnapore is at its centre. From this centre radiate railway lines north, east, south and west, dividing the district into four segments, thereby opening out the entire district and making the most distant and obscure parts easily accessible from the district headquarters. Besides this, the whole area of the district is covered by a network of well aligned and long stretches of pucca and kutchra District Board roads with a total mileage of 1,498 miles including Local Board and Union Board roads. Add to this there is the further facility of communications afforded by three regular motor services connecting the three outlying subdivisions with the nearest railway stations. The district officer, twenty years ago, had not a single one of these advantages. The appointment of an Additional District Magistrate with all the powers of a district officer has, to begin with, the practical effect of relieving the district officer of about 40 per cent. of his duties and this arrangement has been working very satisfactorily for a considerable length of time. Under the existing system his connection with the important departments of Registration, Excise and Police has become almost nominal. He is no longer the District Registrar of Midnapore. The appointment of a non-official Chairman of the District Board has relieved the district officer of a portion of his duties. All this has the necessary effect of further reduction of his duties.

The effect of the partition of the district as proposed by the Bengal Government resolution is this. That Midnapore sadar would consist of thanas Midnapore, Salbani, Garbhet, Keshpur and Debra. This has an area of 1,079 square miles and a population of 414,258. The new subdivision at Jhargram would consist of thanas Jhargram, Binpur and Gopballavpur, with an area of 1,237 square miles and 372,793 population, and the Ghatal subdivision would consist of thanas Ghatal, Daspur and Chhatrapurkona, with an area of 372 square miles and a population of 301,396. This new district of Hijli would have its headquarters at Kharagpur, with the following subdivisions:—Hijli, Contai and Tamluk. This distribution was arrived at after several intermediate stages, beginning from 1906. In point of area and population, therefore, the two districts would be considerably reduced, and the headquarters of the new district would be only 6 miles off from the old one. This is about quarter of an hour's journey by railway. The town of Midnapore is an old one. The Municipality manages a second grade college and has got a charitable dispensary. The Municipality has also taken up the water-works scheme and it is in progress. The revenues of the Municipality and the District will be greatly reduced, and it is doubtful whether the cost of upkeep of the existing establishment could be met from them. The annual recurring expenses for the upkeep of the new district would come to something like Rs. 2,00,000 and the initial expense about Rs. 18,00,000. If administrative efficiency in the truest sense of the term be the strongest reason from the Government point of view, it seems it is the weakest one from the people's point of view. What really is efficient administration? Is it not making the people healthier, wealthier, more educated and more prosperous, making them fitter and better citizens? I think it would redound to the interests of the people of the place, instead of spending about Rs. 18,00,000 and creating another district, the same amount were spent in works of public utility, in sanitation and other schemes.

With these few remarks, I beg to move the motion "that the demand Rs. 7,25,000 for the partition of Midnapore be refused."

The PRESIDENT: This motion and the motions that follow nos. 154 to 157) are identical. Therefore I would call on the intending movers of those motions to speak on this.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I said in connection with the question of the partition of Mymensingh that it was on political considerations that the question was raised. We have been referred to the Report of the District Administration Committee, Chapter III. I have carefully gone through it, and my impression still is that I am not mistaken in that view. The proposals were put forward by Sir Richard Temple in 1876. The proposals for the reduction of the larger areas were abandoned on financial considerations finally in 1885. Again the question was raised, but when it was made known to the public a number of petitions were received.

In this way the matter could not be seriously taken up. When last year the case was taken up in 1913, after the decision of the appeal in the well-known Midnapore law suit, a fresh resolution was issued inviting objections, of which a plentiful crop was forthcoming. This shows, clearly, that when there was unrest in the district, it was really thought necessary. At last the District Administration Committee said—I refer to the last portion—that the masses of the population entertain no objection. At first it was said that there were objections, but these objections are from interested persons (from the zamindars' point of view)—from pleaders and other persons—and the masses of the population entertain no objection whatever to proposals for the partition of these districts and subdivisions and, in fact, they welcome changes which are so obviously undertaken for their own protection and for their own convenience. So, it comes to this that, on account of the wishes of the people, the idea was originated and seriously taken up. Now if we are satisfied that it was seriously so, then a necessity arises; otherwise, I think we are right in saying that there is no necessity. As far as possible, we have ascertained the wishes of the representative of the people. Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur is there, who is the representative of the zamindar class, and I am sorry my friend Babu Sarat Chandra Janah is not present on account of some bereavement. He was prepared to move a resolution as a representative of the people to say that it is not at all necessary. Babu Satish Chandra Mukharji, I believe, is here as a representative of the people, and he is of opinion that it is not wanted by the people. If it is so, Sir, the real ground is gone, and I can safely say that Government has no case at all. As I said, if it is really necessary for the benefit of the people, it can be done. Unless that necessity is established, we should not undertake a costly arrangement like this. It is not a very high question. Lots of money will be required and there is no knowing how we can meet it. If, on the other hand, there is no necessity, I think this Council cannot accept the proposal. Here we are as the people's representatives, and we owe a duty to them. As their representatives we say that there is no necessity and the people do not want it, and in that view, if the report of the District Administration Committee is wrong, I think there is a strong case for interference. Simply because it was taken up in recent years and money could not be found for it on account of the shortness of fund—that is no ground why this year it should be taken up. We see no hurry. If the question could be in abeyance for several years, why should it not remain in abeyance for another year? In the meantime let the wishes of the people be ascertained. It is not necessary to speak much, and I believe the representatives are anxious to say something about it; so, I do not wish to take up much time of the House. With these few words, I commend the amendment for the acceptance of the House.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I consider that the reduction of the demand by this amount is necessary. Looking at the proposal for the partition of the district we find that there is not only the initial cost, but also the recurring cost. Is there any necessity of incurring this cost? It has been suggested that, as there have been changes in the condition of the country, there ought to be alteration in the old plan, and, if we consider the question in the light of the logic of facts, it will appear that the District Magistrates have been given relief from the work of the municipalities, district boards and some other work; they do not now exercise some of the powers they used to do formerly. I can assert, and with confidence, that the District Magistrates nowadays have less work to do, so this Council ought not to approve of a proposal for the division of the district in order to ve further relief to the District Magistrate. There is little justification for saying that the work of a District Magistrate is now heavy, and for administrative convenience there should be a division of work, instead of one district there should be two. But please remember the fact that with the partition of the district various items of expenditure of a heavy nature are involved; we will have to establish colleges and other institutions in two different districts and consequently the expense will be heavy. Is it not, therefore, necessary to consider at the moment whether there is any necessity for the division of the districts? I find that nowadays it is the policy of Government to divide districts, and many districts have been divided, with the result that we are faced with a financial crisis. We have now got a network of roads, railways and motor services, and I think there is little necessity for partitioning the district at present. I ask the Council to consider whether it is necessary to spend several lakhs of rupees in building court-houses and the like in a place which is not very far off from the present headquarters. On financial grounds also I am opposed to the scheme of partition, and I think it should be postponed. Of course, in view of the difficulties involved in the administration of a big district, it may be necessary to divide it, but the people at large are opposed to the policy which the Government had hitherto adopted. Now, Sir, what is meant by "administrative convenience?" If it means that the officer in charge of a district should be given relief, I admit that that relief has already been given, and it would be considered as an act of injustice by the tax-payers of Bengal if this Rs. 7,25,000 be sanctioned for the partition of the district of Midnapore.

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINGH ROY Bahadur: I learn from the Bengal Administration Report, 1914-15, that the proposal "for the partition of Midnapore for better administration of the district" was, for a long time, under the consideration of the Government of Bengal. In 1913, the Bengal Government drew up a scheme and submitted it for public criticism. At last, a revised scheme was drawn up in accordance with the recommendations of the District Administration Committee. According to the new scheme, the district of Midnapore was proposed to be divided into two portions, Midnapore proper with its headquarters at Midnapore, and Hijli with its headquarters very near Baranagpur. The two districts would be of nearly equal size, the population of Midnapore will be a little more than ten lakhs and that of Hijli a little more than seventeen lakhs.

According to the scheme, the district is to be divided by a straight line drawn west of Midnapore. I narrate all these only to draw attention to the fact that in this scheme, no regard has been paid to the social, economical and political condition of the people. It is simply a straight line, which will divide one portion of the people from another, tied down together by bonds of relationship, ties of affection, from time immemorial. Midnapore, Sir, is a district, the mention of which can be found in our oldest sastras. The solidarity of the district has remained intact, through various changes and calamities. Dynasties after dynasties have risen and fallen on the Imperial throne of Delhi, but Midnapore retained its unity, its solidarity; people were never separated. The partition will make a new move in their social affairs.

The villagers in this country, still love their villages, their castes and creeds. Their sweet sleep will be disturbed when they will hear that some of their relatives have been separated and have been placed under a separate administration. The idea of toleration, though present among the educated community, can scarcely be found among the illiterate mass. The separation will increase their ignorance, and will cause them to be enveloped with isolation. We know, Sir, our pronunciation varies from district to district, the language of one district differs from the language of its neighbouring district. The customs also differ from one district to another. Under these circumstances, the creation of a new district, I fear, would lead to deterioration and total isolation. We want now that people should get practical political training, but, instead of that, they will be thrown back into isolation and darkness.

The proposal comes from the Government for the better administration of the district. Now, I think, the days of paternal Government have ended, the roseate dawn of popular Government is peeping through the horizon. We have been granted almost universal suffrage. We have our representatives in the Council and even our own men in the Government. I think, therefore, before proceeding into the matter, the question must be put to the people. Their opinions must be invited, and they should be asked to participate with us in the question. But, if they as a body repudiate the Government's proposal and refuse to be favoured with the boon promised, is it not fair, Sir, that we should ponder over the matter, and should hesitate a little?

It is alleged that Midnapore requires a "better administration." But the people are not dissatisfied under the present system. The present system is certainly not a bad one. It is not warranted, so at least appears from the Police reports or the reports of other departments. The present administration of the district, on the other hand, has worked successfully well to the prosperity and happiness of the people for the last one hundred and fifty years, since Midnapore came under British rule. Midnapore has got a brilliant roll of district officers. It includes the names of Sir Henry Harrison, Sir Henry Cotton, Sir Charles Stevenson Moore, C. J. Faulder, R. C. Dutt, H. Lee, W. R. Bright, C. H. Bompas, Sir John Cumming, the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler and the Hon'ble Mr. J. H. Kerr, all worthy members of the Indian Civil Service. In those days, the duties of the District Magistrate were very complex. Besides the general administration, they had to manage 12 ward estates with the assistance of a common manager only, they had to guide and shape the policy of a district board with an annual income of Rs. 11 lakhs, and they had also to attend to the disturbances and the riots of the Indigo plantation under Messrs. Watson & Co. In addition to all these duties, the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, when he was the District Officer of this district, in 1904-05, was also in charge of the settlement operations. Now, Sir, I want to draw attention to another point, equally weighty, which needs our serious consideration. The Midnapore of to-day is not the Midnapore of the 19th century. Even in the first decade of the present century, there were few facilities for communication; officers had to go either by steamers or by country boats. They had to travel in the interior either in a bamboo cart or in a tumtum. It took 14 hours to reach Midnapore. In the course of these years, communication has marvellously been quickened; railways and motor services can always be had which facilitate a quick and easy journey.

Now, Sir, Midnapore prospered well, the District Officers managed the district efficiently with the help of one Joint Magistrate and a few Deputies only. They never thought of partition, though they had numerous responsible duties to perform, though they had to undergo serious hardships and many inconveniences during the time of travelling, in performing their superintending duties.

At present, the District Officer of Midnapore has been relieved of the duties of the Chairman of the District Board. The district has now been provided with a quicker mode of transport. Under these improved conditions, what has happened that we have grown impatient for the partition. Sir, I admit that partition has become a fashion of the day, since 1906 we have seen many partitions and several redistribution of territories, both with good and disastrous results. If the Government is anxious to follow the fashion then there can be no argument against it; or else, we must consider the question carefully, must consult public opinion before we come to a conclusion. I want to press the fact a little for the reconsideration of the Government, even though it be a settled fact, as we know, that the settled fact of the partition of Bengal was favourably disposed of, when the cause was vehemently urged by the public.

When the partition of the district was proposed in 1913, there was no idea of transferring the duties of the District Board to a non-official Chairman. Since then, the circumstances have changed a good deal. Still, if we be told that the duties of the Magistrate have enormously increased, I suggest that the desired end can be attained, if some of the superfluous duties of the Magistrate be entrusted to the hands of two Assistant Magistrates, instead of one. The Administration Report says that one District Judge will continue to deal with cases from both the districts. Is it proper, Sir, to divide the district, because it is alleged that the duties of the Magistrate alone have increased, and is it not advisable to reach the desired goal, as I have suggested, by creating the post of one more Assistant Magistrate, instead of dividing the district into two.

One thing may be put that we have far advanced into the matter; we have begun the building operations already. Yes, I think it will not be very difficult for us to dispose of them or even to make a good bargain out of them in the face of brisk speculation in land and in buildings.

If we see the other side of this question, we find that the people of Midnapore do not want the partition is plain. I have been requested to move this motion by many of them. The zamindars also do not like the scheme. The partition of Midnapore will lead to two complete establishments for them, which they will have to keep at two headquarter towns, the cost of which will increase the recurring expenditure. The cost of litigation will increase and, consequently, the income of the zamindars will go down. If the partition be carried out, I think, Sir, several of the Midnapore zamindars who are now solvent, will be financially ruined after the partition, with the increase of expenditure. I have been receiving numerous representations from my constituency also to move this motion; I am, therefore, in moving this motion, voicing the opinion prevalent outside the Council.

It is also not a question of a particular district, that the Council should remain callous. I call it a national one. We are threatened with a huge deficit, we do not know how to make it up. We have been assured of the good intentions of the Government of India to reconsider our financial question. But in the meantime, so long as we do not get any real help, I think it will be injudicious on our part to increase the recurring expenditure and thereby making the road more broad to a financial crisis. The proposal of this partition, we are told, was for a long time under the consideration of the Government. It was formally submitted for public criticism in 1914-15 and then remained for some time unrealised. The need for the partition, however urgent it is said to be, I suppose, is not so urgent that it requires its execution at once.

The people of Midnapore, both raiyats and zamindars, do not like to be divided into two political entities. They do not like to be divided into two social and political groups. The people of Bengal do not like to overburden their exhausted treasury with a heavy recurring expenditure. Under these circumstances, we should wait—if it is not possible to give up the scheme altogether—we should wait until the public is thoroughly consulted. So, I beg to support the resolution which has been moved by my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I beg to support the amendment which is proposed by Babu Surendra Nath Ray. I read this morning in the newspapers that the Governor of Madras said that the Madras Councillors were in deepest gloom and they are full of pessimism because of their imminent bankruptcy. Sir, we in Bengal have displayed no such pessimism. We have taken our courage in both our hands. We have accepted the fact that we have a huge deficit and we are determined to act in spite of it. In that view, Sir, we are determined that we shall strike out at least one crore of rupees and put Bengal on its feet. In that view, Sir, we have struck out Rs. 23,50,000 from the police grant. There is no difficulty whatsoever in going back on the actuals of 1920-21. The Indian Moderate newspapers and certain Anglo-Indian newspapers have all condemned the partition of the district. We have been given responsibility for the progress of this country. We are working for the good of the people. It is true that certain people, a very small coterie, have succeeded in dismissing Mr. P. L. Roy, but every impartial person must have observed that a number of motions against the proper working of the administration have been rejected. We desire to co-operate with the Government and not to impede its actions, but we desire, we are here, to carry on great and beneficial reforms for the good of our people. Otherwise our presence here is unnecessary. Therefore, Sir, I have thought it right that the partition of Mymensingh, the partition of Madnapore and the Grand Trunk Canal project should be opposed. We have done nothing to let anybody suppose that we do not wish to help Government. Though they disagree with us, they should not misinterpret our action. In the very first motion before this Council, I was loudly abused by a certain Englishman because I carried a motion for medical relief against the votes of the Government party, but I am glad to say that the same Englishman has become one of my best friends since then. I do not know what the Government will do, but the Government ought to be aware that any hope of relief from Delhi is illusory, having regard to the fact that there are the Russo-Afghan treaty and the mutterings of thunder from the North-West. Every right-thinking Indian should feel it his duty to stand by the Government and to support it in its effort to meet the menace, if any. Sir, please don't make the people of Bengal bankrupt. You may be quite sure that no Council will be able to pass any measure of new taxation and you may be quite sure that any measure of taxation will make Bengal absolutely disaffected. It was Bengal, by the help of which the English conquered the whole of India, and I would give you the assurance that if Bengal is properly governed, Afghans, Russians and Punjab Muhammadans will again be beaten with the help of the Bengalis. Please don't make Bengal bankrupt or disaffected. I say herefore that this unnecessary expenditure at least for the present should not be indulged in.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: We are not convinced that any case has been made out for the partition. The partition of a district and things of that kind should not be undertaken by Government unless there is real need for it. It is not from any point of administrative aid that things like these should be carried on. So far as district administration is concerned, anybody who has got any knowledge or experience of the matter will bear me out that nowadays District Magistrates of the most important districts have been considerably relieved of their work by having new Additional District Magistrates put in for important districts, who do all the criminal, appellate and revisional work. That is a very heavy amount of work indeed. Before the Magistrates had to work at Court, hear cases and then write out judgments at home, which took a considerable portion of their time, and there was then the District Board also. Now, in almost every important district, the District Magistrate is no longer the Chairman, and, as such, he has been relieved totally of performing the duties of the District Board, as well as of looking after the details of the management of the Board. Then, there are several departments in which important work has been taken away from them, such as Excise, Registration, etc. Ten years ago, I know of District Magistrates sitting here, who had to do an amount of work, which cannot be compared with what his successors of the present day are called upon to do. In spite of this, if any proposal is put before us of subdividing a district, I am sure a very strong case must be made out by the Government. The question is whether in the case of Midnapore, any such case has been made out. Up till now, all that we have heard in connection with this matter is not at all convincing. Over and above this, there is the fact that Midnapore is not an outlying district; it is only $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours from Calcutta. No administrative difficulties or anything of that description are likely to arise, for which it is necessary that the district should now be partitioned. Talking from a general point of view, no case has been made out at all for the partition of this district.

Coming to the particular point, I must say that I condemn these brick and mortar activities of new work in a year when we are about Rs. 2½ crores in deficit. Ordinary common sense dictates that we must cut our coat according to our cloth. This deficit is going to be chronic, whether anybody admits it or not, it does not matter. Unless and until we can find out other sources of revenue to supplement our present resources, there is no question that this deficit is going to be chronic, and the only alternative is that next year we shall have to find more money in taxes. Because this is the first year of a new era; that is the reason why taxes have not been proposed, but anybody, who has got sense enough to understand things, knows very well that next year we will have to introduce taxes, if we want to avoid a chronic deficit. There is no question about that. Is it not, therefore, high time that we should consider how to avoid this deficit as best as we can, or how to reduce that deficit? It is not works of ordinary administrative efficiency that I am going to stand against, it is not money voted for medical works or for agricultural improvement or things of that kind; but money buried in brick and mortar is certainly something we can very well consistently oppose. So long as our financial position is not hopeful, we shall not lose, in any way if we want. If it is advisable to consider things and not hurry them on on our side, it is much more so on the part of the Government not to push on with their ideas with all the zid that they possibly can. I do not think this is at all necessary; they must help us, and try to see whether we could be in a better position financially, and give up unnecessary expenditure. There are one or two items on the agenda on which I might have to say the same thing. Then, again, if you divide the district into two, what is the result? You will have to spend about Rs. 20,00,000 or Rs. 25,00,000 on capital works, on recurring charges, we must spend over Rs. 2,50,000. Well, what is the good of wasting all this money in a work of this nature, when you can bless everybody by at least devoting half of that on technical or industrial institutions or even on education or something of that sort? You will get everybody's blessing, you will be doing something good and useful, for which even in the present distressed condition of our finances, there will be some justification. Do not press your point too hard; no Government, however mighty, has the right to do so without any absolute justification. Unless your schemes are moderate and reasonable, no Government, however mighty, ought to push things to the bitter extreme.

With these observations, I would ask the House to reject this large and unnecessary grant that has been asked for, for the partition of the district of Midnapore, and for which no case has been made out.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: I rise to oppose this motion and, in doing so I beg to point out that the members, who have spoken in support of this resolution, have said again and again that it is the wish of the people that this partition of Midnapore should not be effected. I do not know whether the members of the House, who have supported this resolution, have ever been to the interior of the district. I do not know whether the members have visited, say, the Nandigram thana in the Tamluk subdivision. It is very easy to say and state before the Council what the wishes of the people are that the partition should not be effected. I was a candidate for election for the Burdwan South Muhammadan area, which comprises the districts of Howrah, Hooghly and Midnapore. I tried my best to inform my voters that I would stand as a candidate, and, when I tried to find out means of communication, I found it was impossible to inform my voters that an election would take place and that they had the right to vote. It is such a huge district, absolutely without means of conveyance, and, if any member takes the trouble to go into the interior of the district, he will find that it will take three or four days to go from one thana to another. That is how the district stands.

It has been said by my learned friend Babu Surendra Nath Ray, that there is a network of roads, kutchā and pucca. I do not know how he has got this information. If he would take the trouble of going and seeing what these roads are like, and how difficult the people are finding it to go from one part of the district to another, he would change his opinion at once, and he would say the sooner this partition is carried out, the better. If a man wants to file an appeal from the judgment of the Munsif of Ghatal before the District Judge of Midnapore, he will have to leave Ghatal at 4 o'clock in the morning, take the Ghatal steamer going to Kolaghat, which means a journey of about six hours, and if the tides are against him, sometimes he is stranded on the shores of the Rupnarain river. If he succeeds in getting the train to Kharagpur, he will have to take another train to go to Midnapore, so that it would mean—I put it as a matter of personal experience—that it would be impossible to do any judicial work in connection with the matter of his appeal, if these two districts still remain one, and are not divided and sufficient facilities for conveyance and building roads and other public works are not given effect to at once.

I thought that the gentleman who has been returned from the Burdwan Division, South, Mr. Zahid Suhrawardy, would have said something on this matter because he is a representative of the rural Muhammadans of Midnapore. Babu Sarat Chandra Janah and Raja Maniloll Singh—

Raja MANILOLL SINGH ROY: I come from Burdwan. I do not come from Midnapore.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: They represent only a certain section of the people of Midnapore. Babu Sarat Chandra Janah represents only one portion of the district. Whereas in Midnapore, if a Muhammadan wanted to be returned, he has got to secure votes from the entire district, and it is the Muhammadan candidate who can really tell the House what the difficulties are, even of informing the voters of their right to vote and the date thereof.

Babu Sarat Chandra Janah, of course, found it very easy, because he represented only the southern portion of the district. But one, who has got to look to the entire district for votes, has to face many difficulties.

Coming to police administration, what do we find? There is one thana, I believe, for the eastern extremity of the district, that is, for the side of the Rupnarain river. Any gentleman who has got any idea of the place will find that villages beginning from the western bank of the Rupnarain river up to the middle portion of the Ghatal subdivision, are under one thana, and it is at Daspur. What is the result? If any occurrence takes place, say, in one of these villages near the Rupnarain river, and if the police are to be informed, it will take about 8 hours to inform them. If a man is killed by snake-bite or poison, before the police can be informed, the dead body gets decomposed. These are the practical difficulties. One of the movers said that he has got many friends and relations in Midnapore. On the other hand, though I have been elected to represent the district, I belong to the Howrah district; I live on the borders of the Rupnarain river; my friends and relations mostly come from Midnapore district, and I have been to them, and I know that all desire that really such a big area should not be there, but divided into two so that the administration might be more complete and effective.

Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur said, what is the meaning of the word "administration"? I think the word "administration" conveys this idea viz., that for the preservation of peace and order, for looking to the inconvenience of the people, if they want to seek any remedies from the district authorities, for judicial and other public work, they have got to go to the headquarters, and therefore the headquarters must be situated in such a way that they can afford sufficient facilities to all the people. No doubt it is true that a certain section of the people will feel much inconvenience. I mean the landholders and the lawyers. We all know that when the question of the transfer of judicial powers from Hooghly to Howrah was discussed, certain people who had vested interests at stake opposed, and opposes to the last, this transfer. The Howrah people were successful, and I do not know whether a similar movement is going on. It has been said in discussing this matter that because our financial condition is bad, it should be postponed. This will mean shelving the question, if no grant is made. I believe all these arguments are being put forward in the name of economy. There is a certain class of people who have got large landed interests at stake at Midnapore; they will suffer no doubt, and it will be to their interests to oppose this. Then, there are the lawyers, who have got some sort of practice there, and many of them perhaps would not like to shift to the new district, where, it may be, they may not have the same amount of practice or they would not earn the same amount of money if the district were partitioned. Members, while, deciding this, should kindly consider that it is not to the interest of a particular class of the people, but it is to the interest of the people as a whole, that this partition should be carried out.

Now, Sir, looking to the southern part of the district, there are villages at Hijli, Contai and other important places. If the representative of the Landholders' Association—I do not know whether this gentleman has ever been to the mufassal—had consulted the wishes of the people, then, he would have at once found that those people who are living in the southern part of the district would wish this partition, so that they could have headquarters somewhere else, closer to them as it is too far to go to Midnapore to have litigation there.

It has been argued that district administration simply means the appointment of a District Magistrate, and the duties of the District Magistrate have been, to a certain extent, reduced, because a non-official Chairman has been appointed. I do not know whether the non-official Chairman, who is a member of this Council, would say anything in the matter, but the Chairman of the District Board has also got to say whether he can manage such a huge district as Midnapore effectively, whether he can deal with public works, such as roads, water-works, etc., in such a big area as Midnapore. As he has assumed charge not very long ago, he has got some idea of the amount of work which the Chairman of the District Board of Midnapore has got to do in connection with public roads; therefore, he would be in a position to tell the Council what really this work means.

Then, I have also referred to the Police, and if any gentleman will go to the interior of the villages, he will find that it is the universal wish of the people that this is such a heavy and big district, that it ought to be partitioned, so that the authorities may be able to look to the needs and necessities of the people more carefully.

It has been said that Midnapore is an agricultural district, and therefore it is all the more necessary that the agricultural movement or rather the movement for the advancement of agriculture in this particular district should be specially attended to by the authorities. If the co-operative movement is to be at all extended, and is to be made a success, I think, it could not be contested for a moment that we require a smaller area, so that the authorities in question may devote more of their attention to the work.

Take any portion of the administration, whether police, judicial, public works, agriculture or education. The members of the Council perhaps know that so far as education is concerned, I can speak with authority that so far as the Muhammadans are concerned, they are very backward. So far as the town of Midnapore itself is concerned, it is different. There a certain section of the people are well educated, but their interest is confined within the limits of the town itself. So far as the mufassal people are concerned they are practically out of touch with the authorities and with the legitimate aspirations of the people in the town. In fact they are all leading the life of the ancient people, meek, humble and innocent of the ways of the world, of the progress in the world, and, if any life is to be introduced into them, into their lives, if any improvement is to be made in the condition of the peasantry, or the raiyats, it is absolutely necessary that the area of administration should be made smaller and smaller until the amount of work that is growing rapidly, can be sufficiently coped with.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: At this hour of the day, I do not want to inflict any speech upon this Council. I only want to say one thing, in order to be logical and consistent. If this House refused to allot money for the partition of Mymensingh, which is the largest district in Bengal, I think it would not be appropriate for this Council to grant money for the partition of the district of Midnapore.

With these words I support the motion.

Babu SARAT CHANDRA MUKHOPADHAYA: I am a member of the South Midnapore non-Muhammadan constituency, consisting of the Tamluk and the Contai subdivisions, which would form the new Pijili district. Sir, the motion of the Government to vote a grant of Rs. 7,25,000 for the partition of Midnapore means that they have invited us to discuss the partition scheme itself. We cannot, nobody can, possibly grant any money to anybody, unless it is satisfactorily established that the cause for which the money is wanted is a good one. Now, Sir, the cause is not at all a good one and, for that reason I oppose the motion and support the amendment. My grounds are simple enough.

Firstly, the people of the district, zamindars and raiyats, not only do not want the partition, but are one and all opposed to it. Government has decided to effect this partition in spite of the repeated protests of the people of the district. We do not at all see the utility of creating a new district headquarters within six or seven miles of an already existing one, and we look upon it as an absolutely unnecessary measure. In the second place, it will cut off and break asunder old associations. Thirdly, it will cause a very great inconvenience and very considerable hardship both to the people who have permanent houses in the town of Midnapore and those who are to attend district headquarters for business. Fourthly, it will cause an enormous expenditure of public money without any corresponding gain in any way.

The first and the second grounds are no doubt to a certain extent sentimental; but there is absolutely no reason why the sentiment of the entire district should not be respected, unless there are very cogent grounds to go against it. The third ground is very substantial. It is clear that the partition of the district will materially reduce the importance and necessarily the value of properties of the town of Midnapore. Many persons shall have to build new houses at the new district town at great cost, especially in these days of high prices. Those who shall have to go to the new district town for business shall suffer great inconvenience for want of accommodation for a long time to come, i.e., until the new town is built and thoroughly developed. Then comes the question of initial and recurrent expenditure. The building of the new town with its office buildings and quarters for officers would entail a heavy initial expenditure. After that the carrying out of administration from two district headquarters would necessarily require a large increase in the staff, if not practically doubling it, causing a very considerable recurrent expenditure. I need hardly mention that the same difficulty will arise with the District Board. I further understand that not only the Collectorate has so far been proposed to be partitioned and not the judiciary of Midnapore. This means a very great hardship upon the landlords and litigants, who will be obliged to set up two different establishments at two different district headquarters.

The reasons given by the Government to justify the partition are far from convincing. Broadly speaking the decision of the Government is based on so-called administrative efficiency or, plainly speaking, what Government says is this: "The district is too big to be properly administered from one centre." But a careful examination will show the futility of this. No doubt Midnapore, with its area of nearly 32,000 square miles and a population of nearly 2,800,000, is perhaps the second biggest district in Bengal. But that by itself does not show that it cannot be administered from one centre or that the administrative machinery will improve in any way. As a matter of fact, a respectable portion of the present Sadar subdivision of Midnapore is jungle mahals entailing no great administrative inconvenience to anybody. Further, the heaviness of work, which has been supposed to be the root-cause of this decision, has never been complained of by any District Magistrate—I go further and beg to point out that the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, when he was our District Magistrate for a pretty long time, was originally of opinion that the partition of the district was not necessary. I do not deny that owing to gradual expansion in every way the works of every department have gradually increased to a considerable degree. But side by side with this it must be considered that the means of communication have improved immensely. District Officers can now reach subdivisional headquarters and the greater part of the district in less than half the time that they required twenty-five years ago. Furthermore, gradual decentralization has relieved the District Officers of a considerable part of their duties. The appointment of a non-official Chairman for the District Board, the transfer of the major portion of the Arms and Income-tax Departments to Subdivisional Officers and the appointment of an Additional District Magistrate have considerably reduced the work of the District Officers. Under such circumstances it is absurd to contend that the district, as it is, is too big for administration. There are many smaller districts in Bengal. It cannot be shown that the administration of the smallest district is in any way more efficient than this district. Lastly, even after the announcement of partition, the Government have spent large sums of money in constructing huge and substantial buildings for the Collectorate, and the hospital, and the waterworks scheme is also proceeding apace at an enormous cost. All this will sooner or later come to useless expenditure, if the partition takes effect, for the old town of Midnapore, after partition, is found to lose its present importance. I had a talk with the late lamented Raja of Narajole, who represented the North Midnapore constituency and had a very big zamindari in the district. He was strongly of opinion that the district should not be partitioned.

The last speaker has said that a man going to file an appeal at Ghatal is generally put to considerable difficulty in going a long way; but the proposed partition will not in any way improve the situation. Ghatal will remain within the appellate jurisdiction of Midnapore, as it is now.

He further said that Nandigram thana of the Contai subdivision is at a great distance from the sadar town; but the Nandigram thana and the Contai subdivision, according to the new plan, fall within the jurisdiction of the Hijli district; so the change will not improve the situation in any way. The litigant public will feel additional difficulty in coming to a new place where they will find no shelter for their witnesses and other men. For these reasons I support the motion that the demand be refused.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: As the last speaker has referred to my opinion, may I have your permission to make a personal explanation?

He has said that when I was Collector of Midnapore, I did not consider the partition of the district to be necessary. I am at a loss to understand how such a misconception can have arisen. When I first went to Midnapore, there was a scheme before the public for creating a new district with Contai as its headquarters. I opposed that scheme, because I did not believe that it would be for the convenience of the inhabitants of the district. But I took a considerable part in working out the present scheme and I have always supported it both when I was Collector of Midnapore and subsequently.

Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY: I do not know what magnificent buildings will crumble into dust if this motion is carried, or what grandiose plans will come to rack and ruin if we decide that Midnapore should not be partitioned. I do not know even how powerful and convincing will be the arguments that will be advanced by the Hon'ble Member in charge to show us that we are wrong. But what I do know is this: that in spite of the statement of a member of this Council, the people of Midnapore do not want the partition (hear, hear). I believe that it is embodied in the District Administration Committee's report (and I am sure that the Hon'ble Member in charge will produce it in due course) that the people of Midnapore with one voice have proclaimed against the partition, that representations after representations have been made to Government by the people against the partition. I trust that this argument ought to weigh with this Council considerably, when they come finally to decide whether they should vote a grant against the wishes of the people. I do not really wish to waste the time of the Council in dealing with the arguments of Mr. Syed Nasim Ali, which, with due deference to him, I consider to be futile. He has said that a person has to travel 8 miles to go to a thana if he wishes to get hold of a constable; and the remedy, he says, lies in the partition and in creating more district officers. He has said that litigants have to travel great distances to go to Midnapore to seek remedy, and that the remedy is to bring litigation to the doors of the people and to create more district officers! If you are to decentralize, and decentralization is the only solution of such difficulties, you should not effect it by creating more district officers but by creating more thanas and by increasing the number of subordinate officers of the police. We, the people of Midnapore, believe that the work of the Collector has considerably diminished, and that the Collector with the officers at his disposal, can and should manage the administration of the district satisfactorily. For these reasons, I support the amendments.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: This series of resolutions is fortunately so closely akin to that with which I have dealt a little while ago, that I am relieved from the task of repeating the general arguments which I then advanced as bearing on this question, and I will now attempt to do so.

We have heard with much reiteration the cry that there is no case and there is no justification. It all depends on what is meant when we say that there is a case and that there is justification. Speaking broadly, and putting the case as concisely as possible, our argument is that if it is desired that these huge districts should be decently administered, it is essential to curtail their area, and we rely on the facts connected with these districts and the experience of a long line of officers to establish that contention.

Maulvi Syed Nasim Ali has fortunately assisted me in rescuing from ill-deserved odium the much abused words "administrative efficiency." We use "administrative efficiency" as a concise expression, summing up a number of things, and I have already referred the Council to the report of the District Administration Committee in which they will find page after page of details and pages of statistics, explaining in what way this matter of partition has a bearing upon general efficiency. To judge by some of the speeches we have heard this afternoon, one would have thought that administrative efficiency meant a desire on the part of the Government to enable its collectors to go to sleep at 3 o'clock instead of at 3-30, and that it was merely the personal convenience of a few collectors which was at stake. It is curious that that belief should exist, and I can only repeat that the issues are of a far wider type. I previously mentioned the instance of village self-government, while Maulvi Nasim Ali has given the examples of education and co-operative societies. Let me give another example of the often urged needs of sanitation and drainage. Now, sanitation and drainage schemes do not fall from Heaven. In this province, they involve problems of great difficulty, technically and otherwise, and they involve problems of some complexity in the reconciliation of conflicting interests and in getting those concerned to see the advantage of the financial sacrifices involved. Now, if an advance is to be made in furthering these schemes, it will turn largely on the energy and enthusiasm of particular district officers, and if this is to be effective a collector must have charge of a district of such a size as will enable him to discover where propaganda work which will be required if they are to be put through. That is one more example of what we mean by administrative efficiency; and, in short, we mean all that we believe to be for the good of the people of the district as a whole. On this point, as I have said, I do not wish to speak at any length; but I would only refer again to one point upon which rather more stress has been laid than in the case of the Mymensingh resolutions. We have heard from several quarters that if we only appoint more Additional Magistrates there will be no necessity for partition. We appoint Additional Magistrates and already we have done so, for instance, in Bakarganj, Mymensingh, the 24-Parganas and other districts. But may I read in this connection what is the deliberate finding of the District Administration Committee upon that solution? They say:—

The method of distribution of work between the two officers varies greatly in different districts, but one of two things always happens—either the additional magistrate sinks to the level of an expensive joint magistrate; or there is a most deplorable division of authority, division of knowledge, and division of administrative grasp. The whole idea of “two Kings in Brentford” is foreign to the recognised scheme of Indian administration, and we are satisfied that it surpasses the wit of man to conduct this dual system in a satisfactory manner. In fact it is the opinion of all who have seen the inner working of the experiment that it has been a signal failure. It has created administrative confusion and inefficiency, without in any way bringing the district officer into closer touch with the people.

I submit that the above verdict of an experienced body like the District Administration Committee is worthy of the consideration of this Council.

Now, turning to this particular scheme, what is it? Midnapore is a huge district of 5,145 square miles, and with a population of 2,800,000 people. The proposal, which the Government has made and is already in the course of execution, is to split this district in two, leaving the headquarters of one charge at Midnapore and placing the headquarters of the other at Hijli. Even granting that the division is made, one district will have an area of 2,600 square miles and a population of over a million, and the other will have an area of 2,457 square miles and a population of nearly 1½ million people. In recommending this scheme to the Government of India in 1917, it was stated:—

The scheme is the result of careful consideration and discussion which has extended over more than ten years. It provides two districts of suitable size with the least possible disturbance of existing arrangements. Three of the existing subdivisions will not be affected at all, and the headquarters of the new district and of the new subdivisions are so situated as to be distinctly more convenient of access to the inhabitants of the areas concerned than the existing headquarters. Compared with the remaining districts in the Presidency, the proposed Hijli district will still have a larger area than eight districts, while the new Midnapore district will be larger than twelve. In point of population the Midnapore district will be larger than eight districts, and the Hijli district will be larger than eighteen

That sums up the proposal, and I cannot corroborate the assertion of the last speaker that the District Administration Committee frankly admitted that the whole of Midnapore opinion was against the partition. On a cursory examination of the papers, I find various remarks pointing clearly to the fact that they regarded much of the adverse criticism as fictitious and not representative of the opinion of the district as a whole, while I have already quoted their general remarks with reference to the nature of such opposition and the weight to be attached to it.

As I have explained in the case of Mymensingh, this scheme too is one of antiquity—of very respectable antiquity. The whole problem goes back to 1836. In 1836 some unwise administrator amalgamated the district of Hijli with Midnapore; and it is not without significance that only 16 years later (in 1852) Government wanted to have this undone, while in 1920 we have still not effected anything. In 1876 Sir Richard Temple drew up a scheme for dividing the district into two parts, but it was deferred for financial reasons. Sir Rivers Thompson recommended it in 1883, but it was dropped on financial considerations. In 1904, in Sir Andrew Fraser's time, there was a committee which consulted the leading local men, but the proposals had to be abandoned, mainly because of Contai being considered undesirable as headquarters. The enquiry of 1906 was adjourned owing to the prevailing political excitement. In 1913, there was another enquiry, and in 1914 we had the exhaustive inquiries of the District Administration Committee endorsing the proposal. In November 1914, there was a deputation to Lord Carmichael and personal inquiries made by him; and in 1915 we had the final proposals elaborated in the Resolution of the 26th January 1915. In the face of these detailed enquiries and consultations, surely it is a little unreasonable of Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur to again say: "Let us consult public opinion." On two occasions, this matter too has been before this Council. In 1917, my predecessor, Mr. Lyon, argued the case at length, and the motion was eventually lost, another resolution to the same effect in the course of the debate being withdrawn. In 1918, another resolution was moved, was replied to by Mr. Kerr, and was again eventually withdrawn. On two occasions, therefore, this matter has been before the old Council, and has been endorsed by it.

I now come to the last point, regarding which, although the last speaker briefly alluded to "grandiose plans and magnificent structures," I fear that he was paying a compliment which the Public Works Department does not ordinarily receive; neither are the adjectives quite applicable to ordinary departmental buildings, nor are they applicable to the buildings we propose to construct at Hijli. However, it is important for the Council to realise what has really been done in connection with this scheme, because it can be differentiated from the Mymensingh scheme in two very important respects. The Mymensingh project was, as I have said, one of about Rs. 75 lakhs. This scheme for Midnapore, on the estimate of works in progress, is for about Rs. 19 lakhs—a considerable difference. The recurring expense does not moreover amount to Rs. 2 or Rs. 2½ lakhs, as has been somewhat lightly said, but it was estimated in 1917 at Rs. 96,000. There is therefore, this important difference from the case of Mymensingh in that the project is much less expensive, although involving, it is true, a large sum. What is the second point of difference? In the case of Midnapore, we are far more deeply committed to the scheme than we are in the case of Mymensingh, where the expenditure, had been incurred mainly on land, and land is always to some extent an asset. The position here is different. Here we have actually spent up to March 1920 nearly Rs. 2 lakhs; and during the current year we shall spend nearly Rs. 6 lakhs—the figure in the printed statement is Rs. 5 lakhs, but Mr. Walsh's latest information points to 6; that is Rs. 8 lakhs in all on works, while previously in 1913 or 1914, when we took up the land, we spent another Rs. 7 lakhs. We are therefore already committed to the scheme to the extent of some Rs. 8½ lakhs, or practically half the total cost involved. If we are now to abandon the scheme, that money will practically all be lost, to say nothing of any further liability before work now in progress or out on contract can be closed down. I cannot follow the Rai Bahadur in his hope that land speculation will persuade the millionaires of Calcutta to tide over the situation by securing land at fancy prices which, before we covered them with half completed structures, was sal jungle.

Let me explain in detail how the buildings stand. The main buildings are the following, and they are at the stages mentioned. The first group of buildings, viz., the circuit house, the dāk bungalow and three sets of quarters, for deputy magistrates and for the deputy superintendent of police, is complete. The collectorate building is well in hand and is expected to be finished by June 1921—and a very fine collectorate it is. The jail buildings are expected to be completed by June 1921. On the police buildings work is in progress, and can be completed by October 1921. As regards the residences for the district magistrate, the joint magistrate, the civil surgeon and the superintendent of police, the progress is not very satisfactory, but the work is in hand and may be finished by September 1921. The remaining buildings are mostly of the category of quarters, though there is a scheme for a new civil court and another for a hospital, which, though desirable, is not immediately essential. As regards the new subdivision of Jhargram, the last report that we have received shows that the various buildings are under construction and are expected to be completed by the 31st May 1921. Therefore, we should be in a position actually to open this district in the course of the ensuing year.

In view of the lengthy past history which I have detailed—let alone this much abused point of administrative efficiency—and in view of our commitments which I have explained, I put it to the Council that it is not a business proposition to ask us to drop this scheme at the present time.

A division was then taken with the following result:—

Adjournment.

The Council was adjourned to Tuesday, the 22nd March, 1921, at 8 o'clock at the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Tuesday, the 22nd March, 1921, at 3 P.M.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 102 nominated and elected members.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda):

I regret to have to announce to you the death of another member of this Council, Rai Nalinaksha Basu Bahadur, a prominent figure in Bengal politics—one whose opinion always carried weight with his countrymen. He attended the meeting of this Council held on Wednesday last and died on Sunday after a very short illness. The Rai Bahadur was a member of the old Legislative Council also for about five years. He was a leading lawyer in Burdwan, and was for years the Chairman of the Burdwan Municipality and Vice-Chairman of the District Board. To his activities in these local bodies the town of Burdwan owes its many works of public utility. Whatever work he undertook, he put his whole heart into it, and that was the secret of his success, which many of us would do well to emulate. He was a man of kindly and generous disposition, respected by all who came into contact with him. He died at the ripe old age of 77 years.

With your permission I should like to convey to his son Babu Sarat Chandra Basu, and through him to the other members of his family, an expression of our sympathy in the great bereavement they have suffered. I would ask members to mark their approval of the course I propose to take by standing in their places.

The Council agreed, all members standing.

Voting of grants.

The following motions were withdrawn:—

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: "That the demand for Rs. 20,000 for the construction of a residence for the Additional District and Sessions Judge, Bogra, be refused."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand for Rs. 20,000 for the construction of a residence for the Additional District and Sessions Judge, Bogra, be refused."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand for Rs. 5,000 for the construction of quadruple munsifi at Netrakona be refused."

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: "That the demand for Rs. 48,000 for the acquisition of land for the District Judge's residence at Comilla be refused."

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: "That the demand for Rs. 48,000 for the acquisition of land for the District Judge's residence at Comilla be refused."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand for Rs. 48,000 for the acquisition of land for the District Judge's residence at Comilla be refused."

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 48,000 for the acquisition of land for the District Judge's residence at Comilla be refused."

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: "That the demand for Rs. 48,000 for the acquisition of land for the District Judge's residence at Comilla be refused."

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA moved "that the demand for Rs. 48,000 for acquisition of land for the District Judge's residence at Comilla be reduced to Rs. 16,000." I move it, because it seems to me that the demand is extravagant and unbusinesslike. When public funds are being generously distributed, it would be very natural for me to take as much as I can for my own town of Comilla, but I cannot be so free when the tax-payers' money is concerned, and especially when I know that these large demands are not at all necessary for the purpose of acquiring land. I hope this Council will permit me to give some details about the Additional District Judge's quarters at Comilla. The District Judge of Comilla is a permanent officer but the Additional Judge is not. He sits for a certain part of the year at Comilla and goes to Chittagong for the rest of the year. Government acquired a house for the Additional Judge some years ago for a sum of Rs. 25,000. I would request the members of this House to remember that the house included ground, out-houses, compound and everything. Now, the District Judge used to live in a hired house, which was unfortunately damaged about a couple of years ago. Since then, he has been living in the house meant for the Additional Judge. So, the Additional Judge has no house at all. When he comes to Comilla, he has to put up either with the Superintendent of Police or the District Magistrate or some other officer. Of course, it is very inconvenient, and we certainly feel that the Additional Judge should have quarters of his own. Now, the question is whether the sum of Rs. 48,000 is necessary for acquiring land for the District Judge's house. I have been in Comilla for several years. I have some houses there, and I know that in that town you can have one bigha of land for Rs. 4,000—that is the maximum amount. On that calculation, I think we can get 4 bighas of land for Rs. 16,000 and I submit to this Council that 4 bighas ought to be quite enough for the house of the District Judge.

Now, to look at it from a business point of view, the present District Judge gets a salary of Rs. 2,000; I have consulted the Civil List and found that generally District Judges get Rs. 2,250—they do not generally get more than that. On that calculation, the District Judge would pay Government Rs. 225 per month as house rent, which works at Rs. 2,700 a year. There are business men in this Council and I should like to put this question to them—how much they would invest for a house which would give them only Rs. 2,700 a year, including repairs, etc.? I submit that when Government paper is yielding 6 per cent., we ought to expect at least 6 per cent. on our outlay. Working on that basis, I find that Rs. 45,000 ought to be quite enough for building, land and everything for the District Judge's house. I should like to know if there is any criterion on which the Public Works Department or any other Department, which is responsible for this work, makes its calculation, when it makes houses for Government servants. I do not suppose it has got any. If it had, it would certainly not have come forward with a proposal like this—Rs. 48,000 for acquiring the land and probably Rs. 1,00,000 for building a house later on. This is a sort of extravagance, which this Council cannot allow, and considering the fact that the District Judge has, for the last two years, been occupying a house which cost Government only Rs. 25,000, I think it is absurd to expect this Council to vote a grant of Rs. 48,000 for acquiring land for his house. There is no proposal for building any house this year, the proposal is only for acquiring the land. So, I submit that no case has been made out for a grant of more than Rs. 16,000 for that purpose.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: When such veteran councillors as Babu Surendra Nath Ray, Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri and others withdrew their amendments, and they did so wisely, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta should have thought twice before pressing his. As regards acquisition of land, the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector will always give less than the proper price—so my friend need not be anxious about that. We all know what the Land Acquisition Deputy Collector does. I know something of Comilla. My son-in-law, who is a Deputy Magistrate, got transferred there some time ago—he is not there now—and I know what difficulty my daughter and my son-in-law had in getting a house till I had to ask Kumar Aroon Chandra Singha to give his house to them. Government servants are always in a very bad way in the mufassal, so far as accommodation goes, and Government ought to provide for all of them.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I beg to support this motion for the simple reason that an expenditure of Rs. 48,000 for acquiring land at Comilla for the Judge's house seems to be extravagant. I do not know if in this matter any particular officer is concerned or anybody with a predilection for playing golf is concerned. I think the idea is that the occupant of the house would play golf in his compound, otherwise it seems absurd that a sum of Rs. 48,000 should be spent for acquiring the land for building a house. Do bring in motions which are reasonable and we are bound to support them. If you say that Rs. 48,000 is required for acquiring land at Comilla, you would surely say that another Rs. 1,50,000 would be required for the house. Well, under those circumstances, we are bound to oppose it. Be reasonable, and you can expect our cordial support. That is the way in which business ought to be done. Rupees 48,000 for acquiring land at Comilla? That would buy, on my friend's calculation, 12 bighas of land, and you want that for the Judge's compound? Necessarily you must have to build a palatial house there. Sir, there must be a limit even to extravagance. If you reduce it to a reasonable figure, I would support it. Rupees 16,000 would give a judge 4 bighas of land, and a house built on 4 bighas of land would be quite enough for the academical repose and cool thinking of a judge and none of his neighbours will be able to look at him when he is writing his judgment. If you are reasonable, we are reasonable. I quite appreciate Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur's argument that Government servants are put to much trouble over house accommodation in the mufassal, and I am perfectly willing to give them quarters, but you must be reasonable in your demand. And if you are reasonable the matter ends there.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I beg to support the motion. Any one who has an idea of the price of land in Comilla and the neighbouring districts will certainly have to come to the conclusion that Rs. 48,000 will be quite sufficient for even the compound of a prince's palace, and, if so much is spent for the acquisition of land, it will bring in its train perhaps another Rs. 1,50,000 next year, for the erection of a building. From what you have seen of a district judge I may take it that he belongs to high society both in England and in India. I have seen the district judges living in Chittagong, Comilla and Noakhali, but I have never seen them living in houses with a compound which should cost Rs. 50,000. The reason, for which Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur opposed this motion, seems to be that he must have heard something from his deputy magistrate son-in-law, but upon the basis of that second-hand or third-hand information an experienced councillor like him should not have wasted his breath.

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): I quite appreciate the difficulties of the mover and the other members of this Council who supported his motion. I can assure them that this figure of Rs. 48,000 does not really represent what we are resolved to give merely for the land required for the residence of the District Judge. The figure is taken from an older project. The older scheme was to buy what used to be the Collector's house and that was the price for that house. But it was decided afterwards that that building was not a suitable one and the project was, therefore, given up. This figure of Rs. 48,000 is not going to be spent merely for the acquisition of the land. I admit that the entry in the estimates is somewhat inappropriate, and I can assure Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, as well as other members, that we do not mean to spend the whole sum for acquiring 12 bighas of land for the Judge's residence. We shall require what is sufficient for an ordinary residence of the District Judge and this is merely the approximate figure, and only represents the project we have in view. It may be that the whole sum may cover the entire cost and then we do not propose to spend anything more than what is required. There will be a standing committee appointed and that committee may very well examine this project. If the House accepts that situation, I do not think there will be any difficulty. We are not bound to spend Rs. 48,000 only for land for the Judge's residence. That is not the idea. The figure is taken from an older project. It is simply to put forward before the House that we have to build quarters for the District Judge that we have taken that figure as a sort of approximate figure.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: May I take it that this sum is meant for both the house and the land?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: I cannot commit myself definitely. But it is certainly not solely for the purpose of buying land. At any rate there will be a standing committee, who will examine this question and ascertain what amount will be required exactly.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Can I get an assurance from the Hon'ble Member that not more than 4 bighas of land would be required for the House?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: It would depend on the size of the house. It may be more than 4 bighas, but it would not be anything unreasonable. I can say this, however, that there is no idea of acquiring 12 bighas of land for this purpose.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Does the Hon'ble Member think that 4 bighas of land are quite enough for the house of a District Judge?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: Let the matter be examined by the committee which is going to be appointed as to what would be required, and let the committee decide. It may be that the owner of the property which is sought to be acquired may object to severance. We cannot commit ourselves to the exact figure. But I can say that we have not committed ourselves to acquiring anything like 12 bighas of land. There can be no doubt, however, that it is absolutely necessary that quarters should be built for the District Judge. There is no house at present, which is suitable for his residence, and it is of urgent importance that a house should be built. We are quite prepared, however, to have this project examined by a standing committee.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Does not the Hon'ble Member think that 4 bighas of land are quite enough for the purpose of building a house for the District Judge? I do not want an assurance from him—I only want his opinion on it, and with that I shall be satisfied.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: I think that ordinarily it ought to be quite enough.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Then I am quite prepared to withdraw my motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: In view of certain facts which have been placed before me, I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

It was as follows: "That the demand for Rs. 48,000 for the acquisition of land for the District Judge's residence at Comilla be refused."

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: "That the demand for Rs. 1,00,000 for the construction of a civil court building at Burdwan be refused."

The motion was withdrawn.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I have recently been to Burdwan and I have seen that the work has begun, and the work cannot be stopped now. So I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

It was as follows: "That the demand for Rs. 1,00,000 for the construction of a civil court building at Burdwan be refused."

The following motions were withdrawn:—

Babu SARAT CHANDRA JANAH: That the grant of Rs. 1,00,000 for the construction of a civil court building at Burdwan be refused."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand for Rs. 50,000 for the construction of a civil court building at Serampore be refused."

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: "That the demand for Rs. 50,000 for the construction of a civil court building at Serampore be refused."

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 50,000 for the construction of a civil court building at Serampore be refused."

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI moved "that the demand for Rs. 50,000 for the construction of a civil court building at Serampore be refused."

I beg to press this motion of mine. My information is that the original intention was to acquire 3 bighas 11 cottas and 12 chittacks of land. But by some mysterious process, that is not known to me at least, a house has sprung up, which is meant for the Deputy Superintendent of Police and which covers 1 bigha 12 cottas of land, leaving now 1 bigha 19 cottas and 12 chittacks. Perhaps this plot has now been acquired by Government, and the idea is to construct a civil court building there. I had been to the plot and took pains to look into the court premises, and, though it was not in an ideal condition, I found it in a habitable condition. I am now told by some people—I do not know whether they are experts or not—that the house is unfit for habitation. Well, I have been in Serampore for over 11 years, and I find there are houses there which are older than this court house. One of these houses we occupy as a hostel for our students where 30 or 35 of them live. So far as I am concerned, I am not in a position to say that this house is unfit for human habitation. But I am not yet convinced that it is absolutely necessary to build the court house this year. It is going to cost us something like Rs. 1,36,000. We are always told—what is Rs. 50,000?—a mere drop in the ocean. But these drops go to make the ocean. If every time we have to give up items simply because they are drops in the ocean, the accumulated drops at the end may mean something tangible and substantial. If the Hon'ble Member, who is in charge of this matter, could show that it is absolutely necessary, or, if he could convince us that experts have looked into the matter and they are of opinion that it is most risky to use this house any longer and that it is unfit for human habitation, then I shall be prepared to withdraw my motion. But till then I think this Rs. 50,000 should not be spent this year.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I beg to oppose the motion. For the last 25 years I have been in touch with the Serampore Court as a pleader, and I can say that the house, in which the courts are located, is in a very bad condition. There are four munsifs' courts in that house, and one of the munsifs sits in a very dark room, and another occupies a room in the lower storey, which is a very small one. The pleaders working in the court find great difficulty in finding a room.

Considerable difficulty was felt and is felt nowadays for the accommodation of the judges and the pleaders. A Small Cause Court Judge sits in that building and he finds difficulty because there is no comfortable office in which his amlas can sit. It is for these reasons that the District Judge of Hooghly made an investigation in the matter, and years previously a declaration was made that a large quantity of land was to be acquired. That declaration was not put before Government with the result that the matter was not taken up. More than 3 bighas of land were the subject-matter of acquisition, out of which a plot of land has been taken for the occupation of the Assistant Deputy Superintendent of Police. Under such circumstances the mover will be pleased to consider whether it is desirable to have a court house on a proper footing or not. It is the complaint of the people of the locality that there should be a building suitable for the purposes of a court. The suitors themselves have no place to sit; they are obliged to go to the nearest shop for the purpose of accommodating themselves, when it is raining. Consequently the matter was taken up by the Collector and also by the District Judge, who, the other day, inspected the place, and are of opinion that a suitable court house be erected. I submit to the members of the Council that it is very desirable—I emphasise the word “desirable”—that there ought to be a court house there. The old building in which the court is now held is not in a good condition. It belongs to a private gentleman, and I know it for certain that the private gentleman is not in a position to construct a house for court purposes unless the rent is increased. Consequently, difficulty was felt by those who are in charge of the court house, and hence communication was made with Government officers, who have very kindly taken up this matter.

With these few words, I oppose the motion.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: This is a very old project. As far back as Sir Andrew Fraser's time he inspected the court buildings at Serampore, and considered them extremely unsuitable. Since then attempts have been made to erect suitable court buildings there. The strong opinion of the local authorities will be apparent to the Council from what the District Judge placed on record in 1916. What he said is this:—

● Though I am fully alive to the financial stringency of the Government owing to the war, yet I feel constrained to bring to the notice of the Hon'ble Judges the most unsatisfactory or even humiliating state of things that has to be suffered for the want of a suitable Government building for the accommodation of the civil courts at Serampore. Since about 30 years ago, a hired building has been used for the purpose at a monthly rental of Rs. 86. The building when rented was an old one, and has sustained deterioration by lapse of time. The landlord is extremely reluctant to keep it in good repair, and, if pressed for it, threatens enhancement of rent. As no other house is available for the accommodation of the civil courts, and Government is not in a position to undertake the construction of this pressingly needed building, the landlord has at last made up his mind to take advantage of the situation and has served on me a demand for rent at Rs. 125 a month. The building, if it were a Government one, might be condemned as unsafe for human habitation. But in spite of such a condition, it has to be retained by us at the mercy of the landlord. Such a position is simply intolerable and ought not to be suffered any longer.

Then there is another very cogent reason why this project should not be delayed any longer. The estimate in 1913 was for Rs. 62,840, then it was revised in 1915, when it went up to Rs. 1,10,000; and again in 1920 it reached up to Rs. 1,36,000. The longer we delay, the greater will be the cost. So I submit to the Council that this is a project, which should be carried out, and ought not to be delayed for a moment at all.

The motion was then put and lost.

The following motions were withdrawn:—

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 71,000 for the construction of a pucca quadruple munsifi at Pirojpur be refused."

Babu JOCENDRA NATH ROY: "That the demand for Rs. 71,000 for the construction of a quadruple munsifi at Pirojpur be reduced to Rs. 35,000."

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI moved "that the demand under sub-head 'Original Works' under head '41--Civil Works (in charge of Public Works Department)' be reduced by Rs. 24,000 by the omission from the Budget of the provision for acquisition of land at Asansol for civil court buildings under heading '1.—New Major Works,' sub-head 'Judicial.'"

The reason for my moving this motion is that I had a talk with some leading men there and I have come to know that it is not a very urgent work, and any acquisition of land at Asansol this year can be safely delayed.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: The position is this: that there is no civil court building at present in Asansol, and there is only one munsifi. Another munsifi has been added, and that officer has to hold his court in the Subdivisional Office, which the Council, I am sure, will consider is not desirable. Then Asansol, as every one knows, has been growing very rapidly in importance as an industrial centre. One Sub-Judge and an Assistant Sessions Judge have been posted there, and it is absolutely necessary that there should be a proper court building. The value of land is rising there very rapidly, as is natural, it being a growing industrial centre, and, if we do not hasten the work, the result will be that we will have to pay much more than we are expected to spend now. The total estimated cost of the project is Rs. 1,49,000 and land has been acquired for Rs. 23,724. If the project is abandoned now, there can be no doubt that we will have to spend more in future. There is really no court room for all the civil officers that are stationed there. So I must press the Council to pass this grant.

The motion was then put and lost.

The following motion was withdrawn:—

Babu JOCENDRA NATH ROY: "That the demand for Rs. 98,000 for the construction of an upper storey over the Sub-Judge's court building, Alipore, be refused."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ moved "that the demand for Rs. 98,000 for the construction of an upper storey over the Sub-Judge's court building, Alipore, be refused."

With reference to this motion I am prepared not to press it if the Hon'ble Member in charge will let us know the details of the work that is being contemplated. It seems to me that a demand of nearly Rs. 1,00,000 is a good deal too much for having an upper storey over a building which already exists. It is not as though we are going to have a new building altogether. When it is proposed to add one storey to the existing building, the sum that has been demanded seems to me somewhat extravagant. If the Hon'ble Member will be pleased to explain to us how it is that such a big amount is wanted, I am perfectly prepared not to press the motion.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: As regards this we have to depend entirely upon the opinion of experts. All that one can say is that the cost of building here has gone up very considerably in the last two or three years, and the estimate that has been furnished to us is that it will cost Rs. 98,000 to put up a second storey over the Sub-Judge's court building there. As regards the necessity of it I understand that there could be no question. The courts are very badly housed, and there is not room enough for all the Judges that are there. They want additional accommodation for the Additional District Judge and two munsifs, and so the entire second storey will be necessary for the purpose. But as regards the estimate I cannot say anything beyond this, that it is worked out, I take it, by experts, and we have got to rely upon their estimates. We have no other independent means of arriving at an estimate.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: In view of what the Hon'ble Member has said I do not wish to press my motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The following motion was withdrawn:—

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "That the demand for Rs. 52,000 for the construction of a residence for the Additional Judge at Barisal be refused."

As Maulvi A. H. M. Wazir Ali and Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur were absent, the motions standing in their name (items 181 and 182 in the List of Business) were deemed to have been withdrawn.

They were as follows:—

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: "That the demand for Rs. 52,000 for the construction of a residence for an Additional Judge at Barisal be refused."

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINGH ROY Bahadur: "That the demand under head '45—Civil Works' for the construction of judicial buildings be reduced to Rs. 37,000."

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI moved "that the demand for Rs. 1,00,000 for constructing a residence for the Chief Justice of Bengal, Calcutta, be refused."

I do it on the ground not because I grudge the Hon'ble the Chief Justice a residence, but on the ground that I am not convinced that this is absolutely necessary this year, when we are confronted with a huge deficit. All these years the illustrious Chief Justices have managed to do without a permanent residence. Sir Barnes Peacock, Sir Richard Couch, Sir Richard Garth, Sir Comer Petheram, Sir Francis Maclean, Sir Lawrence Jenkins—a galaxy of illustrious names—all these great men have managed without a permanent residence. Why on earth is there a necessity for a house for the Chief Justice this very year, when we are confronted with an adversity Budget? That is the only reason which has prompted me to move this amendment. Besides, in the detailed estimates which have been placed in our hands there is no estimate given there. I simply find under the column "Estimates of expenditure for the year 1921-22" a sum of Rs. 1,00,000 has been put down. We do not know whether that is the final sum or whether this house is going to cost more later on, or this is only a fractional sum provided for this year. Is the Chief Justice without a house at the present moment? I have never been inside his house, but as far as I can judge from the outside, I think he is very comfortably lodged with all the modern appliances for comfort. If His Lordship is really in need of a more comfortable house, why not give him the Hastings House, which is now vacant and where there is ample ground? There is no one occupying the house now. We shall be very glad to have His Lordship accommodated there. I do not think there will be any difficulty, and, if we, poor people, can save a lakh of rupees, which can be given either for education or sanitation or for medical purposes that will be something.

With these few remarks, I beg to commend this motion to the Council.

The PRESIDENT: There are 4 or 5 identical motions. Therefore they need not be moved separately, but I will call upon the intending movers to speak on this item.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: As this matter concerns His Lordship the Chief Justice of Bengal, I have put down in writing what I have to say, as I want to be particularly careful. What appears to me is this: that this is no party question at all. It is purely a financial matter. The person for whom it is meant is no doubt a very high official. He is no doubt the head of the Bengal judiciary, to whom it is our bounden duty to show respect and also consideration if possible. But the most important point to consider is whether we shall be justified in spending money on a project of this description in the present condition of our finances. If we allow our frail financial resources to be depleted by constant onslaughts from quarters which have no legitimate claim on us, either moral, or legal, or statutory, then we shall be only helping the huge deficit in this year's Budget to be a permanent friend of ours, necessitating the imposition of fresh taxes at no distant date on an impoverished people, on whose aching back the last proverbial straw has already been placed by the Government of India

The first ground, therefore, on which I object to this grant, is that such a grant and others like it are calculated to perpetuate the huge deficit which it is our bounden duty to curtail. If it is true that on no account we can allow a fresh imposition of tax, then the only alternative we have is to reject this demand. Then, again, if we once accede to a grant of this description for providing house accommodation for big officials—if we once allow the flood-gates to be opened—then we do not know where we shall be able to stop. For certainly it is not the Chief Justice alone amongst the big officials who lives in a tenanted house, but there are several big officials also, and I am somewhat disposed to think that this is only a feeler in the name of His Lordship the Chief Justice; others equally fortunate or unfortunate will then come up with proposals regarding their respective houses. This is merely the thin end of the wedge and we must be very vigilant from the very commencement.

Then comes the second point of my objection, that as a business proposition, looking from the point of view of finance, we ought to set our face against it. Last night the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler taught me in connection with the Midnapore partition debate, to look at these questions from a "business" point of view. I thank him for this lesson and I propose to look at this question from that standpoint.

Now this demand of Rs. 1,00,000 for a house for the Chief Justice is merely the first and the smallest instalment of the total cost, which is bound to be something like Rs. 3,00,000—nobody except those who are in nursery would believe that the house for the Chief Justice could be built now for Rs. 1,00,000—in these days of abnormal prices of materials, excluding the value of the land, which at the lowest possible computation would be above Rs. 1,50,000—taking the same to be 2 bighas in extent only. Thus the cost of the house and land would be Rs. 4,50,000, or say Rs. 4,00,000 at the very least. The interest on the capital sunk in the house at even 6 per cent. would be Rs. 24,000 a year. I am now a business man. The cost of maintenance of such a house, even at the very low rate of one per cent. per year, is Rs. 4,000. Our expenses therefore come to be at least Rs. 28,000 a year. That is certain. Now what are we going to have in return? I am told that it is 10 per cent. of His Lordship's salary, which means Rs. 7,200 a year. By a simple process of arithmetic, though I do not claim much knowledge in that branch of science, it comes to this, that we undergo a net loss of about Rs. 21,000 a year. This is from a business point of view. What do you think of it as a business proposition, and how have the custodians of public money to deal with a question like this? I would ask the House?

My third ground against this demand is that there is no urgency about it. For it cannot be pretended that the interests or the quality of public justice is suffering in the absence of a State residence for that high judicial dignitary. There are houses available in Calcutta for those who can pay high rent. In this connection I may state that, if it is necessary at all to give His Lordship a State residence,—a proposition for which there is no justification—why then not give the Hastings House at Alipore to His Lordship? It is lying useless now. It was acquired to be a guest-house for the Government of India guests when that Government was there. Its last occupants, the Residential School for the boys of the rich men of Bengal, have left. It is an ideal residence, which was established by the Right Hon'ble Warren Hastings. If it was sufficient for him, I am certain that it is sufficient for His Lordship the Chief Justice. It is a most desirable place for a State residence—with its lakes and park and a grand residential house—next in Calcutta only perhaps to Belvedere. Looking at it again from a business point of view, it comes to this, that we have nothing to spend for this house, and we shall get Rs. 7,200 for its upkeep.

Then there is one other thing that strikes me, and it is this. I do not know whether, if His Lordship the Chief Justice happens to know that he is going to occupy a house and that he will be paying only one-fourth of its actual rent, His Lordship will condescend to accept a favour from Government at all. So far as I know, I do not think, that if this is explained to him, he would like to get a bounty from Government to the tune of Rs. 18,000 or Rs. 20,000 a year. On behalf of the people I must make a protest against this action on the part of the Executive Government of Bengal to be exceedingly friendly to the Chief Justice, the head of the judiciary. So long as they remain apart it is better for the people all over the country, and so long as they are friends, and practically they are, I suppose, anxious to oblige each other, it is so far bad for the people of my country. Therefore this is an arrangement against which I must make a serious protest. If the pay of the Chief Justice is considered insufficient, His Lordship is perfectly entitled to move the authorities to make it Rs. 10,000, but I do not think His Lordship will condescend to take a grant, a bounty, a bonus from the Executive Government to the tune of Rs. 18,000 to Rs. 20,000 a year. I am perfectly sure that, if matters are explained to His Lordship, he will at once say, "Well I do not want the charity."

With these few words, I support the motion.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: As one of those who had sent in notice of this motion, I think I owe it to myself to say a few words by way of taking part in the debate. I feel I would have done better if I had also written out a speech, because that would have protected me from slips of the tongue, particularly because I have been guilty on one or two previous occasions of some irreverent references to the High Court. I will, however, guard myself on the present occasion, because I know that the Lordships of the High Court are perhaps, by a judicial fiction, somewhat sacrosanct, almost immune from criticism, judicial or otherwise. At the present moment we are concerned with rather a matter-of-fact question whether this Council ought to grant a lakh of rupees meant for building a residence for His Lordship the Chief Justice.

Now there are three main grounds on which I oppose this grant. They have been mostly dealt with by the previous speakers and, if I beg leave of the Council to repeat them, it is only for the purpose of emphasising them and of reminding the members that before they cast their vote one way or the other they have got to take all these matters into consideration.

In the first place, I agree with Babu Surendra Nath Mullick when he says that the head of the judiciary should take care not to come into touch with the executive, either direct or remote. I remember there is, at any rate, a story current in the High Court that one of the leading barristers there refused invitations to the houses of Judges on the sole ground that, if he were to accept hospitality, he would not be able to render full justice to his clients in court. I am told that there are some Chief Justices who excuse themselves from attending functions at Belvedere simply because they thought that by yielding to temptations of that character, they might involuntarily be led to show some kind of inclination to favour the executive at the sacrifice of their independent judicial judgment. I am not going to say that occupying a house built at Government expense need necessarily bring His Lordship the Chief Justice into such a difficult position, but the fact remains that the learned Chief Justice, if he were to live in a house built by Government under the present circumstances and at a high cost, which is likely to be incurred by the public exchequer, he will have to accept, in sort of favour from the Executive Government.

My reasons for saying so bring me to the second ground on which I oppose this grant. The Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim has just now told us that the cost of building materials has gone up so very high that it is difficult to build any permanent structure at a moderate cost at the present moment. He was just explaining to us that adding a second storey—only adding a second storey—to a building at Alipore—and not a very big building either—costs us about a lakh of rupees. If that is so, it is absurd that it will be possible to build a suitable residence for the Chief Justice of Bengal at a cost of only a lakh of rupees. I don't think the Government claims that it will be able to finish the structure at a cost of a lakh of rupees. I take it, although the estimates have not been given to us, that the structure, the building materials, the land and everything all told will cost not less than three lakhs of rupees and, if the Chief Justice were to pay a tenth part of his salary it would not bring us interest of more than $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; that is ordinary arithmetic. Is it fit, is it proper, is it admissible, is it wise to enter into an enterprise of this character at a time of financial crisis which brings us a return of only $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent? I ask the Council seriously to consider this. How can we go out before the public and justify this grant if the public were to ask us, "how could you feel yourself justified in investing three lakhs of rupees which brings you in return only Rs. 7,200 a year? Is that economy? Is that dealing with public money in the way in which you should deal? Is it doing your duty to your constituents?" I submit that if the Government are to force us to give them this grant, they will simply be putting us in a very difficult position before the public.

My third reason for opposing this grant is briefly this. I quite appreciate that in the mufassal it is difficult for Government servants to find suitable residences, but that cannot be said in the case of Calcutta. With all our difficulties in this respect it is quite easy for those who are in enjoyment of high salaries and fairly good incomes to get fairly habitable houses for residence. All those houses from the south of Ripon Street downwards up to Bhowanipur, big palaces, can be had at a monthly rent of Rs. 700 to Rs. 800, that is a rent which the Chief Justice can always afford to pay. I don't know if some member is objecting to this remark or challenging the correctness of this remark. If really it is difficult to get a suitable residence fit for His Lordship the Chief Justice at a monthly rent of even Rs. 1,000, is it right for His Lordship to expect that he should be accommodated in a house for which he will have to pay Government only Rs. 600 a month? Will His Lordship come forward to pay Rs. 1,200 a month or 20 per cent. of his income as a rent towards the house which he is going to occupy? I suppose, not. It brings us to the point emphasised by Babu Surendra Nath Mullick that the Chief Justice will occupy a house for which the ordinary rent will be Rs. 1,200 a month, but for which His Lordship will be allowed by the Executive Government to pay Rs. 600 a month: I am talking of Rs. 1,200. Now, I submit, and what I was submitting as my third ground is therefore this, that, whatever may be the conditions in the mufassal, His Lordship the Chief Justice can always find a suitable residence in Calcutta.

I have briefly stated the three reasons, which induce me to oppose this grant, and although I very much appreciate the difficulties, which there may be in the way of Government if this grant is not voted, the Government, we hope, will also consider our position and our responsibilities in this matter and not call upon us to vote a grant which we will not be able honestly to justify to our constituents.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: As a similar motion stands in my name, I need not move it separately, but simply support the one now before the House. In doing so I wish to have some information regarding an item of Rs. 13,000 in the last year's estimate. I do not know whether that amount was spent on preliminary survey of the area or for any other purpose.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: For raising the site of the building.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Now I understand it. This year a sum of one lakh is provided. We do not know what our final commitment in regard to this item is going to be, and whether this one lakh will be increased by three, four or five lakhs more. I beg to be excused for saying that we find that we are placed in a difficult position. Perhaps we will be called obstructive, or we will be accused of hampering the Government, but we do not express our opinion on the subject till we know the full facts. We are asked to vote a grant. This, in my opinion, is the essence of the Reforms, that we have got the purse-strings in our hands. I would ask the Hon'ble Member to consider seriously, and most seriously, that, if he is asked to make a grant out of his own pocket for any particular purpose, would he not like to know what the final cost was going to be? If he is asked to pay Rs. 5,000, would he not ask whether it would be finished with Rs. 25,000?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: The total estimate is Rs. 2,48,000.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: To this Rs. 2,48,000 the value of the land must be added, and I say, with the utmost respect to the authority concerned, that if this be done the total cost would amount to something like Rs. 3,50,000. Supposing we float a loan, we will have to pay 6 per cent. plus 1 per cent. for sinking fund. But I understand that the Chief Justice will only pay 10 per cent. of his salary as rent, so there will be a loss to the public exchequer of a considerable sum of money. To cite a parallel case, the Improvement Trust pays a reinstatement cost (I hope Mr. Bompas is here—and will corroborate me) to people who are forced out of their dwellings. The Trust have been giving them land and the cost of the land is made a charge on the property at the rate of 5 per cent. Quite recently they found that it was not possible to obtain money from the market at anything less than 6 per cent. On the recommendation of Mr. Bompas, the Improvement Trust increased the rate of interest to 6 per cent. I think that in this case, even if we take 6 per cent. of the entire outlay as rent, the rent would amount to about Rs. 2,000 a month. So in building a residence for the Chief Justice the public exchequer will lose a considerable sum of money.

As regards building houses for high officials at public expense, I do not know the policy of Government. We find that only two officers have houses built for them at public expense, namely, His Excellency the Governor (it is quite befitting his position that he should have a residence provided at public expense) and the Right Revd. the Bishop of Calcutta. Is it intended that all other high officials should have buildings provided at public expense? If that be so, we ought to have that policy discussed in the Council before we embark on any expenditure on a single item. But, as I have said, we are confronted with a difficult position, because the building has already been started, a contract has been entered into with Messrs. Martin & Co., and one storey of the building is about to be completed. In these circumstances I think there is nothing left for us but to vote the money asked for, as if we do not proceed with the construction of the house we shall have to pay damages to the contractor, with whom we made an agreement. Is it not, I respectfully ask, playing with the so-called powers which we possess to ask us to vote a demand when the contract has actually been entered into? This will give a handle to those who are disposed to carp at the Reforms. I do not quite understand that, if it was really intended that the vote of the House was to be obtained for this item, how could a contract be made previously before such a vote was obtained?

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: The matter has been fairly thoroughly discussed and I do not think it necessary to go over the same details. I should only like to point out one or two facts as they strike me. The question has been very well discussed by Mr. Mullick and I should not go into his details. But I think that it would have been more fair to this Council, if the Government had come forward with a proposal to increase the pay of the Chief Justice and not give him a house, because it practically means that he secures the advantage of getting higher pay than what he is getting now, by taking a house, for which he will have to pay much less than what the actual rent of the house would be. It seems quite possible that in the near future, we may have Indian officers working as Chief Justices of the High Court. In that case, I do not think any house will be necessary. So, I do not see how the Government could make out a good case that a house for the Chief Justice, as such, is necessary in Calcutta. Then, again, it seems to me that the question of having a house for the Chief Justice is rather the thin end of the wedge, because, I believe, there are some other Judges, who have come out from England, who may also say that they find it difficult to get houses in Calcutta. One of these days, we may be called upon to provide houses for them. So I think it is desirable that we should cry "halt" at this moment, when we have got this opportunity. Then a question has been raised that a contract has been entered into and that work has already been commenced. I should like to know whether it is not a fact that during the last fortnight or three weeks, the work has proceeded at rather an extraordinary pace. Then, again, I think that it would have been more fair to this Council to place this demand on a non-voted list, because it seems to me to be rather adding insult to injury to come to this Council and say, "Well, we are committed and you have got to vote for this grant; otherwise, we should be sued for damages and things like that." It is hardly fair to ask us to vote this grant. With these words, I beg to support this amendment.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: Charity, it is said, always begins at home, so let us be charitable at home. First of all let us build houses for our Executive Councillors. They are very high officials. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr nods and approves of my idea. Then, we should also build houses for our Ministers. Here is an old Minister who runs all the way from Barrackpore to Calcutta. I should like to build a residence for him here, as he has not got one in Calcutta. There is the Hon'ble President sitting there, and I should like to give him a house too, and why not to the other members? Last of all I come to the mufassal members. Why do you not build a stable or barrack for the mufassal members? You have no idea of the difficulties under which they labour. I am told that Government have engaged some hotels at Delhi for the accommodation of members coming from the mufassal. But what have you done in Calcutta? Unless we depend upon the charity of friends, we do not know where we are to live. If arrangements can be made on the ground floor of the Town Hall for their sleeping accommodation, I think the mufassal members will be very grateful to the House. On the question of principle, I am decidedly against the construction of such houses. It has been pointed out that only two high officials have got houses. With regard to His Excellency the Governor, we have nothing to say. He represents Royalty. There is also the Lord Bishop of Calcutta. Now, if you go on building houses for other officials, I do not know where we are to stop. What special consideration is there for bringing up this subject? I am curious to know how this question cropped up. If all the eminent Chief Justices mentioned by my friend, Mr. Mukherji, could live in Calcutta and dispense even-handed justice without having a house built at State expense, what was the special circumstance which led the Executive Government to move in this matter? The Executive Government, at least in the past, was not very friendly towards the judiciary, and now they are going to hobnob together. This is an idea which is not at all palatable to us. We enter our strong and emphatic protest against this idea. Then in the interests of the poor rate-payers, when this question has come up before us, we are, as their mouthpiece, bound to enter our protest and vote out any grant, which is proposed by way of luxury and convenience to the highly paid officials of Government. We can understand an increase of a rupee or an increase of a couple of rupees to poorly paid officers of Government in these days of stress and strain, but, when so many palatial houses are available in Calcutta, I do not know what earthly reason there can be for building houses for high officials.

Now this point has been raised by my friend Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, that the work has begun. We know that there are other purposes, for which, if the house is partially built or built at all, it can be utilised, and that is no reason why we should vote this amount.

Then, again, this step will not be at all looked upon with favour by the proprietors of houses at Calcutta. If all the high officials get their houses built for them, what are house-owners going to do with their houses? How are they going to let them? Not to the poor members of the Bengal Legislative Council? They cannot afford to pay Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 a month. So, from their point of view this is also objectionable, and in the name of the poor people of Bengal and in the name of the rate-payers I seriously object to the voting of this amount for building or constructing a residence for the Chief Justice of Bengal. Of course it should not be said, and no one should run away with the idea, that I have no respect for the chief of the judiciary. Belonging to the legal profession, I have the profoundest respect for him. The new Viceroy is coming. He also belongs to the legal profession, so that, unless we vote out this amount before the advent of the new Viceroy, I do not know what will happen to this proposition.

Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY: Under the rules of this House, I sent up my name when I had something to say. I find, however, that most of the members who have spoken before me have anticipated me, but yet since I have been called upon to speak, I must have my say. Babu Surendra Nath Mallik has spoken for the Midnapureans and I only regret that Sir Henry Wheeler will not be called upon to justify this expenditure as a business proposition. We do not know—we seek information—as to what are the commitments of the Government, the commitments of the Government as regards the architect and the builder, the commitments of the Government as regards any promises that they might have made to the Chief Justice, I do not know how far at present they can resile from the position that they have taken up and much, I think, will depend upon what explanation the Hon'ble Member in charge will be able to offer for what we consider as wanton waste; but, if there are commitments, I think a very easy solution would be, if you have to build this house, to utilise it for other and more useful purposes. We ardently hope that in course of time, and not at a distant future, we shall be able to speak in a better building than the present one. We cannot find money for a legislative room for ourselves, and yet we are asked to provide money for a building, for which apparently there is no urgent necessity. Use it therefore, if use it you must, for other purposes and better purposes, and purposes that will be more in line with the desires of the people.

I cannot sit down without just one word. I do not know what Sir Abd-ur-Rahim meant when he spoke about the high value of buildings specially, when it is the Government that undertakes to build for itself. But it strikes us that it is the notorious propensities of the Public Works Department that is responsible for this state of affairs, and the sooner we embark upon a reform in that direction the better for us and for our finances.

As to the proposition about Hastings House, perhaps it has not occurred to the hon'ble members, who have advocated it, that, if the Government could only see its way to accommodate the Chief Justice at Hastings House, the Chief Justice would only be too glad to occupy it. It is a magnificent building, it is a most comfortable building, and I am sure that Government must be intending it for a different purpose, and a more expensive and a more necessitous purpose than that of providing a building for the Chief Justice, though it may be that other Chief Justices too while meting out even-handed justice living in their own homes have, each one of them, endeavoured at some time or other to have an official residence for themselves.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: The speakers who have preceded me have vehemently asserted that they have great respect for the Hon'ble Chief Justice, but the motions which they have moved, and the reasons which they have assigned for them, do not show that they want to keep up that respect. I beg to submit that our refusing to grant this amount implies that they want the Hon'ble Chief Justice to reside in a rented house. The Improvement Trust of Calcutta has provided Calcutta with palatial mansions and buildings, but at the same time the high prices that have been attached to these buildings, have made it a prohibitive business altogether. I submit at the same time that the Chief Justice, being at the head of the judiciary, should be above the necessity of renting a house, because he has to discharge judicial duties. The fact of his having to reside in a rented house may interfere with his judicial work. I do not say that it is so, but there may be considerations, which will interfere with his judicial work. Therefore, to give the Chief Justice a house, for which he has to pay, even a smaller sum than he would have to pay on account of a rented house, is a necessity which this Council ought to take into consideration. Therefore I oppose this motion. There are gentlemen who say that they entertain the highest respect for the Chief Justice; that respect ought to be shown in a way which is unassailable. The head of the executive, the Governor of Bengal, has Government House. Why should not the head of the judiciary have a residence also?

With these observations, I beg to oppose this motion.

Mr. G. MORCAN: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: I wish to give the Government member an opportunity to speak. After that, if the closure is moved, I shall put the motion before the Council.

Babu JATINDRA NATH BASU: Do you think you are right in allowing the Government Member and not a private member an opportunity to speak now?

The PRESIDENT: If the closure is moved and not carried, other speakers will have an opportunity to speak.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: The matter must be looked at from a broader point of view than we have heard from the members. No one will deny that it is very difficult nowadays to find a suitable house in Calcutta for the Chief Justice of Bengal. I think there are many members in this Council, who know from experience, and can bear me out, that when a new Chief Justice is appointed from England, he has to look about for a house, and in the present condition of things, there cannot be the least hesitation in saying that, if a new Chief Justice were to come from England, he would find the greatest difficulty in securing a suitable house. The question of finding an official residence for the Chief Justice of Bengal is by no means a new one, as has been supposed by some of the members. Indeed, some of the members suggested that the decision was arrived at, and contracts entered into in this connection for the construction of this house after the Reforms Scheme came into operation, and that the Government ought to have given an opportunity to this House to pronounce an opinion upon the propriety of this scheme. As a matter of fact, the decision to build a house for the Chief Justice was arrived at before the new Council came into existence, and therefore it could not be rightly complained that we did not take the House into confidence. The fact is that this matter dates back as far as the time of Sir Francis Maclean. It was felt desirable that the Chief Justice should not be put to any inconvenience with regard to his residence. It has been for some time extremely difficult to secure a suitable house in Calcutta. Landlords are not by any means always ready to oblige tenants, however high their position may be, and I think the Council will agree with me that it is not right for the Chief Justice of Bengal to be expected to put himself under any obligation of that sort. That, I think, is a considerable justification, if not a complete justification, for the Government trying to build an official residence for the Chief Justice of Bengal. The matter was suggested, as I have told you, first by Sir Francis Maclean about 12 years ago, and the then Bengal Government readily assented to the proposition, but for some reason or other, it was not carried out for a long time; partly owing to financial difficulties. But financial difficulties are growing daily, and it was at last decided that a scheme of this sort should not be indefinitely postponed.

It was suggested by some of the speakers that this is the thin end of the wedge, and that Government will build similar houses for other high officials. I can assure the House that this is not the case at all. Although there may be some members of this Council who are finding it difficult to obtain houses, I think the case of the Chief Justice stands on a somewhat different footing. The members of this Council and the Ministers are men, who are either residents of Bengal, or who are already in service in Bengal, and they, most of them, have been some time in Calcutta, and they would have houses already, but the Chief Justice comes out from England; his position is very different. It is these considerations that have induced the Government to build a house for the Chief Justice.

Then as regards the cost; undoubtedly the cost will be very high, it will amount to Rs. 2,58,000 exclusive of the price of the land. We cannot possibly charge the Chief Justice anything like 6 per cent. of this investment, but, if the House thinks it desirable in the public interest, that there should be an official residence for the Chief Justice, then I think it ought to be prepared to make some sacrifice in this connection.

To my mind the most cogent consideration why this Council should vote this amount for the construction of this house, is that the contract has already been placed, we have asked Messrs. Martin & Co. to build this house, and they have begun building operations; the building has come up above the ground floor—

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: When was the contract entered into? What is the exact date?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: I cannot give the exact date; it was some time in December.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Was it not after we sent in these motions, that the foundations were started? It is opposite my house, very near to it, so I ought to know.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: It is not so; it was before the notices of this motion. I do not think it is right for anybody to suspect that the Government is in any way anxious to push on this work at the expense of the public, without giving the matter proper consideration. As a matter of fact, the matter has been under the consideration of the Government for several years, and it was hurried on owing to the present state of things regarding the housing problem in Calcutta—

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: May I rise to a point of order? If the building work has proceeded in due course, how is it that no expenditure has been shown besides Rs. 13,625 for expenditure for raising land under column "Probable expenditure, 1920-21?" I think therefore we can rightly assume that no expenditure has been incurred so far as building work is concerned. Will the Hon'ble Member in charge kindly explain?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: I cannot say; this is a matter in which the Financial Department is concerned. The item has been set out in the Budget, and, what I submit to the House is that there are very cogent reasons why this money should be voted, as if this money is not voted, the result will be that the work that has been started, will not only be thrown away, but we shall have to pay very heavy compensation. I am advised that this compensation will be a very substantial amount; it may not be as much as the cost of the building, but it will be a very heavy amount. Is it advisable to abandon this project and pay compensation like this? I must point out that the House is already committed in several cases, and will have to pay heavy compensation in the way of damages, that will have to be paid to different parties on account of certain votes. We will have to pay a heavy compensation, so I think the wisest course will be to build this house and complete the scheme.

One suggestion was made, which I think I ought to answer. That there is Hastings House available, which could be utilised as a residence for the Chief Justice. The member who made the suggestion is not aware that Hastings House is not at the disposal of the Government of Bengal, but at the disposal of the Government of India. There are officers of the Government of India located in Calcutta who cannot find suitable residences, and it is extremely likely that Hastings House will be made over to these officers for their residence. That house is not available to the Government of Bengal, and therefore that consideration is entirely irrelevant ---- Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I have your permission to ask one question regarding this House?

The PRESIDENT: You may put a question, but you cannot cross-examine the Hon'ble Member.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: The property belongs to the Government of India and they want it for the benefit of their own officers, and the hon'ble member can take it from me, that there was no alternative except to build a house, luckily for the Bengal Government there was this land at Pora Bazar available. The project in connection with Pora Bazar has had to be curtailed, and partially postponed, owing to want of funds, but so far as this particular matter is concerned, it was found advisable in the public interest to utilise a portion of this land for the building of this house for the Chief Justice.

Mr. G. MORCAN: I move that the question be now put.

The question that the question be put was then put and agreed to.

The motion was then put, a division being taken, with the following result:—

The Ayes being 63 and the Noes 34, the motion was lost.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI moved "that the demand for Rs. 10,000 for reconstructing some of the police buildings at Peelkhana be refused."

In view of the large deduction made in the Police Budget, I will not press this resolution, and ask permission to withdraw it.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY being absent, the following motion fell through: "That the demand for Rs. 40,000 for reconstructing some of the police buildings at Peelkhana be refused."

The following motions were then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn:—

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 15,000 for constructing police buildings at Joydebpur be refused."

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 20,000 for constructing a small investigating centre at Rugganj in the Dacca district be refused."

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 10,000 for constructing a small investigating centre at Rajabari be refused."

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 15,000 for constructing police building at Mukshedpur, Faridpur, be refused."

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 50,000 for the construction of a new police sub-station house at Kali-ghat and acquisition of land for the same be refused."

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA moved "that the demand for Rs. 50,000 for the construction of a police section house on the Russa Road, Bhowanipur, be refused."

I move this amendment mainly on two grounds, viz., first, that this new section house is meant, I believe, for a new outpost, and is not of urgent necessity; and, secondly, that the system of having outposts has not, I believe proved of much success. Since sending in this amendment, I have tried to get as much information as possible, and I must confess that it is very difficult for a layman like myself to get accurate information, but I shall state the figures that I have been able to gather, and, if I am wrong, I should like the Hon'ble Member to correct my mistakes.

So far as this outpost is concerned I believe it is a new experiment introduced since 1916 by Mr. Clarke. Now, there are altogether 26 thanas in Calcutta, and, I believe, 18 outposts have already been established. So far as I understand, the general rule has been that these outposts have been in charge of a European or Anglo-Indian sergeant, and under them are placed head constables and constables. Now, the thanas generally are occupied in investigation work, and these outposts are mainly for watch and ward work, as it is called. This outpost system has been introduced as a sop to the cry for decentralisation.

Decentralisation may be good up to a certain extent, but surely, I think, in this case, the matter has been carried too far, and for the following reasons.

In these outposts, as far as I know, no record is kept of old offenders and criminals, and the police sergeants, who are generally in charge of these outposts, find it rather hard to keep in touch with these old offenders and criminals, and it so happens, even, I am told, that the thana officers, who go out on investigation work, find it difficult to carry on their work, because they can get no information from these police sergeants, and their head constables are not always available and efficient to help in the investigation work; so that, it seems to me that this outpost system, instead of being a help, is rather a hindrance.

Then I find from the annual report of the police administration of the town of Calcutta and its suburbs for the year 1919 that it is stated that during that year crime increased by about 10,000 cases; that shows that the outpost system has not been efficient. Again, I find that the old crime of goondaism has also increased since 1916, and it is quite natural that the officers in charge of these outposts should not be able to check goondaism as efficiently as the Indian Inspectors and Sub-inspectors, because, as pointed out, these sergeants cannot be expected to be in touch with the old offenders and old criminals, who have had previous convictions, as no record of these people is kept at the outposts.

As regards the increased cost of the Calcutta police, I find in a resolution of the Government a very interesting statement that, as the cost of the administration thus increases, the question must soon arise whether Calcutta should not be called upon to pay more directly than it at present does for the service it receives. Now, for a system which is mainly for the benefit of the inhabitants of some section of Calcutta, I think it is very unwise to ask the Government, in this year of financial stress, to make this large expenditure. We have heard that a special sub-committee will be appointed in connection with the working of the Police Department. In view of the fact that it is not quite certain that the outpost system has been much of a success, I think it is up to this sub-committee to consider whether this system should continue or whether a change is necessary. Under these circumstances, I think no case has been made out for the demand for an additional outpost in Bhowanipur. With these few words, I beg to move this amendment.

The PRESIDENT: The next motion (No. 197) being identical to that just moved, the mover of No. 197 may now speak in support of the previous motion.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I support the motion, and I hope that without taking much time of the Council it will be carried.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I have been listening with great interest to the speech that has been delivered by Babu Indu Bhusan Dutta; and although in the matter of police expenditure we all have our critical eyes attracted to several items in the Budget, I think my friend who moved this motion moved it with a certain amount of hesitancy, and I therefore believe that he would be glad to have some information on the subject. As far as this particular section is concerned, I find that in 1915 these premises were sold to the Calcutta Improvement Trust for the widening of the road, and I believe Government must have got a certain amount of money from the Calcutta Improvement Trust. Therefore it is incumbent upon the Government, before they moved the police from their present quarters, to provide them with new quarters. Last year, I believe over Rs. 50,000 was spent for acquisition of the land, and the amount in question is required for building a house for the Bhowanipur police section. In this connection,

I have also listened with great interest to the observation of my friend who has criticised the outpost system. I do not wish to enter into all those arguments in detail, but one thing I want to point out and that is this: that the outpost system, if it has not proved quite so successful, ought not to be hurriedly abolished. What I find as a citizen of Calcutta, and having more intimate knowledge of the city than my friend Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, is that there is a dearth of constables in the Calcutta Police, and the outpost although very useful is undermanned. We have got in our part of the town, the ward which I represent in the Calcutta Corporation, a couple of outposts, and I believe it is a great convenience to the public, because they are within easy reach, and people can immediately inform the officer in charge if a crime or any attempt at crime is perpetrated. But the only defect that I would like to state here is that there is practically no patrol for want of a sufficient number of pahrawallas in the town. If the committee, which would be associated with the Hon'ble Member to consider the question of the police administration, will go into the matter, I hope they will recommend such a scheme as will improve the recruitment of pahrawallas in the lowest ranks of the service.

As regards the Bhowanipur section I do not think that, having regard to the fact that the Improvement Trust have acquired this site for the widening of the road and that Government have been paid the price of it, it will be fair to disallow this demand, because the police cannot move from that quarter unless and until a new quarter is found for them; and they will thereby be inconvenienced, and will block the improvement of the site. I think, therefore, that having regard to this information and any further information which I hope the Hon'ble Member in charge of the department will be in a better position to vouchsafe to the Council, the mover will see his way not to press this motion.

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): I do not think it is necessary to extend the debate on these particular amendments into a general discussion into the merits or demerits of the section system of the Calcutta police. It seems to me to be obvious that, if you want to have any form of police administration in a city with over a million inhabitants, you must have your headquarters in one place and your outlying subsidiary headquarters in others. That is the experience of even smaller towns in the mufassal; it is the experience of London, and, I take it, it is the experience of every big city in any civilised country. You cannot concentrate your police in one place, but you must have outlying centres, whether you call them sections, districts or anything else. This Bhowanipur outpost, I take it, is a police section in the south of the town, and as regards any information about it, I should have been equally pleased to give the facts to Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, as I have given them to Rai Bahadur Radha Charan Pal. The facts are, as the Rai Bahadur has said that our old property, in which the police were housed in Bhowanipur was taken up by the Improvement Trust in 1915 in connection with the Russa Road improvement scheme; and in that year the provincial revenues were benefited by whatever price the Improvement Trust paid for it. Is it not natural that, in these circumstances, being dislodged, we should seek accommodation elsewhere? Owing to financial reasons, we have not been able to provide any accommodation at all, with the result that the police have already been driven from pillar to post three times since 1916, and are at present located in two hired houses, which is a very inconvenient arrangement. The project for the site was prepared in 1916, but in 1917 we hoped to get cheaper land and the scheme was changed again in the interests of economy; we took up the land last year, and in the ensuing year we wish to build. That is the object of the provision; it is merely in replacement of previous accommodation which the police once had but of which they were deprived by the operations of the Improvement Trust.

The motion was then put and lost.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA moved "that the demand for Rs. 4,86,000 for acquisition of land required for the further extension of the new Calcutta police hospital at Bhowanipur be refused."

When I sent in my amendment, I could hardly guess that the very policemen for whom the extension of this hospital was required would come forward and support my amendment; but here, that is practically the case. Perhaps, it is not unknown to some members of this Council that only lately it was said in the papers that a petition had been sent to His Excellency the Governor by the police constables of this city mentioning some of their most urgent grievances and praying for redress. Among these grievances, I find that there is one about the system of being sent to hospital for mere indisposition. They mention in their petition, that they find it very hard that sometimes for an illness, which they consider to be no illness at all and for even mere indisposition, they are sent to hospital and kept there; that they have to lose their pay for the days they are kept there; and that their stay in hospital is far from being according to their taste. Under these circumstances, I think that it would be wise to consider the system of this hospital treatment of policemen before we vote for anything for an increased expenditure.

Now, there is another matter concerned with this. I find that a new hospital has just been finished at Bhowanipur; and if my information is correct, the hospital is not yet occupied; but it will shortly be occupied. When estimates and proposals were made for the erection of this hospital, I gave this credit to Government, that they certainly knew how much space would be required, and how many patients they were going to have in this hospital for the next five years at any rate. It is not too much to ask Government to look ahead five years, but I now find that before this new hospital is occupied by any single patient at all, there is a proposal made before this Council by Government that a large sum of money (Rs. 4 86,000) is required for acquisition of other lands. In addition to that, if we do make this grant, next year I suppose we shall have a proposal for nearly Rs. 49 lakhs for the building of this extended hospital. I ask this Council—is this fair; is this wise; is this politic to go on at this rate of expenditure? I do not know how they—I mean those responsible for the scheme—could be so shortsighted as not to understand as to what their requirements would be as regards this hospital. From the nature of the case, it seems to me that the necessity is not so great.

Then I have been told that at Dallanda House some patients are now housed. I do not think that the Dallanda House is going out of the hands of the Government just now; so, there does not seem to be any reason for this extension. It is a simple matter and no enlightening speech is needed for recommending this amendment; so, I hope that the Council will consider it favourably and vote strong on it.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I support this motion——

The PRESIDENT: I ought to remind members that we have less than three hours left to bring to a close the discussion under this head; and as a large number of amendments remain to be discussed, I hope that members will speak as briefly as possible.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I may say that I have nothing further to add to what has already been said by my friend, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I do not like to repeat what has been said by my friends. This is a new hospital which is still being built and has not been occupied. It is a T shaped building, one portion of which is 256 feet long—I measured it this morning—and is about 62 feet wide; and the other part of it is 100 feet by 62 feet. It comes to about 360 feet long in three storey, which means about 1,100 feet long. The whole police force number about 5,000, according to the statement made by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler the other day, and if 5 per cent. is down on an average, it requires 250 beds; and we can very easily imagine what this house can contain. I mean to say that there is a limit to everything. Why ask for this unnecessary expenditure? You ought to have known your further requirements. You now come up—as it appears from the resolutions—for Rs. 4,86,000 for acquisition of land for further extension of the Calcutta police hospital. It seems that either your officers were all sleeping; or are thoroughly incompetent, because this grant seems to be absolutely ridiculous. If you were anticipating extensions, why did you not provide for it beforehand? You have got high executive officers—Superintending Engineers and others—and as soon as the house is finished, they come up with a demand for Rs. 4,86,000 for a further extension. What does it mean? Does it mean that these gentlemen did not bestow any attention on the matter? If that is not so, what is this demand for? You have just built a big house on about 68 bighas of land—the whole of the Jaltoonghee, which was one of the biggest gardens in the Bhowanipur side, and on which it is standing. Having built a three-storeyed house, which will be one of the biggest hospitals in Calcutta, and before anybody has occupied it, you come up now for nearly Rs. 5 lakhs for acquisition of land for further extension for a new Calcutta hospital, which means that another Rs. 16 lakhs will be required for another extension. Is this the way we have got to spend everything for the police and is there no limit to this expenditure? This is the question I ask of those who are responsible. I certainly object to this and I hope that the Council will carry these resolutions.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I support this motion. The only thing which I would like to add is that, if a hospital be necessary for the police, by all means we must have it, but we must, in the first instance, be convinced of the necessity or the urgency about it. We have not heard that the present arrangement is not sufficient, or that it cannot accommodate all the patients, or that any hired accommodation has become necessary. In that view of the matter, it is not proper for us that any heavy expenditure should be incurred. Moreover, if for the acquisition of the land alone we spend such a heavy amount as is now asked for, it will be a very costly affair. So, we should consider the scheme carefully before we accord our sanction to it. In this view of the matter, I support the amendment.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I simply support this amendment.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I should like to know one thing. Am I to understand that this strip of land is the one between Sambhu Nath Pandit Street and the Hospital, and what the area of the land is? I understand that this hospital is behind Sambhu Nath Pandit Street, and it is approached by a narrow passage from Sambhu Nath Pandit Street. If that is so, there is a strip of land—a belt—between the hospital and Sambhunath Pandit Street. Why was that left out at the time when the scheme was prepared? Supposing that this is the building, that the portico is on the bare land, and that there is a strip of land on the south of this building; and if this is the bare land, on which the portico is standing and that was left out, I should like to know why it was left out. Certainly, there are responsible officers who prepared the plans and designs, and it seems very inconvenient to have left out this strip adjoining the hospital. I should like to know whether that is the case or not.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: This scheme is connected with the medical relief of the police in Calcutta, and in that light it is one of importance, since the good health of the police has a close bearing on their efficiency and popularity. I must say that I was somewhat surprised to hear the frank statement from Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta that he cannot see why, when we have a force of about over 5,000 men, we need make special arrangements for their medical attendance. In every up-country lines, there is a police hospital. What would the member have us do? If our police go sick—and unfortunately they go sick fairly often—what are we to do? Are we to leave them on the roadside and let them die; or are we to show ordinary humanity and try and nurse them back to health?

There has always been a police hospital in Calcutta—as the Calcutta members know—and it used to be in a straggling inconvenient building in Amherst Street, which had a long frontage of value for purposes other than for a hospital. Some two or three years ago we sold that frontage for Rs. 3,00,000, and by that sum the provincial revenues benefited. Naturally, having sold that frontage, we had to build a new hospital, pending which, as Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta seems to be aware, we have to push our sick men into a very uncomfortable and unsuitable house—the Dallanda House—which in the olden days used to be a lunatic asylum. The construction of a new building has been in hand for some time, and it is now nearing completion. A provision for its furniture and equipment appears in the Budget, and the main block is standing visible for all to see. But I can assure Babu Surendra Nath Mullick that the estimate of accommodation is based on our past experience of the number of beds which our force requires, and it has not been exaggerated merely for the pleasure of seeing spacious empty wards. After the main block was begun, the question arose about the lay-out of the subsidiary grounds. Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur says: “Why was it not foreseen at the time when the land was first acquired that more would be needed. I plead guilty to a certain extent for having curtailed the original area in the hope of effecting economy. We hoped, by pushing the building back from a frontage on Sambhu Nath Pandit Street, to save money and to be able to crowd in our buildings in the space thus available. However, events falsified that hope and proved that we required more servants' quarters than had at first been anticipated, as well as quarters for sub-assistant surgeons and compounders. I was shown a lay-out, if the whole of these requirements were to be crowded on to the site. It meant erecting high servants' quarters which would have blotted out the air, and it meant putting them and the kitchens in most undesirable proximity to the infectious diseases' block. I therefore visited the spot in company with Major Sinha, the Police Surgeon, and, I think, with Surgeon-General Robinson and various other departmental heads; and we decided that it would be wise to take up this larger area, which measures 3 bighas and 14 cottahs, as against 12 cottahs which we shall be able to give up. On that land, we can make an effective lay-out, and I frankly admit that we have tried to put a decent hospital. We also wish to take up a small area for possible extensions. In so doing, I was influenced by the fact, which has been forcibly brought to my notice during the four years I have been in charge of the Medical Department here, of our folly in not looking a little ahead. The amount of money, which we have had to pay in the neighbourhood of the Medical College, Calcutta, in order to take up lands for extensions which later developments have shown to be required, would astonish the Council. Surely it is wiser, when the land in the neighbourhood is not fully developed, and, when we foresee with a reasonable amount of certainty that we shall require more land, to buy it before prices go up, rather than at a later stage, and at a greatly enhanced cost. As a matter of fact the need of utilising this extra land has already arisen. That is the history of the land. If these amendments are carried, it will render it impossible to have an efficient and satisfactory hospital for the police in that locality.

The motion was then put and a division taken, with the following result:—

The Ayes being 51 and the Noes 33, the motion was carried.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI moved "that the demand for Rs. 2,83,000 for acquisition of land for married sergeants of the Calcutta police be refused."

I move this reduction on the ground that I regard this as a luxury grant. Situated as we are, we can only afford to make this grant, when we conscientiously believe it is absolutely necessary for efficiency. I have not been convinced that this sum of Rs. 2,83,000 for acquisition of land for married sergeants of the Calcutta police is absolutely necessary. Of course, my sympathies, as a married man, naturally go out to them. Who is there that does not want to keep his wife and children in comfort, but one would like to do this at one's own expense and not at the expense of the general public. If we make this grant of Rs. 2,83,000 for acquisition of land, I think the Hon'ble Member will come to us next year and will want from us another Rs. 10,00,000 or Rs. 11,00,000 for buildings. I think there is a limit to everything and there must be a limit to police expenditure. In my Budget speech I began by saying that the police was swallowing up one-sixth of our entire total expenditure. Our total expenditure is about 12 crores of rupees and the police, apart from these grants, is swallowing up one-sixth, i.e. Rs. 1,90,00,000. Therefore, Sir, as I do not feel conscientiously that this is really necessary, I think it my duty to oppose this grant.

The PRESIDENT: This motion and the motions up to No. 217 are identical and I would therefore call upon those in whose names these other motions stand to speak if they wish to do so.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: To my mind it appears that the cost for the building would come up to Rs. 20,00,000 or Rs. 25,00,000, because we understand that the cost for the acquisition of land is to be Rs. 2,83,000. Now this is no doubt a very heavy sum, considering the accommodation for a dozen or two dozen officers. If it is necessary that the land is to be acquired, then in that case I do not understand why the land is to be acquired in the central part of Calcutta? Why cannot the land be acquired at a cheaper rate in the suburbs? If it be contended that the services of the sergeants, who are employed on traffic duty, cannot be easily availed of, unless they are provided with quarters in the central part of the town, my submission to the Council is that arrangements for conveyance may be made so that their services may be obtained at any time. Under such circumstances, it is for the Council to consider whether this large sum of money (Rs. 2,83,000), should be allowed for the purpose of the acquisition of land. I consider, Sir, that it is a very large sum and ought to be omitted. It is not necessary for me to speak at length, because the motions speak for themselves and I believe the time-limit is to be observed by every member.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I support the motion. My sympathies will no doubt, like that of Professor S. C. Mukherji, go with the married sergeants. But we are sorry we cannot afford to spend so large a sum this year and we must be in an affluent position before we can undertake any such scheme. We must also examine what amount will be ultimately necessary for this purpose; and unless and until this is done we cannot provide for this heavy item of expenditure.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I do not like to repeat what was said at the time of the Budget discussion when Sir Henry Wheeler said that if you do this these people will be very much contented. I doubt very much if that should be the ground for giving so much money—only that these people would be contented. I doubt if that is the proper view to take. On the contrary, if you give them this, then you necessarily bring discontent in some other section of the service and you create distinction. That is not proper. Apart from this, there is another matter. In Calcutta there are people—professional builders—who will build for you if you assure them 6 per cent. interest. I do not see any reason for incurring this cost. I do not think that in the present condition of our finances we should go in for such a big expenditure—Rs. 2,83,000 this year and probably something more next year, as we have seen in the case of the hospitals. So many lakhs for land and then so many lakhs for buildings and then a further grant for improvement—and so it goes on. I therefore oppose the grant

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I would like to say just one word on this motion. Many items of business have already been referred to the Standing Committees that are to be formed. They will have a lot of work to do but I hope this will not be a heavy addition. This is a new item of expenditure on which this Council is asked to launch. We find that Rs. 2,83,000 is required for acquisition of land, and I think Rs. 6,00,000 or Rs. 7,00,000 more will be necessary for building purposes. As it is a new matter altogether, I think this might easily be referred to the Police Standing Committee, as I have already said.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: You are probably aware that there is already a proposal to increase the pay of the European sergeants and a sum of Rs. 2,27,000 have been provided for this increase. Having done that you want on the top of this another item of Rs. 2,83,000 for acquisition of land. This is but the thin end of the wedge. This means that you require at least another Rs. 7,00,000 or Rs. 8,00,000 for building houses on the land to be acquired. So you will have to incur at least Rs. 10,00,000 for building quarters for these married sergeants. My friend—Mr. S. C. Mukherji—said that there must be a limit to everything—even to the police expenditure. I think every word of that is true. We are not, as everybody is aware, flushed with money. It is with difficulty that we are making two ends meet. Let us see what we get from the Government of India, and then the Finance Member can come, if necessary, next year with proposals such as these—but not this year.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: After what has been said on this motion I do not wish to detain this House longer. But I want to know one fact, and it is this: I find from the Police Administration Report, recently published, that there are 151 sergeants in the Calcutta Police. May I know how many of them are married sergeants? Then the figure of the Indian constables comes to 4,896. May I also know how many of them are married, and whether any provision has been made for accommodating the married Indian constables in different parts of the town? Well, Sir, compare 151 with 4,896, or, in round figures, 5,000. This is the one information I want. Then there is another allotment of Rs. 20,000 for increased rent of the sergeants in the Calcutta Police. This is a charge which will be incurred in the ensuing year. The sum of Rs. 2,83,000, I believe—in fact it is stated—is for the cost of land only. I do not know what the building will cost—the building will cost at least Rs. 1,00,000. If you take the number of married sergeants I should like to know what will be the cost per head. Then I find from the Police Administration Report that Government have to pay nearly Rs. 3,12,000 per annum on account of the rent of different houses for the accommodation of police officers. Cannot these questions be considered together? I think the question ought to be tackled together and ought to be considered from a larger point of view, that is, whether we should not float a loan and get this work done by systematic progress year after year, so that we may ultimately save Rs. 3,12,000. This question may be fully discussed by the Police Committee which will be attached to the Department. Having regard to these facts, I do not see my way to vote for the grant of Rs. 2,83,000.

Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: I rise to support the motion. I do not know what inconvenience is felt by these sergeants, particularly as other officers of equal status and position are not supplied with quarters. We all know that other persons have got to live in rented houses, whether they are Government servants or men of independent means. I should like to know whether Government have been generous enough to provide quarters for their other servants on the same pay and of the same status. With these words I beg to support the motion.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I spoke on this subject in connection with the general Budget debate, and there is really little new that I can tell the Council about it. As, however, the old arguments have been brought out to-day, I take it that it is up to me to bring out the old replies.

I would, first of all, refer to the general argument, of which we have heard so much in connection with the expenditure on police, and I would like to bring to the notice of the Council what that argument is logically leading to. We have been told ad nauseam in connection with this police budget that the expenditure on the police is large, the province is poor, we have not got enough for the needs of education and sanitation and therefore this and that expenditure should be excised. Now, if that is the position which the Council desires to take up, what is the logical conclusion? I have endeavoured to point out, and have given figures in detail, that the expenditure which we have asked for in connection with the police is only a fraction of that which those who are responsible for the Department tell us is absolutely necessary, and only a fraction of what the local Government deem to be necessary. Therefore, the need for this large expenditure is conclusive, so far as we are concerned. Now, it is also certain that the resources of the province, as they stand at present, will never be sufficient to meet the large developments which we all want to see in various directions—education, sanitation, and in fact all along the administrative line. That is an admitted fact. It was admitted in the Joint Report, and anybody who takes the trouble to study the figures will realise the truth of it. Therefore, if we are to say that our resources are insufficient, if we are to accept the opinion of a member who spoke yesterday, that the mere thought of taxation will bring about a revolution in Bengal, then what is the result as regards the police? It must be that the police will never get a pice in any budget. That is the logical conclusion to which this argument, as represented in this Council, is leading. It will always be possible to urge that the expenditure is heavy; it will always be possible to find other heads on which we might like to spend money, and therefore the logical deduction will always be to cut the police budget. The members who ask why cannot we wait till we have disposed of other important items, are not really urging postponement, but are putting forward the general contention that no further money is to be spent on the police, whatever the circumstances may be, or whatever the merits of the particular project may be.

Now, as regards this particular case. It is expensive, I admit, but it is in furtherance of a scheme which we have already begun. We have taken up about half the land, and the proposal is to take the remaining half. This is the only new scheme which we propose in connection with the present budget concerning the Calcutta police. When it was put to the Commissioner which, out of the long list of his demands (as it would be impossible to provide for all), did he consider the most important, he named this one. Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur asks "why can't we go out to the suburbs." The reason is that we must have the police headquarters in the centre of the town, and Lal Bazar is admirably suited for a headquarters. Unfortunately land in that vicinity is expensive, but I see no indication of the value of land there coming down. By dallying with this scheme we have already lost over a lakh of rupees. For the last three years we have been trying to push on with it. If it had been carried out in 1919, it would have cost us much less, Rs. 1,50,000; if it had been carried out in 1920, it would have cost us only Rs. two lakhs and three quarters, and now it is going to cost us Rs. 2,83,000. Therefore, in three years we have lost more than a lakh of rupees.

The scheme is for acquiring a site, upon which to erect quarters for 3 assistant commissioners, 8 inspectors and 12 sergeants. For these men we have to pay at present Rs. 2,250 as monthly house-rent, as these officers are entitled to free quarters, a fact which answers the argument of one member who said that when we have increased their pay, why should we give them houses also? I have mentioned before that whereas we used to pay Rs. 50 as house-rent for sergeants, we now have to pay Rs. 90, which accounts for the Rs. 20,000 of extra rent, for which there is provision in the Budget and which was referred to by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur. I have also mentioned before that our rent bill is over Rs. 3,00,000 a year—a conclusive reason, to my mind, for not adopting the suggestion of Babu Surendra Nath Mullick that, instead of constructing quarters, we should rent still more houses.

To sum up. At present we have insufficient quarters for married men—I have not got the statistics of married men in the force with me, so cannot satisfy the curiosity of Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, but the element is important and appreciable. By erecting quarters we concentrate the men at headquarters, and unless we erect quarters we cannot find suitable accommodation in the vicinity. This scheme, if carried through, will bring to an end a very unsatisfactory state of affairs, and it is considered by the Commissioner of Police as one of the most important reforms making for the efficiency of the force under his charge. I therefore submit that it was wise and prudent of us to make this provision.

The Ayes being 57 and the Noes 29, the motion was carried.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I confess I gave notice of my motion absolutely under a misapprehension. I shall be about the last person to press a motion for the reduction of expenditure for medical relief. From the list it appeared that this item of expenditure was for the installation of electric lights, fans, etc., for the proposed Eye Hospital. My impression was that this hospital would be constructed this year, but I understand that it is actually in course of construction and therefore I beg to withdraw this motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

It was as follows: "That the demand for Rs. 65,000 for installation of electric lights and fans, lift, pump and transformer in the proposed Eye Hospital, Medical College, be refused."

Babu Surendra Nath Ray being absent, the motion that stood in his name was deemed to have been withdrawn.

It was as follows:—"That the demand for Rs. 5,000 for additions and alterations in the existing Nurses' Home, Medical College Calcutta, be refused."

The following motion was withdrawn:—

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "That the demand for Rs. 5,000 for additions and alterations in the existing Nurses' Home, Medical College, Calcutta, be refused."

Professor S. C. Mukherji being absent, the motion that stood in his name was deemed to have been withdrawn.

It was as follows:—"That the demand for Rs. 2,00,000 for the buildings for the Dacca University be refused."

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: The very afternoon when the debate on the Dacca University grant was going on in this Council Chamber the following resolution was passed unanimously by the citizens of Dacca:—"This meeting of the citizens of Dacca resolved that, considering all the circumstances, steps be taken to boycott the Dacca University proposed to be started soon."

The PRESIDENT: Are you going to withdraw your motion or to move it?

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY moved "that the demand for Rs. 2,00,000 for the buildings for the Dacca University be refused."

For a full detailed argument in favour of the reduction of the grant to the University of Dacca I would invite the attention of this Council to the two recent issues of the Amrita Bazar Patrika and the Dacca Herald. My principal reason in moving the resolution that stands in my name is that the circumstances which gave rise to the University of Dacca and the changed circumstances of to-day do not inspire me with confidence as to the stability and permanence of its existence. You are well aware that the University of Dacca was promised to the people of Eastern Bengal as a sort of consolation prize to keep them quiet.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I rise to a point of order? Is the member in order in addressing the House in regard to the question of the desirability of the University at Dacca?

The PRESIDENT: That question does not arise upon the present motion. The present question is whether the grant of Rs. 2,00,000 for the Dacca University buildings should be given or not.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: The University was founded as you are well aware on the foundation of broken promises and unredeemed pledges, of shattered hopes and golden dreams. If you look back to the past and take into consideration the present, if you remember the broken promises of yesterday and the new pledges of to-day, promise to the people of Eastern Bengal and pledges to the Muhammadan world, it would require the faith of a Wolsey and the trust of a Strafford for the people to place confidence in the promises and pledge of Princes, Prime Ministers, of Governors and Viceroys.

The PRESIDENT: As I have already said the whole question is about the grant of Rs. 2,00,000 for the buildings for the Dacca University. You are not in order in discussing the general question.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: I bow to your ruling. I am leading to that. If the circumstances of its birth fill me with apprehension as to the permanence of its existence, the changed circumstances of to-day equally give rise to misgivings. The message of the Mahatma—

The PRESIDENT: You are again drifting away from the point.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: My argument is this. I have no faith in the permanence of this University which is no doubt an ambitious scheme. I have seen many an expensive project and ambitious scheme like the Hastings House School being put forward which have vanished into thin air crushed by the weight of its extravagance. Where is the Hastings House School to-day? (Cries of "Order, Order.")

The PRESIDENT: You are again drifting away from the question.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: I know your power. I have no faith and therefore I say that the Dacca University—

The PRESIDENT: If you cannot confine yourself to the motion you are moving you must sit down.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: From the unsettling of the settled fact, from the ruins of the Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam the University of Dacca has inherited a group of noble buildings worth over a crore of rupees. With such a magnificent heritage, such a rich legacy to start with, why waste more money on brick and mortar? I consider that the grant of Rs. 2,00,000 for building luxurious dining halls for the advancement of epicurism is a sheer waste of public money. This is the substance of what I want to say.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: In proposing this amendment I must have to say that the conflict of interests between Hindus and Muhammadans that has been raised in Bengal generally——

The PRESIDENT: The question of the establishment of a university at Dacca has already been discussed and dealt with by the Council, and you cannot revive that discussion in connection with this motion. If you have anything to say about the grant for buildings for the Dacca University there is no objection.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: Already Rs. 9,00,000 have been given to the Dacca University and there are a large number of buildings. The Dacca University is a university in name, but this consists only of colleges, which are already established in the town of Dacca. Therefore by creating the University or by giving it a very big name one cannot say that it is not a big college. There are the buildings of the Dacca College and the buildings of the Jagannath College and also in addition there are the houses, which were in possession of the late Government of Eastern Bengal and Assam, which are now given for the accommodation of boys, who are reading in these colleges. I beg to submit that this Rs. 2,00,000 would be a waste of money, if we take into consideration the large expenditure upon buildings, which was incurred. Therefore I say that this Rs. 2,00,000 should be refused.

Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: I find Dr. Suhrawardy and Maulvi Yakunuddin Ahmed are at one in proposing that the grant of Rs. 2,00,000 for buildings for the Dacca University should be cut down altogether. The object of establishing the Dacca University, as is well known to all of us, was to provide an improved kind of education——

The PRESIDENT: You are out of order. I ruled the mover out of order, when he wanted to discuss the general question, and so I cannot allow you to discuss the general question.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: I rise to oppose the motion which has been moved by Dr. A. Suhrawardy. I have listened to his arguments, and his arguments may be divided into two. The first part of the argument is that he has absolutely no faith in the permanence of this University, and to that my reply is that the matter has been set at rest by the previous motions and by the Act itself, so that the matter is not open to discussion now. The other part of the argument is that there are several buildings in Dacca, and no further buildings need be constructed for this University. I thought that the learned mover would give us some facts and figures, from which one could infer that there are these buildings in Dacca, which would usefully serve the purpose of the Dacca University, and he could not point out any particular building or any particular house, where this University could be usefully and successfully lodged. The framers of the scheme have come forward with certain schemes. They want accommodation, and they have laid out their scheme, and when the learned mover has not been able to point out any particular building, which would serve the purpose, and when his arguments are framed in the vaguest possible way, in generalities, it is impossible to meet his arguments and when arguments are couched in generalities, we always know that they are guided more by sentiment than by anything else.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I only beg to point out that under the Act you have got to build three halls, and one of them is the Jagannath Hall, and, as this Rs. 2,00,000 I understand will be spent on buildings in connection with that hall, I do not think we can stop it.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): Since this motion has been brought forward I think it only right to tell the Council very shortly why we want this money. Mr. Surendra Nath Mullick has, to some extent, anticipated me. The position is this: under the Dacca University Act we must provide for at least three residential colleges and these are described as halls. One of these three is the Jagannath Hall. Now it is necessary that the residential students of the Jagannath Hall should have a place of residence, and this money is necessary for the building of the hall. The work is under construction, and we hope to finish this building before the 1st July, when the Dacca University is going to be opened. If the Council does not allow this grant then the University cannot be opened on the 1st July, and the grants, which have already been passed, will be rendered useless. I do not think I need detain the House any longer.

The motion was then put and lost.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Since I sent in this motion I have been satisfied as to the needs of the demand and I therefore beg permission to withdraw this motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn. It was as follows: "That the demand for Rs. 1,44,000 for the construction of bungalows for Civil Officers, Dacca, be refused."

An identical motion standing in the name of Dr. A. Suhrawardy was also withdrawn.

As Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur was absent, the motion standing in his name was deemed to have been withdrawn. It was as follows: "That the grant for the construction of educational buildings under head '41- Civil Works' be reduced to Rs. 5,11,000."

Babu HEM CHANDRA BHATTACHARJI moved "that the demand for Rs. 4,00,000 for the construction of the Secretariat Press building at Calcutta be refused."

[He spoke at length in Bengali in support of the motion.]

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I am very glad to learn that my esteemed friend, Babu Hem Chandra Bhattacharji, is going to take a special interest on behalf of the pressmen whom he represents in this Council; but I am sorry that I cannot but oppose the amendment which he has moved. I shall be very brief, as time is short. I will simply state to you, Mr. President, that not only land has been acquired, but that the building has already been constructed. I think more than half of the building has been constructed, and in the course of the next few months the construction of the building will be completed. So, my friend appears to me to be too late in making this suggestion before this Council. It has been stated by him that 99 per cent. of the pressmen will be affected by the removal of the press-house to Gopalnagar. He has stated to us that the people of Cossipore, Bally, Tollyganj and Sibpur comprise 90 per cent. of the pressmen. I am sorry, I question that. I made a private enquiry, and I find that the pressmen come not only from the northern division of the town but also from the southern division of the town. So, by the removal of the press to Gopalnagar, it would be most convenient to the people coming from the southern part of the town. Then, again, it is stated that it would be most inconvenient to those men who come from the Eastern Bengal Railway stations. I beg to submit that on the contrary, it will be most convenient for them. They at present get down at Sealdah Station, which is at a great distance from Writers' Buildings, but now after the completion of the building they will get down at Kalighat Station on that railway, which is in close proximity to the proposed building. It has been stated that Government is going to treat these pressmen as nothing but dogs. I question that. On the contrary it appears to me that Government is going to be more favourably disposed towards the poor pressmen. It has been alleged by him that the sanitary condition of Gopalnagar is not a good one. On the contrary I would say that it is as good as possible. The sanitary condition of this locality—the locality which is within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Municipality is much better than the other parts of Calcutta, and especially after the removal of the huts which were in existence. On the contrary, I must congratulate the Government in having acquired this land, which consisted of a number of insanitary huts; and the owner of the land did not allow the erection of a substantial building—even a masonry building—on this site. That is one of the reasons why Government has been able to acquire this land at a very moderate rate, which I understand is not more than Rs. 1,000 per cotta, and I doubt whether the Government could have selected any better site from the pecuniary point of view or from any other point of view. It is bounded on three sides by roads. It is in close proximity to a railway station and also to the line of the Calcutta Tramways Company. It may be said that there is no proper house accommodation. I question that. I know that there is a number of houses in Kidderpore, Kalighat, and Behala and I don't think that it will be a source of inconvenience to the pressmen. It has been said that there is no school in this locality. I question that. In close proximity to the site, there is a number of schools—Matriculation schools—not only in this locality but also in the neighbourhood—I mean Kalighat, Bhowanipur, as well as Kidderpore. The land has been acquired and the major portion of the building has already been constructed, and it seems to me that it is too late to re-open this question.

Mr. C. MORCAN: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: I think it will be an infringement of the right of reasonable debate to close the debate before hearing what the Government Member has got to say.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Is there any rule by which you can only allow a Government Member to speak and not the other members?

The PRESIDENT: The matter is entirely one for me to decide.

Colonel A. J. PUCH: May I ask for a ruling as to whether a motion cannot be put before the Member in charge has replied?

The PRESIDENT: I think we must give both sides an opportunity of representing their views to the Council, otherwise one side will be placed at a disadvantage.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I think it will not be necessary for any other member to speak on this motion after hearing me. This morning, at the request of the Member in charge (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr), the Secretary Mr. Marr, Mr. Walsh, Mr. Norton, Superintendent of Government Printing, and myself went together and saw the site of the new Press building. It is admitted that the place is at a distance of nearly four miles from the present press premises in Writers' Buildings. Of these poor people, who have the misfortune of working in the press, some come from a distance of 10 to 12 miles; some from Sulkea, Uttarpura, Bally and Cossipore. A few of them no doubt come from Behala, Tollygunj and the neighbouring places, but the majority of them, as was admitted by Mr. Norton, come from distances of nearly 8 to 10 miles. It was at last settled—at least I suggested to the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr—that something should be done to convey these poor people to the new press building—either give them free tram passes or give them something extra to enable them to go by tram from Writers' Buildings, or from their houses. The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr was pleased to assure me that something would be done for these poor people. Some of these pressmen saw me to-day at the High Court. I told them that this was the assurance, which had been given to me by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr. I put that matter also to my friend, Babu Hem Chandra Bhattacharji, and it was settled that some of the pressmen, Babu Hem Chandra Bhattacharji and myself should form a deputation and wait upon Mr. Kerr on Thursday, and probably we might get a favourable reply from the side of Government. Under these circumstances I think my friend, Babu Hem Chandra Bhattacharji, considering the assurance given by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, would be too glad to withdraw his motion.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I have only one question to ask, if you will allow me. What about the provision for a Book Depôt? Am I to understand that the Book Depôt will be entirely removed to Chetla? If we want a book or a publication have we to run to Chetla? It will be very convenient for my friend, Babu Amulya Dhone Addy, but it will not be so to the majority of the members.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: At a previous meeting, it was said that there will be a branch Book Depôt somewhere in Writers' Buildings. Is that assurance to be carried out?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): I am sorry that I have to oppose the first resolution which has been moved by the representative of labour in this House, and I am still more sorry that my recent want of practice in Bengal has made it rather difficult for me to follow what he said. If he said that Government were treating these people like dogs, I submit to the Council that his language was not worthy of the representative of labour, and I trust that we shall hear no more of that kind of talk in this Council.

The PRESIDENT: He did not say that. He said that, even if we were to treat these men as dogs. I would have stopped the speaker had he said what you think he said.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: Then I withdraw what I said. As to the rest of it, I gather that the two main objections to this building scheme are the difficulties of the press employees and the difficulties which will be experienced by the public. I will deal with the latter point which has been mentioned by Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur very briefly. The public will not be affected in the very slightest degree by the removal of the press to Chetla, as we will continue to stock Government publications in the Book Depôt at Writers Buildings, and members of this Council and others will be able to get books just as easily as hitherto.

As to the difficulties of the press employees, I admit that they cannot be brushed aside as altogether negligible, and I shall have to say something about that later on. But I do suggest that Government, like any other employer of labour, cannot allow itself to be dictated to by its employees in regard to the site of its operations. I do not say that Government or any other employer should not listen to what its employees have got to say, and do its best to meet any inconvenience which may arise, but I do say in this case, as in other cases, the question of the site of the press must be decided from a wider aspect, and I propose to deal with the wider aspect before I consider the point about the grievances of employees.

The unsatisfactory and insanitary nature of the present press arrangements of the Government of Bengal have been notorious for many years. In the old days, when the activities of the Government were less than they are now and the demands made on the press were very much less, the arrangement whereby the press was located in Writers' Buildings was perhaps not altogether unsuitable, but during the last ten years, with the growing expansion of Government activities and particularly the expansion of the work of the Legislative Council, the demand made upon the press have been so great that the accommodation in Writers' Buildings is entirely inadequate.

In 1916, the Surgeon-General, the Sanitary Commissioner and the Inspector of Factories inspected the press at Writers' Buildings. They said that light and ventilation were extremely defective, and were still farther impeded by a mass of printing press materials blocking up the verandahs and excluding the open air. The overcrowding was criminal and, to make matters worse, flaring gas jets were used instead of electric lights, thus still further heating and contaminating the foul atmosphere. The Surgeon-General went on to say : " I am quite certain that many cases of incipient phthisis will be discovered, which at present are spreading the infection." After we got that report, we tried to improve matters as far as we could. We put in electric lights and fans and we also improved the ventilation by means of electric exhaust fans. But the press is still in a thoroughly unsatisfactory condition, and anybody who goes there at this time of the year, and later on in the hot weather, will find that the whole atmosphere is extremely unpleasant. What it must be to work there for 9 or 10 hours a day I hardly like to think.

We have, as has been said, a branch press at Sealdah. The conditions there are, if anything, even worse. We have only got the ground floor of the building which has been temporarily lent to us by the Government of India, and what the Chief Inspector of Factories said was this: " In my opinion these buildings are quite unsuited for the purpose of a press. The rooms are opened on one side only and, in consequence, it would be quite impossible to use the whole of the floor area without the use of artificial lights. The lights could be improved by means of reflectors, but owing to the numerous large brick pillars which support the upper structure, this would only slightly increase the floor area, and there is no natural ventilation." I think that from what I have said it will be quite clear that it is necessary for us to move out of our existing press rooms in Writers' Buildings and in Sealdah not only in the interests of the work alone, but in the interests of the men themselves. We have accordingly been on the look-out for some time past for a new site for the press. We hoped at one time that we should get the Government of India press, but five or six years ago we were told definitely that their press was going to stop in Calcutta for a very long time and that we should not build our hopes on that. We then searched about for sites in Calcutta. We could not select any site near Writers' Buildings, as I need hardly say that they are too expensive for a hard up Government like ours. We then selected this site at Chetla and we acquired it for Rs. 2,94,000. We started building there two years ago. We have spent up to date over Rs. 5,00,000 on the buildings, which are now, as Babu Surendra Nath Ray has said, more than half completed. In addition, we have incurred liabilities for materials, which have been ordered by us or by the contractors, which amount probably to another two lakhs of rupees. That is to say, we have spent already, or we have committed ourselves to spending, Rs. 10,00,000 out of the Rs. 14 lakhs which this building is going to cost, and if, by a vote of this Council or otherwise, we were to suspend operations to-morrow, we should incur indefinite liabilities to the contractors and others, with whom we have made agreements for the completion of the work. So, I think the Council will agree with me that we have gone too far to stop this work, even if it were thought desirable to do so.

However, there remains the question of the inconvenience of the press employees to which the hon'ble member has referred. There are some 900 of these men. A certain number of them live in that part of the town at Behala, Kahghat, Kidderpore and Sibpur, and to them the construction of the press at Chetla will be a convenience, but the majority of the men do live in the northern part of the town, and for them, until they can arrange to take up their quarters near the press, there will be a certain amount of inconvenience in going to and from Chetla for their daily work. But after all let us see what this inconvenience really amounts to. I do not wish to be unsympathetic, but it is not an insurmountable inconvenience in any way. These men come daily now to Writers' Buildings or Sealdah mostly by tram, and, when the press goes to Chetla, they will have to continue their tram journey to that part of the town. It will perhaps cost them three or four annas extra a day in the matter of tram fare. I do not say that this is a negligible sum for men of the compositor class who are drawing Rs. 30 or Rs. 40 a month and perhaps less, but it is not a very large sum in the aggregate. The ultimate solution of the problem will be that the press employees will take up their quarters near the press at Chetla. The press will be there for a great number of years, say 50 years or more, and the men will very soon see that it will be to their own interests to live near their place of work. I have had a certain amount of conflicting evidence on the amount of accommodation, which is available in that part of the town for these men, but there is plenty of land which has not been built over near the press, and it is pretty certain that the landlords in their own interests will put up buildings and let them out to the press employees at a reasonable rent; but in a matter of this kind we cannot expect the supply to anticipate the demand, and for some time after the new press is opened these men will no doubt suffer a certain amount of inconvenience. I want to say plainly what we are prepared to do to meet that inconvenience. Babu Surendra Nath Ray has implied that we have settled our course of action rather more definitely than is the case. This building is not going to be opened before next cold weather, and we have plenty of time to think this over. I have told Babu Surendra Nath Ray and Babu Hem Chandra Bhattacharji that I am quite willing to meet the men of the press and talk things over with them, and see if we can come to some arrangements for mitigating the inconveniences of those who will suffer, either by arranging some special means of transport, or by giving them a conveyance allowance, or in some other way. This, of course, would be purely a temporary arrangement. When the press is removed to Chetla it will be a permanent measure and then, if the men want to save themselves from inconvenience, they will have to go and take up their residence in that part of the town. We will do what we can to improve the accommodation available there. We know that the move will cause, as I have said, a certain amount of inconvenience, but I have no doubt that we will be able to deal with it in a satisfactory way.

To sum up very briefly. If we are allowed to go on with the press building and spend the balance of the money required upon it, we shall, within a few months, have one of the finest press buildings in India, where the men will carry out their work in convenient and sanitary surroundings. If the Council adopt this resolution and decline to allow us to go on with this work, we shall have spent Rs. 12,00,000 or more for absolutely nothing. Then we shall be thrown back on the present unsatisfactory and insanitary surroundings, in which the pressmen do their work, and we shall have to start all over again to find a substitute for the present building. That is the position which this resolution puts before the Council. If we abandon the scheme we shall have spent Rs. 12,00,000 for nothing at all, but, if we go on with the scheme and spend one or two lakhs more, we shall get a fine press building—that is the position before the Council. If the Council consider the matter in the proper aspect, I have no doubt what their decision will be.

Babu HEM CHANDRA BHATTACHARJI then asked for leave to withdraw the motion.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI moved " that the demand under sub-head 'Repairs' under head '41—Civil Works in charge of Public Works Department' be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000 "

With reference to this motion, I did not bring it forward with any idea of dividing the House on this, but I should like to impress upon the Members of the Government that some details ought to be furnished for our information. We should not be asked to vote a grant blindly without any information. This motion, and the motion which follows it, have been brought forward for the same purpose. With these words, I beg to withdraw this motion.

The motion was, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The next motion, in the name of the same member, was also withdrawn. It was as follows: " That the demand under head ' Other items ' under head ' 41—Civil Works in charge of Public Works Department ' be reduced by Rs. 1,00,000."

Mr. D. C. CHOSE received permission to withdraw the following motion: " That the demand under head ' 41B—Civil Works in charge of Public Works Department ' be reduced by Rs. 20,94,000 "

Item No. 117, which had been transferred for consideration at this stage, was withdrawn. It was as follows: " That the demand for Rs. 10,000 for revision of pay of electrical subordinates be reduced to Rs 5,000."

The PRESIDENT: If there is no objection, I would like to have a ballot for resolutions for the meeting of the 1st April at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Although it is a holiday, I believe nobody will be inconvenienced thereby, as my information is that as a rule nobody attends these ballots. I would like to take the sense of the House about having a ballot to-morrow.

It was then agreed that a ballot should be taken on the next day, as suggested by the President.

Adjournment.

The Council adjourned till Thursday, the 24th instant, at 3 o'clock

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council met in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Thursday, the 24th March, 1921, at 3 p.m.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Executive Members, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 88 nominated and elected members.

Oath of Allegiance.

Lieutenant-Colonel F. O'Kinealy made his oath of allegiance to the Crown.

Voting of Grants.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of IRRIGATION (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan) moved "that a demand of Rs. 2,000 be voted by this Council as a grant under the head '42—Waterways and Embankments—In charge of Civil Officers' for the year 1921-22."

This sum is required on account of small establishment charges to look after the embankments and drainage works during the rainy season in the different districts under the District Magistrates.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN moved "that a demand of Rs. 31,50,000 be voted by this Council as a grant under the head '42—Waterways and Embankments—In charge of Public Works Officers' for the year 1921-22."

These are works which are all ordinary maintenance works and some of the important ones within these figures are in connection with the reconstruction of the Kidderpore Bridge and in connection with a lot of works, such as the protection of areas from the Damodar floods, the improvement of Hoorhora Khal, and excavation of Ghesaputi new out-fall channel and the Sagorputul Baxi Bazar embankment.

The motion was put and agreed to.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr) moved "that a demand of Rs. 41,45,000 be voted by this Council as a grant under the head '45—Superannuation Allowances and Pensions' for the year 1921-22."

These figures are compiled by the Accountant-General from the register of pensioners with the usual allowances for estimated casualties during the year. We can safely accept these figures and I therefore commend this motion to the Council.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR moved "that a demand of Rs. 21,24,000 voted by this Council as a grant under the head '46 Stationery and printing' for the year 1921-22."

The estimates show an excess of Rs. 1,20,000 more than last year—due mainly to the expenditure of three-quarters of a lakh account of increased charges for stationery supplied by the central stores. I do not think that there is any other item which requires explanation. I commend this motion to the House.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR moved "that a demand of Rs. 11,56,000 voted by this Council as a grant under the head '47- Miscellaneous' for the year 1921-22."

This head comprises a large number of miscellaneous items as set forth on page 146 of the revised Civil Estimates. The only item which has been called in question is that in connection with the grant to the Victoria Memorial buildings, regarding which there are two motions on the paper. The only other item which requires any explanation from me is the large amount shown under the non-voted head for revision of copy of the ministerial establishment, etc. We have thought it best not to put this item before the Council at present because the committee which is dealing with the matter is still sitting. It has not yet been able to issue its report. When we receive its report, we shall work out our proposals and place them before the Council, asking for a supplementary grant.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: After hearing the circumstances which led to this grant of Rs. 2,50,000, I do not think I shall move my motion, so, I beg leave to withdraw it.

It was as follows: "That the demand under head '47- Miscellaneous' be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000 by reducing the grant towards the Victoria Memorial buildings from Rs. 2,50,000 to Rs. 50,000."

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I ought to state at the outset that I yield to nobody in my respect for the revered memory of that universally respected Queen—Victoria. When sending this motion I was not aware of the fact that there was a deficit of about Rs. 17,00,000 and that the Trustees of the Victoria Memorial Fund had appealed to His Excellency the Viceroy. I now understand that the Government of India have provided Rs. 5,00,000 for this building and that the Indian Princes and Chiefs have been appealed to to contribute to this memorial building. I have also been informed by Sir Henry Wheeler that the Government of India is willing to bear a good portion of the recurring charges. That will no doubt relieve the Bengal Government of a good portion of its annual expenditure, for I think this memorial building will cost not less than Rs. 50,000 per annum. Under these circumstances I think it proper that I should withdraw my motion.

It was as follows: "That the demand under head '47—Miscellaneous' be reduced by Rs. 2,00,000 by reducing the grant towards the Victoria Memorial buildings from Rs. 2,50,000 to Rs. 50,000."

The following motion was then put and agreed to: "That the sum of Rs. 14,56,000 be granted under the head '47—Miscellaneous.'"

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC WORKS (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur) moved "that a demand of Rs. 9,000 be voted by this Council as the grant under the head '52—Miscellaneous Adjustments' for the year 1921-22."

This is a small sum which this Government pays to the Central Government for the premises 9, Hare Street, Calcutta. The premises have been leased for many years to the Englishman newspaper and this Government receives the monthly rent which may be said to balance the sum paid to the Central Government.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN moved "that a demand of Rs. 69,02,000 be voted by this Council as a grant under the head '57—Outlay on Waterways (in charge of Public Works Officers not charged to Revenue)' for the year 1921-22."

It will be noticed by this Council that there are several motions proposing to refuse this grant, and I think, therefore, that some words from me might shorten not only the discussion in this Council on the voting of this grant but also might, I hope, to a great extent influence the members of this Council as to what should be their attitude towards the motions. I understand that, in view of what I said in my general observations with regard to the Grand Trunk Canal project, certain members of this Council have come to the conclusion that all is not right with that project, and, what is further, they have not been satisfied with the statement, which I made on that day with regard to the estimates, and with regard to the figures, which I gave to this House, as to the amounts that are likely to come in when the work can be labelled as a productive work. When I mentioned that the estimates are likely to go up, I did so with a purpose. I mentioned this fact, because it is the duty of every Member of Council to take the members of this House into his confidence with regard to the actual position about a scheme, which is certainly not going to be a cheap one, and which is likely to cost the province a very large amount of money. I also thought that in view of the fact that under the present arrangements we are not likely to apply provincial funds for works of this nature but that we have to meet these works from loans, I should hint at that in my opening remarks. I shall not go to-day into the question as to what the revised estimates for this work are likely to come up to, for the simple reason that we have not ourselves as yet been able to work out these figures into the minutest details and I do not like to give the members of this Council a figure, which we ourselves may have to revise again. But I shall give as briefly as possible what the present position is.

The estimates sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India at present for the Grand Trunk Canal project come up to Rs. 309 lakhs, of which nearly Rs. 80 lakhs was estimated for the cost of three dredgers, calculating or basing our figures at Rs. 10 to the pound. Owing to the exchange of to-day, the estimate on dredgers alone will be Rs. 106 lakhs, even at the calculation of 1s. 6d. to the rupee, or if we were to calculate at 1s. 4d. or less, it would naturally become greater.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: How many dredgers?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: Three dredgers. Then again, as every member of this Council is aware, land values are still on the increase. Therefore, in revising our estimates, we shall have to consider revised valuations for lands, which we are likely to acquire, and alterations in railway alignments necessitated by the new alignment of the Grand Trunk Canal project as now proposed by Government. Then the costs of locks and bridges are also likely to increase, and, as I have already said, owing to the present rate of exchange, the cost of the dredgers alone has advanced by Rs. 27 lakhs. Now as I have mentioned and I may mention at the outset, this Rs. 69,02,000, which we have put in the Budget, is not going to be taken from revenue, but it is proposed to be taken from loans—Rs. 50 lakhs from the loan that is proposed to be taken from the Government of India, and Rs. 20 lakhs from the loan that the provincial Government propose to raise hereafter. Now in view of the fact that such schemes will in future have to be financed from loans, we have to consider in our department at what rate of interest we can get those loans, and, when we get those loans, we shall then have to revise our outlays and find out from what year actually the figure will be put in the Budget as productive. To do this, however, will take time, but there is no cause for alarm, or pessimism or to think that the work will not be productive. Government themselves, as I have said, propose to revise the estimates and reconsider the financial position when

Mr. Addams-Williams, who is well conversant with this work, returns, and to make him go into these estimates and the proposed bills of cost thoroughly. When he has done this I propose to lay the whole case before the Standing Committee, which will be attached to the Irrigation Department, for advice and consideration. Meanwhile it may be asked why the Council should be requested to vote Rs. 69,02,000. Well, my answer to that is that the Council's voting of this Rs. 69,02,000 does not necessarily mean that the Council, or for that matter the Government, are committing themselves largely to the project this year, for the simple reason that in the current year which will end on the 31st March, we are likely to spend something like Rs. 21 lakhs on this project, of which Rs. 13 and odd lakhs have been advance payment for the dredgers and Rs. 7 and odd lakhs for the payment for land, which we have already acquired, and which is now being brought under our control. Of the Rs. 69,02,000, which we have provided in the next year's Budget, and for which I am asking the Council's assent, Rs. 66 lakhs are for the dredgers, which are under contract, and from which we cannot get out, as we have to pay this year that amount. The rest is for compensation for lands already acquired and Rs. 69,000 is for the manufacture of bricks for which contract has been given. As a matter of fact it is more than likely that the Rs. 3 lakhs and odd, that I am calculating now for compensating those whose lands we have acquired, are an under-estimate, although for the present Government do not propose, until they have examined the question fully, to go into further land acquisition till the whole position is reviewed. The Council will, therefore, see that no one with any sense of responsibility in him either in this Council or outside could refuse the grant we have budgeted for, because, as I have said, it is a liability which the Government of Bengal have to meet. It is a liability for dredgers for which we have entered into contract, and for which we have got to find the money, for lands which we have practically acquired, and for which we have got to compensate people, who are leaving these lands. We have given out contracts for bricks to be manufactured to the tune of Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000.

Naturally if this Council were to cut down this amount, Government would have to come to this Council again, and ask it to vote that amount, of which the contractors are certainly not going to make a present to this Council—that is the position in brief. As I have said, if in view of my explanation the members who have put down motions for refusing this grant were to withdraw them, then I would on behalf of the Government be prepared not to spend any further money on land acquisition or for bricks and mortar excepting what we must pay for dredgers and lands already acquired or bricks already ordered to be manufactured, and this I say because we have got ourselves to review the altered financial position. But in mentioning this, it must not be taken as an admission on the part of Government that the scheme is no longer likely to be productive, or that the Government have no intention of proceeding with it any further. We can make no such promise for the following reasons:—

In the first place, Government have not come to the conclusion that the work is not likely to be productive, but Government have got to reconsider their whole financial position owing to the financial state of things to-day. Owing to the fact that in future we have got to finance these schemes from loans and not from provincial funds, what we have to consider, and consider carefully, is this: at what rate of interest we are likely to get these loans, as that will have an indirect effect on the rate of production. For all these reasons, I have already mentioned, I am quite prepared, if this Council would agree to vote this grant for me for the payment of the dredgers, for the payment of the lands which we have acquired, for the payment of the contractors to whom we have given contracts, not to proceed—as a matter of fact the members will see for themselves, Sir, that as far as the project itself is concerned we cannot really proceed—any further until we have ourselves considered the revised programme. But what I think it essential for this Council to remember is that not only have Government been convinced of the utility of this scheme, and of the great potentialities that it possesses for the commercial development of Calcutta with the Eastern Districts, but also the Chamber of Commerce and other strong commercial bodies have supported the scheme throughout. In consequence, Government cannot light-heartedly lay this scheme aside. But, as I said, after all a Member in charge of a department does not play with his own money—it is the public money—and as a Member of the Government it is my duty to lay my cards before the members of this House to consider. I have told them exactly what the position is. I appeal to the good sense of this Council to vote the grant which I have asked for.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA moved “that the demand for Rs. 69,02,000 for expenditure on the Grand Trunk Canal Scheme be refused.”

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: I rise to a point of order. The amendment is quite the negative of the original proposal. Under these circumstances, can it be moved as an amendment?

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Under the rules it is open to a member to move a motion that the demand be refused.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: At the outset I have to thank the Government and much more the Hon'ble Maharaja for the open way in which the facts have been stated by him to-day.

Regarding the points which I intended to raise, they are practically admitted by the Hon'ble Member in charge, and as a matter of fact, on these admissions I rise to press my amendment to the acceptance of this Council. Well, the modified form in which the grant of this demand has been asked for by the Hon'ble Member is one, which either to-day or to-morrow, after the commitment of Government, we shall have to meet. I for myself am painfully aware of the after-effects of this sort of commitment. You, Sir, know very well, that on one occasion, against the unanimous protest of the public of Chittagong a certain water-works scheme was thrust down the unwilling throats of the people. We have been paying at the rate of 6 per cent. for our water-rate on a scheme, which has proved to be a failure, and the laymen's opinions have come to be true and now our water has been limited to only half an hour or one hour's duration! Well, that is the value I usually put on this sort of expert opinion. I thank the Hon'ble Maharaja that he has really kept an open mind, and that he really undertakes to put the revised estimates and project before this Council for discussion and will come up later on to this Council with a supplementary budget. I being a new member do not know what contracts have been entered into. It appears that the project has come through various stages through the proposed Behala alignment to the Maniktala alignment. It was first mooted in 1902 and formulated as a materialised project some time in 1916; after that it appears that the opinion of the public was never invited, and the public had no opportunity to discuss formally the pros and cons of this project, and I do not know how the sanction of the Secretary of State was obtained to this project, and also how the dredgers were contracted for, and land acquisition went on rather merrily.

One thing I have to complain of, and I do so on behalf of all the members of this Council, who have come here and have taken their oaths of allegiance to do their work loyally and dutifully, that we should be deprived of the information which we generally seek with a view to formulate opinions on a particular subject. With regard to this subject, I may tell you that question No. 60 of the 14th of August was intended to get some official information upon this project and the only answer received was that Government regrets that papers could not be laid on the table. We are now asked to vote a big amount of money for this Grand Trunk Canal project. I took the trouble of going and seeing if I could get any information. The officers were very courteous, I must candidly admit, but I could not get the final report, because it was considered confidential to one who had sent in a motion for the rejection of the demand, and who was prepared to be convinced if he found that there were reasons to the contrary! That being so, I bring this fact to your notice, Sir, and to the notice of the Council through you, not for the purpose of this particular item, but in order to regulate the conduct of the Government as well as to regulate the conduct of the councillors in future matters, whether we are to get all the information we want in order to frame our judgment, and whether the reports of the engineer in charge regarding the Canal project will have to be also considered confidential, and we are to be deprived of the benefit and advantages of discussion.

That being so, I will not go into any question whether the project will be productive or not I would only draw the attention of the Council to the fact that even the Government admit that they are not quite sure of the financial soundness of starting this grand and gigantic project, and in the hope that we shall get an undertaking that we shall have an opportunity of discussing this matter later on, I shall reserve all my remarks for that occasion.

Now, Sir, I press this motion on the ground that if we really allow this motion as it is, perhaps at some time or other we may be considered to be technically committed to this project, in spite of the undertaking which we have got to-day. Therefore with a view to removing any misapprehension, that might turn up later on, I pray that the Council should accept this motion, and, if at the same time we may be given some sort of undertaking that if any supplementary budget is brought forward we shall have full information, we shall have no objection to it.

With these words, I press my motion.

The PRESIDENT: Items Nos. 241 to 244 are identical, and therefore will not be moved separately. I will call upon the members one after another to speak on their motions.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: First of all, I must join with my friend, Babu Annada Charan Dutta, in thanking the Maharajadhiraja for giving us some information on the subject. I purposely say, "some information," because there is, I think, additional information, which we should like to have, and I hope that in reply to this motion, he will be pleased to give us some more information on some of the points which I wish to place before this Council.

Now, the first thing, as Babu Annada Charan Dutta has pointed out, is that the latest papers in connection with this Grand Trunk Canal project have not been vouchsafed to us. I, however, tried to get some earlier papers and I accidentally came across a copy of Mr. Addams Williams' report published in 1916. From a perusal of this report, I find that, though this scheme has been hanging fire since 1902, in 1913 when Mr. Lees drew up a scheme for Rs. 273 lakhs, the reply of the Government of Bengal was, that the amount was too high and the scheme would not be productive on that basis of calculation. In 1916, another scheme was prepared by Mr. Addams Williams, when the estimate went down by Rs. 40 lakhs, that is, it came down to Rs. 233 lakhs, when by the same sort of magic, this scheme was found to be productive. In that scheme, Mr. Addams Williams calculated the rate of interest at 4 per cent. on that amount—calculating that rate of interest in 1916 when the war had been going on for two years! Now I ask this Council, whether it was fair to base our calculations on a rate of interest which was grossly out of proportion to the actual state of things. The rate of interest nowadays is more than 6 per cent. Surely, a scheme, which is going to cost us more than 4 crores of rupees in loans alone, ought to be fully considered, before we can think of suggesting a grant of money like this.

The Hon'ble Revenue Member has given us many assurances, but may I ask him to give us this assurance, that this scheme will be discussed on its merits by the Council, before it is taken up again? He has only said that the revised estimates will be placed before the Standing Committee. This scheme should be discussed in all its bearings, with the opinion of the Standing Committee, as well the opinion of the experts, before this Council, before we can, in any way, commit ourselves to it.

Then, Sir, I should like to get another piece of information. I find from Mr. Addams Williams' reports that he was strongly in favour of getting dredgers from Burma; he mentions the names of two dredgers and he said that he was against getting them from England. In view of that opinion, I would like to know why Government has placed orders in England at the expensive figure that has been placed before us.

Then, we have been told that this scheme is going to produce all sorts of benefits to this country. The first is, that it will bring Eastern Bengal nearer to Calcutta and then, somehow or other, it will help the development of industries all over the province. I do not know how it will do all this. We have also been told that it will be a very great sanitary improvement to this province. I think this ought to be considered by Dr. Bentley's department thoroughly well.

Then, we have been told that this is a very paying concern. In that case, I think the scheme ought to be placed before a business body, which in these days of joint-stock companies, will be glad to take it up as a highly paying concern. It seems to me that this Grand Trunk Canal project, which has been hanging fire for the last 20 years, is going to be a sort of conjurer's hat, out of which we are to get all sorts of benefits to the country. This sort of thing invites suspicion, so I should like to suggest that this Council should consider the scheme in all its aspects before granting this vote.

Then again, we are told that there is a proposal to borrow Rs. 20 lakhs for this scheme. Now, in the present financial condition of the province, I think it will be suicidal to try and raise a loan at this time of the year. I beg to suggest that, even if this resolution is not carried the Hon'ble Member will give us an assurance that this Rs. 20 lakhs will not be raised by loan, but will be met from some of the funds that this Council has been able to refuse during the last few days. So far as I have been able to calculate, I think nearly Rs. 50 lakhs has been refused, and I think that out of his amount the sum of Rs. 20 lakhs can easily be provided.

With these words, I beg to support this motion.

Raja MANMATHA NATH RAY CHOUDHURY: I must confess that I gave notice of this motion not without some amount of hesitation. My hesitancy was due to my sense of responsibility as a member of this House with regard to this item of the Budget, because we are apt to forget that we are not an administrative body, and we might not realise the difficulties of administration, and apply the pruning knife rather liberally. Besides that, as my friend Babu Annada Charan Dutta has said, we are not in possession of material which was essential before forming a sound opinion on the subject. As the Hon'ble Member in charge has assured this House that by granting this vote we are not going to commit ourselves in any way, and that when the Irrigation Committee is formed, he will give the members of that committee fuller opportunity to go into the details of the subject and come to a right understanding, I think this motion ought not to be pressed. Another point is that the Hon'ble Member in charge would have carried the House with him, if he had stated the terms of the contract into which the Government have entered. There is some doubt in my mind as to whether these terms are so binding upon the Government as to require immediate payment of the price of the dredgers and bricks, or that the payment could not be kept in abeyance for the time being. Not being in possession of the actual terms of the contract, I am not in a position to say whether the payment should be kept in abeyance or not, but in case the terms are so rigorous as to demand immediate payment, I think there is no other alternative than to withdraw the motion. But at all events, I do not know whether the Hon'ble Member in charge would enlighten us on this point, when he is replying to the questions now being put to him. I have no other alternative but to withdraw the motion, but at the same time I would like to make it known to the Member in charge, that we are not actually committing ourselves to the scheme, that we shall be at liberty to discuss it when an opportunity presents itself, and, if after examining details and going through papers, we find that the scheme is not productive, we will be at liberty to withdraw from it.

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: I would like to support my friends, Babu Annada Charan Dutta and Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, but, if what has been said by the Hon'ble Member in charge amounts to this, that the whole question will remain open; that by voting this Rs. 70 lakhs we shall not be committing ourselves hopelessly to the Grand Trunk Canal project, and that the Council will have an opportunity in future to re-examine and discuss the whole scheme and that it will be undertaken only if it is likely to be productive and beneficent project, then I would not like to press this motion. But, if I have misunderstood the Hon'ble Member and he is not prepared to give us such an assurance, then I would like to support my friends, Babu Annada Charan Dutta and Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: After the assurance given by the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan, I think it is not proper for us to press this motion. I am one of those who know something about this scheme from its very infancy, i.e., since the year 1902, when this scheme was formulated by the Government of Bengal. At that time Sir Charles Stevenson-Moore was District Magistrate of the 24 Parganas and he asked for the opinion of the local bodies south of the Calcutta Municipality, and wanted to know if this scheme would be profitable and also advantageous to the people of the locality and the trading classes in particular.

Well, after several vicissitudes of fortune this scheme, I think, came into the hands, or rather was placed in the hands, of the steamer companies, and Captain Poynton was appointed to advise on the scheme. He was the General Manager of the India General Steam Navigation Company, and he and I went through the whole site from Garden Reach up to Kowrapukur and a scheme was formed to take the canal south of Behala from Garden Reach. Then, about the year 1913, Mr. Lees was brought from Burma and especially deputed to give his opinion on this scheme. He also approved of the Behala scheme, that is, to take the canal from Garden Reach up to Kowrapukur and then, I think, to Bidyabari. But this scheme of Mr. Lees did not meet with approval of Mr. Addams Williams, who was especially deputed to consider the whole matter. Now we have a scheme to take it through the northern portion of Calcutta, namely, through Baranagore and Maniktala, thus depopulating a very large portion of thickly populated localities on the north of Calcutta. I think, if the scheme had been accepted, as suggested by Mr. Lees, the expense would have been much less, because it would have passed through lands which are not so very valuable. If it has to be taken through Baranagore, Cossipore-Chitpur and Maniktala, it will cost a great deal more than the other scheme. The whole scheme will have to be threshed out anew. If the Hon'ble Maharaja will give us the assurance that he simply wants the money for the dredgers, and that the whole scheme will be considered by him and by the Irrigation Standing Committee,—well, my friend Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta has asked that it should receive the sanction not only of the Irrigation Committee but that the whole matter should be placed before this House: I think this is a very good suggestion, and I think the Maharaja would have no objection to place the whole matter before the House for consideration,—we shall be only too glad to give him our opinion and to pass the grant, if it is considered necessary.

With regard to the cost of the scheme; well, it is said that the whole scheme would cost about 3 crores of rupees. The Maharaja has said in his Budget discussion that after 10 years it would yield an income of Rs. 22 lakhs. i.e., in 10 years after the scheme is completed, it will yield 22 lakhs of rupees, 7·4 per cent. He has not taken into account the interest he would have to pay in the meantime, and which, if calculated, would, I think, give a profit of about 2 or 3 per cent. Are you going to launch into a scheme like this without going into the pros and cons of the whole question?

So, in these circumstances, I think the Hon'ble Member in charge, the Maharaja, will be pleased to give us the assurance that the matter will be placed before the whole House after its discussion with the Standing Committee.

With these words, I support the motion.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: The Maharaja-dhiraja of Burdwan has explained to the House that a sum of Rs. 69,02,000 would be required to be spent on the Grand Trunk Canal Scheme, and he has accordingly asked for our vote on that account. But the trend of the debate in the Council so far is against granting this demand, as the project is extravagant and unnecessary, at any rate for the present. If we refuse to pay, who will pay? It is a question which the Council will have to consider very carefully. Who will pay compensation money for the land which has been acquired? Again, there are the dredgers; you are bound to find money for them. We have to repudiate the purchase, unless money is provided for it. You know to what a bad plight Government will be put. Over and above this, we have the clear and unambiguous statement of the Maharaja-dhiraja, in which he assures us that the scheme will be further considered by the Standing Committee.

The suggestion has been made by my friend, Babu Annada Charan Dutta, that the whole scheme, after being considered by the Committee on Irrigation, will be discussed in all its bearings in this Council Chamber. I am of opinion that it is a very correct view of the matter. The Government ought to put the whole scheme before the House and take its considered opinion, especially with reference to its productivity, as a commercial venture. If the Government refuse to put the matter before the Council, every member of the House has a right to vote against it, and invite a discussion; and, therefore, I think, it is better not to hasten on with the project, but to wait for the expert opinion of the Standing Committee, before which the Hon'ble Member in charge of Revenue has assured us, that it will be placed.

With these words I oppose the motion.

Colonel A. J. PUCH: The general trend of opinion is, I think, in favour of this motion. As a matter of fact, speaking on the general aspect of the scheme, I came to the Council with an open mind, because I expected to hear the question, whether the scheme is to go on or not, discussed. In my professional capacity, I have submitted a memorial to the Government of Bengal and the Government of India on behalf of over 1,400 inhabitants of Baranagore, protesting against this alignment. The memorial was not very sympathetically received and it has been turned down, as it is called, but, in spite of that, I was prepared to come to the Council with an open mind and vote in favour of the grant for the Grand Trunk Canal project, provided the mover, asking for the grant, was able to satisfy me on two points.

Now, we know that Government sometimes makes certain statements that are not perfectly clear, and are apt to be misconstrued. As I understand the Maharaja is going to put up this scheme before the Committee on Irrigation, and, after taking the advice of the Committee on Irrigation, Government will then apparently make up its mind as to what it should do. He has not definitely stated that this scheme is coming back to this Council for reconsideration. If the Maharaja will say in his reply that the whole scheme will come back to the Council for reconsideration, I personally will vote in favour of the grant he asks for.

If, on the other hand, he is not prepared to give that assurance, then I want to be assured on two points.

Those two points are; first, as regards the necessity of the scheme and second, as regards the benefit to public health. As regards the necessity of the scheme, I daresay you may have read the Englishman or the Statesman—possibly you do not read the Statesman nowadays—and you may have seen a letter from Mr. Cowley. If what Mr. Cowley says is true, it is a very serious proposition which is before the Council. What Mr. Cowley says is that several of the rivers in Bengal are now dying rivers, and that these rivers are dying in consequence of the acts of the raiyats and zamindars and local engineers. What he says has not been very complimentary to the Government of the country in the past 40 or 50 years. He also refers to the case of the rivers which have silted up, and he says that as the dying rivers run east to west they deprive the streams of the necessary scouring of the Saptamukhi and its tributaries, which themselves are also dying. It is only a matter of time when the effects of drainage will be unavailing and the water-borne traffic of Calcutta will be interrupted. Now, it seems to me Mr. Cowley has said that this is a matter of the most urgent importance, and I am somewhat surprised at the Government treating it in a light-hearted manner. Apparently, they themselves are extremely doubtful about the necessity of the scheme. What I would ask is: if we are not going to have another opportunity of discussing this matter, that Government will tell us whether there is any possibility of resuscitating these dying rivers? In other words, are they practically dead? If they are practically dead, nothing could be done for them. In that case, of course, we have got to go on with the Grand Trunk Canal scheme as quickly and as expeditiously as possible, always provided that in so doing we shall not injure the public health of the province. Most of us know what these railway embankments have done and how they have injured the natural drainage of the country by putting up bunds and embankments all over the place: that is the real reason why there is so much malaria; and what I want myself to be satisfied about is whether this Grand Trunk Canal with its embankments and sluices will not interfere with the natural drainage of the country and make public health worse than it is at present. If—as I understand the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur to say—the engineers of the Public Works Department are going to consult the Irrigation Department and the Officer in charge of the Sanitary Department of the Government, the Sanitary Commissioner, and, if they all approve of the scheme and vote in favour of it, then I think that the scheme ought to be proceeded with with as little delay as possible.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: Speaker, after speaker, and, last of all, Colonel Pugh, has asked the Hon'ble Member in charge of Irrigation to answer the simple question whether the entire project should be placed before the Council for sanction; but no reply has been given. I have therefore no option left to me but to support the amendment. I do so after much thought and after consulting many persons whose opinions I respect. Sir, this Council has done hitherto nothing in a hurry. It must have been observed that 156 amendments to the Budget have been negatived or withdrawn; these amendments, if carried, would have made the administration impossible. My humble self and the majority of the members have co-operated with the Government to the best of their power. We have only made a reduction of about Rs. 30,00,000 in the police grant—

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Is the member in order in harping on the police grant?

The PRESIDENT: I do not think that he is out of order.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: But I may give this assurance that, if the Government after consulting the committee which we shall elect—a committee in which I shall try my best that the very best men of our body should be elected—recommended further expenditure indispensable, we shall certainly give effect to the recommendations if a supplementary grant is asked for. We are in no unreasonable mood of mind. We have struck off the grant for the Chief Justice's house: we have done it with very great regret; and I may say that in all other matters we supported the Government. In this matter I am afraid we cannot support the Government. It is a question of Rs. 69,00,000, and the passing of this project will cripple the finances of Bengal for at least 20 years. Sanitation, education, medical relief, will be at a standstill. The estimate is for Rs. 3,50,00,000; it may go up to Rs. 10,00,00,000. We have been given broad hints that it will be necessary to tax the poor people of Bengal; they are not able to bear it and I say it will lead to disaster. I oppose this scheme with keen regret. Few members here know the part I took in the scheme, when it was first conceived. Mr. Lees, the eminent engineer, was brought to elaborate the scheme. The scheme then passed through the southern suburbs. It was a scheme so grand that it excited the admiration of everybody—it excited my admiration at least. After Mr. Lees left, the battle of the engineers began. The subordinate of Mr. Lees, who should have loyally carried out the scheme, tore it to pieces, and for 16 years this matter has not been carried out; the fault lies not with us but with other people; and these 16 years were momentous years. It has changed the fate of the world; great European countries have become bankrupt and India is in a very bad way. Prices have risen three-fold. The prices of land have risen eight-fold. Then there is the exchange. It is a very grave risk now to do anything by which it may be said that we sanctioned the project. I am not prepared to take the risk. Notwithstanding all this if I were satisfied that the scheme was very costly I might have supported it because of the grandeur of the scheme; but there were many defects in it. The first defect is that it may impede the drainage of half of Bengal. A canal with locks at two ends means a great impediment to the natural drainage of the land. It is worse than railway embankments with their innumerable culverts and openings. A canal with two locks at two sides cannot allow water to flow into it. Thus half of Bengal would be water-logged. We know how healthy Punjab and Shahabad were, and now they have become very malarious; but they have got this advantage there, that the lands, which yielded nothing before now produce bumper crops. But here in Bengal what advantage can we get with our natural drainage thus impeded? It will not add to the fertility of the soil. This is my first ground.

My second ground is this; the cost now estimated is Rs. 3,50,00,000. Whatever anybody might say, we know how the estimates in actual working are always exceeded. In this case we all expect that it will not be less than Rs. 10,00,00,000, or at least in any case not less than Rs. 6,00,00,000 or Rs. 7,00,00,000. Are we able to pay this amount? We are not. No prudent householder would incur this risk; and why should the Government take this risk? It is undoubtedly a risk in any case.

We are told about the dredgers. If I remember aright even in this single matter of dredgers, Mr. Lees' estimate, was Rs. 15,00,000. now it is Rs. 1,20,00,000—eight times the original estimate; the dredgers have not been purchased; they have been agreed upon to be purchased. We want to know how the agreement stands. Government ought to come forward to us in a straightforward manner, as is done in every business house. They ought to come forward and show us the agreement and say: "Here is the agreement, here are the terms; you pass the amount." But they have not come to us in this fashion. They say: "We do not know what the scheme may ultimately cost, but pass this item as a part of the scheme." I suppose no business-house or any zamindar would approve of this course. Let us have a straightforward businesslike way of doing things. Bring the Rs. 6,00,000 or 7,00,000 and show it as a separate item, not as part of the scheme, and say: "We want this money," and we shall never be so unreasonable as not to pass it. But why should we at all pass it without looking into the agreement; that is not businesslike.

Now, I have another objection. We are required to raise a loan. I for my part shall always vote against any loan or new tax that may be proposed here. As long as I am here I should like to cut our coat according to our means. No loans here; why should Government go into loans? If we strike out Rs. 69,00,000 we shall decrease our deficit by about half, and thereby Bengal, instead of being bankrupt, will be solvent, and we shall be able to pay for our doctors, for our gurus, and for our village roads and tanks and other needs which are urgent, and for which I shall put motions as soon as I can. Now, Sir, I shall never support a loan nor a tax, come what may; and however much my actions may be misconstrued, I shall never do it.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: I rise to say a few words in support of the Grand Trunk Canal scheme, and to oppose the amendment of my friend, Babu Annada Charan Dutta. I am surprised to hear Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur oppose this scheme mainly on the ground that it will cost so large a sum as nearly Rs. 70,00,000, and, if I have understood him rightly, his point is that if this item is cut out Bengal, instead of being insolvent, will be solvent and that will enable him to pay his doctors, gurus and purohits and others. That may be an impressive argument to him, but it does not appeal to me at all. If the Grand Trunk Canal scheme is bad, it does not matter whether it costs 1 lakh or 1 thousand, we must cut it out. If it is a good scheme —

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I rise to a point of order. After what the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur has said, I think that the scheme will have to be revised and the financial position reconsidered. In any case, the scheme is not before us.

The PRESIDENT: I think the Rai Bahadur is in order.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: What I say is that this scheme should be judged on its merits and not merely from the financial aspect of it. Apart from the financial aspect of the question, I fail to realise why there should be any opposition from the members hailing from Eastern Bengal. I take it that the proposed canal will connect Eastern Bengal more directly and more closely with Western Bengal; and, as such, I expected that my friends from Eastern Bengal would co-operate with us coming from Western Bengal in having such a scheme easily carried out. It has been said by my friend, Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta, that he failed to understand how it would help industries, and how it would help sanitation. I am sorry for him, and I must say that, if he has read the report, he must have seen that around this canal all the different industries would cluster. I have read this scheme and I find that it contains a proposal that on both sides of the canal different industries in which Eastern Bengal is particularly interested, will be brought together. And as for sanitation, I believe that my friend has not realised that the opening out of the canal will reclaim a very large area of land close to our city and will materially change the aspect of that portion. The Maniktala Municipal area will improve to such extent that the difference between Maniktala and Calcutta will disappear, and the result will be that Calcutta will have an extension to the north-eastern corner. For the last 10 or 12 years, we, the members of the Calcutta Corporation, and the people of Calcutta, have been anxiously expecting some ripe scheme for the extension of the city. This is a scheme which will meet their views. Calcutta must expand; otherwise, the overcrowding that is going on will kill the city in the long run. This scheme of the Grand Trunk Canal near about Maniktala will connect that portion with the city proper, and will open up a very large area, where the trade from Burra Bazar and other places will be diverted, and this will materially help in the sanitation of the city. The Maharajahdhiraja Bahadur has already pointed out, Government have already taken action for land acquisition. I think that very few of us have lands in that locality. I have none; so I have no axe to grind. May I enquire, who have lands there and how long those who have already received notice of acquisition, are to wait? They have been anxiously waiting for the disposal of the land acquisition cases. Is it fair that we should hold them up indefinitely.

Much has been said as to whether the scheme would be paying or not. If we have to borrow at the rate of 6½ per cent. now, certainly the expenses of the scheme will be increased. But the increased expenditure will justify an increased charge, and the increased charge will bring in a larger amount of revenue.

The Hon'ble the Maharajahdhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan has already pointed out that the Government of Bengal have already incurred liabilities for dredgers, for land and for bricks. Are we to understand that by withholding our sanction to this expenditure, we shall put the Government to difficulty purposely? Perhaps, eventually, we shall have to sanction a larger amount. This is what has struck me; and I think it would be only proper that, forgetting that the people of Calcutta are directly concerned and that they are likely to be much benefited by the scheme and all such personal considerations members will look at the public aspect of the whole thing, and that, if they think that the Grand Trunk Canal is likely to be quite beneficial to the country—they will vote against this amendment.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: Before I support or rather express my opinion on this subject, may I ask whether there is any likelihood of postponing the consideration of this item till the next session? If it is not to be postponed, then I would support the amendment moved by Babu Annada Charan Dutta. When the original scheme was placed before the Corporation of Calcutta as well as the Bengal National Chamber of Commerce, so far as I remember, all these public bodies opposed it. They expressed their opinion—if I am not mistaken—that this scheme would not be a productive one. At that time, the estimated cost was about one crore of rupees. We now find that the estimated cost is Rs. 3,09,00,000; and I am of opinion that the actual cost would be more than that. It has already been admitted by the Hon'ble Member in charge that the market-value of lands has materially gone up and the market-value of dredgers as well as other articles has also gone up, especially because of the unusual fall of the rate of exchange.

As regards the income, it is stated that the income would be more than Rs. 22,00,000. I beg to submit that having regard to the fact of the competition with country boats and especially with the railways connecting Calcutta with Eastern Bengal, the actual income will be materially less than the estimated income. Assuming that the estimate of the scheme be a correct one and that the estimate of the income be a correct one, I beg to submit that even if the work be financed by a loan, it will not be a productive one. When this scheme was recommended by the Government of Bengal, it was not approved by the Government of India, though the rate of interest on Government Promissory Notes was then only 4 per cent. Now, it has gone up to 6 per cent. exclusive of income-tax or practically $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Some consideration should be made for the contribution towards the sinking fund, which may be taken at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The total income, after meeting the interest charges as well as the contribution to the sinking fund, would be 8 per cent. per annum. But assuming that the estimated cost is correct we have been told that the income-tax would be 7.4 per cent. even on this assumption, Government will have to suffer a loss.

As regards the estimate of cost, as an old member of the Calcutta Corporation, I may say that we have had a sad experience in the case of the Talla Reservoir—if I may be allowed to mention it; when the original scheme was placed before the Corporation, the original estimate was 70 lakhs of rupees, and we were assured that the pressure of filtered water in every part of Calcutta would be 40 feet. Now, we find that there are some parts of Calcutta where the pressure of filtered water is only 8 feet; and that we have committed ourselves to a scheme which will cost about 3 crores of rupees.

We have had also a sad experience in the case of the construction of the public buildings at Delhi. At first we were told that the capital expenditure would amount to 6 crores of rupees. Now we all know that the actual expenditure would be about double that amount. The amendment is that the demand for expenditure on the Grand Trunk Canal Scheme be refused. Sir, if we are to commit ourselves to this scheme at this stage, certainly we should support the amendment. But if we are called upon to sanction the amount for the purchase of dredgers or for the acquisition of land which has already been acquired, then, Sir, I have no objection.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: May I explain one thing? I think I said that, even if the Government did desire to go on with the Grand Trunk Canal project, the amount which we were asking the Council to vote could not be devoted to the Grand Trunk Canal project this year, but would only go towards payment for the dredgers and for the land already acquired. Therefore, I think that those gentlemen, who are criticising the Canal project generally, would perhaps, for their own sake, reserve their arguments for a future occasion. What I said was this: that this money would be spent on dredgers and for the land already acquired. Once more I repeat this fact, as it is inconsistent with the discussion that we are having.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: We have been informed that this scheme would be placed before a committee, but the Committee on Waterways is nothing but an Advisory Board and the Government is not bound to accept its recommendations. If I am assured that the recommendations of this Committee would be placed before this Council and that the decision of the Council would be final, in that case I shall be glad to support the grant; otherwise I shall be under the painful necessity of supporting the amendment of Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I find two of my esteemed friends, Rai Dr. Haridhan Dutt Bahadur and Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, are on opposite sides; and when two Rai Bahadurs fall out, there is no chance for a poor man like myself. What I think is that, after the statement that has been made by the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan, I am disposed to think that what he means—though he is cautious in his statement—is this, that we shall be given a chance of discussing the whole scheme again on its merits on the new figures and facts, which the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan will place before us in August next with liberty to us of receding from our present position, that is to say, with liberty to us of rejecting the whole scheme. If this is so—and the second thing, that he has said is that he is willing to stop further acquisition of land, which I take to mean an evidence of the intention on the part of Government to respect our feelings—then, but not till then, am

I prepared to support this grant. If Rs. 69,00,000, that is wanted for the dredgers, is wanted for the dredgers alone, then by merely voting for them we do not necessarily commit ourselves to this big scheme which some people say would cost crores of rupees, some say would create insanitary conditions, and some say would prove to be a healthy scheme; but upon which I am not entitled to pass any opinion. What have lawyers or merchants to do in this matter. If opinions are to be had, they must be had from persons who know all about it, and must come in the form of a report. My position, therefore, is this: that, if I am right in my assumption that the whole thing will be placed before us over again for discussion with the power of rejecting it, if we think that the scheme deserves to be rejected after a thorough consideration of the new facts and figures that will be placed before us, then I at once support the grant. [A voice: "But you are repeating it again."] I think that this part of my statement is so important that it would bear repetition ten times. I do not think that I have anything more to say, except this, that I am thankful to the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan for his taking us into his confidence and I cannot help thinking that if other Hon'ble Members would only condescend to take us into their confidence in the same way as the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur has done, then much of the trouble which they think that we give them would not arise at all.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: I join with the hon'ble members who preceded me in thanking the Hon'ble Member in charge for taking us into his confidence and giving us sufficient information to enable us to arrive at a conclusion. My friend—Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta said that the information supplied by the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur was not ample enough, but, to my mind, it was sufficient enough to bring us to the conclusion—to the one conclusion—and that is this, that this project could not be supported and it must be supposed to be dead. Sir, one question has been raised by the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan, and that is about the liabilities that have already been incurred with respect to this matter. On that there is no doubt that every member of this Council should think it a point of honour to pay every farthing and to see that no further litigation or things like that arise in future. The big item is the item of dredgers, which will cost us a lot of money, but I may assure the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur that the dredgers will be very useful in the province, and I hope in this connection you will remember the sacred Bhaghmati, which is sacred to the Hindus, and I may say also to the Muhammadans, who derive health and vigour from its water; and these dredgers may be of immense help to the people living on the banks of that river. Now, Sir, when we look into the question of liability we also think of another thing, viz., whether we should accept the proposal of the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur, to the effect that the demand should be granted, or we should accept the amendment of Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta and others, to the effect that it should be rejected, and that a supplementary Budget may be prepared and necessary expenses granted by us later on. In order to decide this question I think, instead of considering any matter, we may look into the resolution itself. The resolution says that we should make this grant for the purpose of carrying on the project, but, Sir, we find that the money, which we are going to give, is not for the purpose of carrying on the project, but for the purpose of meeting the liabilities already incurred. So, under the circumstances, one would naturally like to reject the resolution, and support the amendment, and ask the Hon'ble Member in charge to bring in a further requisition. But we need not insist on this, and, if we find that the Hon'ble Member in charge insists on asking us to make this grant this year for the purpose of paying those liabilities, I will not very much object to that.

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: I think that some of these misapprehensions, which have arisen in regard to our undertakings in connection with this matter, are due to an imperfect reading of the Devolution Rules. The Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur has told the Council that this Rs. 69,00,000 is wanted, first, for certain dredgers, which are already under construction in England, and, secondly, for certain land which has already been acquired, and, thirdly, for some bricks, which have already been ordered. Some hon'ble members seem to say that this is all very well, but how do we know that you will spend Rs. 69,00,000 on these three things and that you will not spend a lot more on the Grand Trunk Canal Scheme and commit us hopelessly on the subject. I may say that it is not possible for the Irrigation Department to take action of that kind. This amount of Rs. 69,00,000 is the only grant under the major head "57—Outlay on water-works," and the Irrigation Department cannot spend an anna over this Rs. 69,00,000 without coming back to this Council and asking for a vote either this year or next year. That, I think, is a sufficient answer to some of the members who have expressed doubts in the course of discussion.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: There are one or two speakers more and then I will put the question.

Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: I wish to say only a few words. In the first place I wish to thank the Hon'ble mover for having moved the motion which stands in his name.

Looking into the Budget, I find it has been stated that the Grand Trunk Canal project being a productive irrigation work, involves a very large capital outlay, and so it has been decided to finance it by a loan from the Government of India, and so forth. As a plain simple man

I must say that it would appear to any one reading this report on the Budget estimates, that this is a productive scheme, and therefore it would be to the interest of the people to vote for this money. The motion has elicited a reply from the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan, that he does not think, or rather he is not in a position to assure the Council, that it is a productive scheme. By a productive scheme I mean that at least the money, which will have to be paid by way of interest and sinking fund charges, will be recovered from the income of this productive work. The Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan to whom I am very much indebted for the frank information that he has given us, says that he cannot assure us definitely on this point. It may be less. The matter will have to be fully considered. Such being our position, I think the Hon'ble members, who have moved this motion, deserve our thanks, because the misconception, which has been raised in our mind with regard to this, is now altogether removed.

As regards the estimate of Rs. 69,00,000, it has been freely and frankly explained what the position really is. You may blame the Government as much as you can, but the expenditure has been incurred, the three dredgers have been ordered from England, and are estimated to cost a large sum. It is not only Rs. 69,00,000 that you will have to vote—you will have to vote a certain additional sum. Then certain lands have been acquired for which Rs. 75,000 will have to be paid. A contract has been entered into for the manufacture of bricks, and a sum of Rs. 66,000 will have to be paid for the purpose. From a practical point of view we will have to make good the expenditure; it does not matter much whether the same has been incurred rightly or wrongly. We will have to make it good. The Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur has assured us that the whole matter will be placed before the Council, and has frankly admitted that he is not going to pay from his own zamindari. The liabilities have already been incurred with respect to this Grand Trunk Canal project, and we have got to meet them. I think, therefore, we will do well if we vote for this money. Another question, and that is this. I do not think, having some experience of the practical way of dealing with these things, that it would be a dead loss to the people of this country, a dead loss to the Government or to the public exchequer. The sanitary and financial aspect of the question will have to be discussed over again in this House in this connection, and I am quite sure that from the sanitary and financial point of view it would be a sound scheme. If the scheme is not carried out, the expenses can be recouped. Even if the dredgers are brought from England then, I think, they can be very usefully employed in re-excavating some of the silted-up rivers in Eastern Bengal and other places and, Sir, I for one can give a guarantee not only as a member of this Council, but as a member of the Improvement Trust that, if you make over the lands to us, we would know how to deal with them. As regards bricks, not only myself but also a dozen other persons will barter for the bricks. So there will be no apprehension of any loss to the public exchequer on this account. Therefore we shall vote for the grant, and I am glad that the assurance that the scheme will be further examined by the Council has been obtained, which would not have been obtained but for the motion of my friend.

Babu JATINDRA NATH BASU: There is absolutely nothing left for me to say. I only trust that the House will not vote for the amendment, but will vote for the original motion.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: A friend once asked Bismarck why he was not believed, and Bismarck's reply was: "Because I always speak the truth." What I tried to explain to the Council to-day was the truth, but there was such lurking suspicion in the minds of some of the hon'ble members that they thought that I had got something hidden in my pockets. I do not propose to go into the question at very great length, because what little I have to add will not only supplement what I have already said, but some speakers in opposing my motion have really assisted me in supporting it.

First of all, I shall deal with my friend from Chittagong. I did not know, when I met him at Chittagong last rains, that we should have the pleasure of meeting here in this Council Chamber. I can well understand his reasons why he looks with suspicion to this project, and I have no quarrel with him on that score. What, however, I should like to point out is this, that public bodies were consulted in 1917 and Government have their opinions with them. As regards Mr. Addams Williams' report being kept confidential, I may say that the Secretariat have a way of giving away these reports, even if the Department did not desire that they should be made public. The report on which Babu Annada Charan Dutta was laying so much stress, and about which he was accusing Government of having kept it confidential, is now used as a pillow for resting Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta's left arm upon. That is the report in question. The cat has been let out of the bag so far as the report is concerned. The reason, however, why Government keep such reports confidential is simply this, that in matters of a technical nature, where experts put in their estimates according to their views, Government do not think it proper to make those figures public for the simple reason that they may not be perfectly accurate. They may have to be revised, they may have to be reconsidered, and it is not right and proper that the public should base their faith on figures which Government themselves may have to reconsider before putting them forward. That is really the secret why certain of these reports are kept back and treated as confidential. Then, again, it is well known that engineers, like all experts, like to criticise others who have submitted their projects before them. That may be another reason why they are not published, because it is not right for the public to see one Government officer criticising another. Beyond that there is nothing in this report to be kept confidential, excepting that such reports are generally treated as confidential.

Now, as regards Babu Annada Charan Dutta's desire to press for his amendment, I myself would have sympathised with him, if I, on behalf of Government, had pressed for Rs. 69,00,000 for large works in the way of construction or in the way of actually proceeding with the Grand Trunk Canal scheme. If Babu Annada Charan Dutta were to press for his motion or Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta were to do the same, what would be the effect. As for the gentlemen of this Council defeating the Government, when they are in a majority, it is a foregone conclusion, but it is up to them to consider, when they do try to defeat the Government, whether any useful purpose either to them or to Government would be served by so doing. Here we have liabilities to meet—liabilities which we cannot get away from. Under these circumstances, are we to expect a sensible body of men like this Council to vote against or vote down those liabilities, when we know they have got to be met. The sentiment that we should not vote for those liabilities, because they have been put down in the Budget as the Grand Trunk Canal project, but that a supplementary Budget should be brought forward is one to which Government could not be a party. I have already explained that Government are not prepared at the present moment to give up the Grand Trunk Canal project without a fresh examination of it in all its bearings. What I have said is this in view of the fact of our liabilities this year Government cannot, as Mr Kerr has very clearly stated, spend a penny more than what we have budgeted for, because that is the only amount provided under that head. And, when I have said that these items will only go to meet our liabilities, I do not think that the Council should take up the attitude of voting them down, because they are put down as the Grand Trunk Canal project. This Council will have ample opportunities to consider the matter later.

Now as regards the misconception which seems to have cropped up over my statements that we are going to put this scheme before a Committee, my object was this, if there are four members of this Council on a particular Committee, and, if the Government consider that the project can be proceeded with, if the Government can convince the four members, the Government, when they come up perhaps next year for a grant, will be armed with the opinions of these four members. If, on the other hand, Government find that they cannot make it a productive scheme, which they originally thought would be the case, then the Government can come before the public through a communiqué or in some other way—perhaps in the form of a resolution—and say what they think about it. But until the Government have revised the scheme, I think it would be futile to have any discussion in this Council. Then of course it would be open to any member of this Council to bring forward a resolution and there may be members of the public too who would like to have a general discussion on the whole scheme. What I say now is this, let the general discussion be postponed until Government themselves are in a position to say, after revising the estimate and after examining the scheme, what the scheme is likely to cost and, in view of the interest that is to be paid on the loan, what the rate of production would be, if we are to make it a productive work.

Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta has raised the question of detail, which I really did not want to bring in at the present moment. But since he has mentioned something from the report which should not have been discussed here, I would just say something on the point. In the first place Government are not bound to accept everything what the reporting officers report to Government. Secondly, the dredgers in question to which he has made a reference were not available at the time, and, as a consequence, we had to put the order in England. Now as we have come to the question of dredgers, I should like to point out how the matter regarding them stands at present. There are three of them on order, which were under the old estimates to cost £785,270, which sum as I said, was calculated then at Rs. 10 to the pound. Now at the present rate it will cost Rs. 1,00,06,000. The dredgers, as I have said, are under contract. Two are expected to be delivered next September and another by the end of 1921. Under these circumstances it will be quite clear to the Council that, although these dredgers will not be delivered before the next cold weather, we cannot postpone the payment of a certain amount. The delivery may be delayed—owing to strikes and other things—but we have got to provide for the amount in this year's Budget, because we have got to make payment before March next. That point, I think, is made clear.

As regards the liability being binding, I am not prepared at the dictation of my friend, Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, who gets so easily excited, to produce before the Council the terms of the contract, but I may say this, that under the terms of the contract we are bound to take delivery of the dredgers and pay the money.

I now turn to Colonel Pugh's remarks. He has asked me to make a statement. Well, I have already made a statement as regards the necessity of the scheme. I have told the Council that, as a responsible Government, we ought to re-examine the scheme, and, when we have been able to satisfy the Committee and the public as to the necessity of the scheme, we will commence the work, and as to his reference to the remarks of a certain Mr. Cowley as regards the urgency of the scheme, I have seen it in the papers as well as the vague statement made by Babu Promotho Nath Mullick.

As regards the point of public health, we have already said that the scheme has been examined from the sanitary point of view, and, if any further examination is necessary either by the Sanitary Engineer or by the Sanitary Commissioner, Colonel Pugh may rest assured that that will be done. As regards the petition of the inhabitants of Baranagore, Colonel Pugh will understand that as long as this Government is satisfied that the work is productive, and as long as this Government, the Government of India and the Secretary of State have accepted the alignment, which is now proposed, we cannot possibly alter the alignment to suit the requirements of the people of a certain locality. Of course, if any modification of the scheme is thought desirable, Government will consider it.

Now, as regards some of the dying rivers, of course, if the Grand Trunk Canal project is proceeded with, it will practically close some of these rivers. As regards other rivers, we are taking measurements year after year, and we cannot at present guarantee what is going to happen in regard to these rivers in future. But let me, as a general observation and taking the side of those who are against the Grand Trunk Canal project, say this. Supposing that the Government found itself in the position that it would be unwise to proceed with the Grand Trunk Canal project—I am taking the extreme view—mind you, Sir, that is not my view—I only say “supposing” there is no need to apprehend that his money which we are investing in dredgers will be lost, because in an irrigation province like Bengal, even if we abandon this project, for which these dredgers are being indented, there are many schemes in the irrigation Department, for which these dredgers could be utilised. That being so, and, I have said, out of Rs. 69,02,000 the greater part goes for the dredgers, and the rest is for liabilities in connection with the scheme, I hope that the members, who have moved their motions, will see fit to withdraw them.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: As the Hon'ble Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan, on behalf of Government, has given this assurance that the Council shall be given an opportunity of discussing the whole scheme after revision, and that in the meantime no further work will be acquired, and that this grant does not commit Government to take up this project, I wish to withdraw my amendment.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The original motion was then put and agreed to.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): I have the honour to place before this Council a very small motion which I am sure, in the absence of any amendments appearing in the agenda paper, I am entitled to hold that the Council will unanimously accept. The motion is that a sum of Rs. 14,40,000 be granted for expenditure for loans under the Provincial Loans Account. There are two points which are to be noticed in this connection. In the first place, we do not borrow, but we lend, and we lend this sum of money to local bodies and to other institutions for public purposes. In the second place, the bulk of this money is devoted to local improvements and anti-malarial operations. A sum of Rs. 10,76,000 is to be spent on local improvements and anti-malarial operations. The following are the details of the other heads of expenditure:—

Rs. 3,00,000 under Land Acquisition and Agricultural Improvement loans.

Rs. 20,000 under Co-operative Societies.

Rs. 37,000 under Drainage and Embankments Act.

Rs. 5,000 advance to students of the Weaving School at Serampore.

I have stated the details of the loans and I beg that this grant may be voted.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN moved "that a sum of Rs. 1,87,000 be granted for expenditure for the working expenses of the Midnapore Canal for the year 1921-22."

This is a productive work and every year the road cesses are going up and, as a matter of fact, the working expenses have been kept lower than last year and I hope that the money will be granted.

The motion was put and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: Before the Council adjourns I wish to announce that the election to the Standing Committees will take place on the 1st April from 11 A.M. to 2-15 P.M. when the members may come and record their votes. The election to the Committee on Public Account will be held at 2-15 P.M. on the same day. I understand it was notified to take place on the 7th, but I think it will be more convenient to have it on the 1st.

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to Friday, the 1st April, 1921, at 3 P.M., in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

THE BENGAL LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS.

(Official Report of the First Session.)

VOLUME I—No. 6.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council assembled at 3 P.M. on Friday, the 1st April, 1921, in the Council Chamber, in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 111 nominated and elected members.

Starred Questions

(to which oral answers were given).

Low price of raw jute.

1. Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state whether any inquiry has been made as to the causes which have resulted in the price of raw jute being brought down considerably during the last few years?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what, if any, remedial measures Government contemplate for alleviating the condition of the agriculturists who are hard hit by this lowering of prices?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): (a) Inquiries have been made from time to time. The member is referred to the reply given to the starred question No. VIII at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council held on the 19th November, 1919.

(b) From the information at their disposal Government have no reason to believe that any remedial measures are required.

Cinchona plantation.

II. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Government of Bengal intends to dispose of their cinchona plantation to the Government of India?

(b) If so, what steps do the Government intend to take about the supply of quinine to Bengal?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to place the necessary papers relating to the sale on the table?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware of the feeling that exists that it is advisable to retain the said plantation for the use of Bengal only?

(e) Is it a fact that the Army and provinces other than Bengal get the preference in the supply of quinine?

(f) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state—

- (i) the amount of quinine manufactured,
- (ii) the amount supplied to the Army Department,
- (iii) the amount supplied to other provinces, and
- (iv) the amount supplied to Bengal?

(g) Are the Government considering the desirability of distributing quinine at a nominal cost to the various local boards to serve as an anti-malarial measure?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE [LAND REVENUE] (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan):
(a) Yes, but the question has not yet been finally settled.

(b) On the imperialisation of the Cinchona Department, this province, along with other provinces, will get its supply of quinine from the amalgamated Cinchona Department. It is not apprehended that there will be any difficulty in getting the supply of quinine required for this province.

(c) As the final decision has not yet been made on the subject, papers cannot be laid on the table.

(d) The answer is in the negative.

(e) No.

(f) (i) The member is referred to paragraph 3 of the Annual Report of the Government Cinchona Plantation and Factory in Bengal for the year 1919-20, copy of which is laid on the library table.

(ii) The information is not available, as no quinine is supplied to the Army Department direct.

(iii) Supplies to other provinces during 1919-20, excluding Medical Store Depôt at Lahore, amounted to 17,869 lbs. This included 3,631 lbs. of quinine distributed as 'quinine treatments' to Assam, Bihar and Orissa and the Punjab; 27,000 lbs. were supplied to the Medical Store Depôt at Lahore in 1919-20.

(iv) Supplies to Bengal during 1919-20, other than Medical Store Depôt, Calcutta, amounted to 13,957 lbs. This included 7,199 lbs. of 'quinine treatments'; 4,615 lbs. were supplied to the Medical Store Depôt in Calcutta.

(v) Government make grants of quinine free of cost to hospitals and dispensaries through Civil Surgeons. Statements A and B showing the quantities distributed during the years 1919-20 and 1920-21 are laid on the table.

Establishment of a medical school in Mymensingh.

V. Mr. S. M. BOSE: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to make a statement showing what progress has been made in the establishment of a medical school in Mymensingh and what steps are being contemplated in connection therewith?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the estimated cost of such establishment and what amount the Government will be pleased to contribute towards such cost?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state, if any, and if so, what sum will be provided in the Budget for 1921-22 towards the cost of such establishment?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): (a) A scheme for the establishment of a medical school at Mymensingh has recently been received from the Surgeon-General with the Government of Bengal and is now under consideration.

(b) The capital cost is estimated at Rs. 5,10,000, while the recurring cost will be about Rs. 50,000 a year. Government are unable to say how much they will contribute, until it has been ascertained what assistance will be forthcoming from the local bodies and public of Mymensingh.

(c) No provision has been made for the scheme in next year's budget.

Case of running train thefts between Lalgola Ghat and Naihati.

VI. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state the number of complaints received during the last five years regarding running train thefts on the Eastern Bengal Railway between the stations Lalgola Ghat and Naihati?

(b) Have any accused been traced in any of those cases; if so, with what result?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what preventive steps, if any, have been taken in this connection?

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) Sixty-four.

(b) In eleven of these cases the offenders were traced and convicted.

(c) Up to the creation of the Detective Department in February, 1919, each of the two most important trains between Ranaghat and Lalgola—19 up and 20 down—always carried a plain-clothes constable, whose duty it was to look out for thieves. This duty is now being performed by constables of the Detective Department. The whole question of the police arrangements on railways is at present being examined by a committee appointed by the Government of India.

Application of road-cess and its unspent balances.

VII. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

- (i) what were the unspent balances of road-cess in each district collected during the last five years; and
- (ii) how much of the monies spent out of road cess fund was applied to the purposes for which such cess was levied during the last five years?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (i) Figures for Tippera, Noakhali, Jalpaiguri and Bogra are not available. A statement is laid on the table showing the amounts of unspent balances held by the District Boards of Burdwan, 24-Parganas, Murshidabad and Jessore during the last five years. The remaining District Boards had no unspent balance of road-cess funds during these years.

(ii) The District Boards (with the exception of the four mentioned above for which figures are not available) report that the entire amounts spent by them out of road-cess funds were applied to the purposes for which the cess was levied.

Statement referred to in the reply to the starred question No. VII (i), showing the amount of unspent balance of road cess receipts.

Officers on special duty in connection with the improvement of primary education.

VIII. Mr. H. A. STARK: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state—

- (i) the names in succession of the several officers who, since April 1912, have been on special duty in the office of the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, in connection with the improvement of primary education in Bengal;
- (ii) the local experience and other special qualifications (including proficiency in the vernaculars of the province) of each of the above officers, in consideration of which he was regarded as competent for the work assigned to him;
- (iii) the period of each officer's deputation;
- (iv) the cost to Government—each item separately stated—in respect of the pay, deputation allowance, travelling allowance, office establishment, and printing of the report of each of the above officers; and
- (v) the net result of each officer's report, recommendations, and deputation?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): (i) Mr. Michael P. West; Mr. E. E. Biss.

(ii) Mr. West's local experience and other qualifications are as follows:—

- (a) Experimental work in primary education in Dacca town, 1914-15 including actual teaching in a pathsala.
- (b) Tour with Director of Public Instruction in Dacca Division with special reference to primary schools.
- (c) Inspector of Schools, Chittagong Division, 1915-17. During this time he reorganised the Normal School and the Gurukul Training School system there.
- (d) He is the author of a work, 'Education Selective Specific' in which the problem of primary education is considered at some length. He is also the author of many other articles and books of an educational nature.
- (e) He has a good working knowledge of Bengali. He passed the Departmental examination by the Higher standard in 1914.
- (f) Most of the research, the results of which are contained in the Survey of Education, was conducted by Mr. West in the vernacular personally.
- (g) Mr. West is a member of the Indian Educational Service, and received professional training as a teacher in England.

Mr. Biss's local experience and other special qualifications are as follows:—

- (a) He had a wide experience of the problems of primary education for over five years before coming to India. When Principal of the Dacca Training College he watched experiments in primary education for over two years in Dacca.
- (b) He has acted as Assistant Director of Public Instruction for Muhammadan Education, and so understands the peculiar requirements of the Moslem community.
- (c) He is a member of the Indian Educational Service, of considerable administrative ability.

(iii) Mr. West.—Six months, from November 1st, 1917.

Mr. Biss.—Since July 10th, 1920.

(iv) Mr. West's deputation—

(a) Pay	10,062	9	3
(b) Deputation allowance	2,042	8	3
(c) Travelling allowance	3,000†	0	0
(d) Office establishment	10,313	7	8
Total	25,418	9	2

† Amount provided

(v) The net result of Mr. West's deputation.—The effect of the inquiry was to establish by statistical proof resulting from objective study the fact that the aided system cannot in Bengal be made the basis of a national system of education; that the cost of a complete provincial system prohibits its immediate introduction as a whole; but that a beginning can be made in the more advanced areas; that the training of subordinate inspecting officers in the specific problems of primary education is an imperative and immediate necessity. Certain definite weaknesses in the primary system were brought into prominence, a dangers to be avoided or as problems to be solved, e.g., overlapping and unemployment. Certain lines of advance were indicated, in regard to types of building and furniture, methods of inspection, teaching method and training.

The net results of Mr. Biss's deputation.—Mr. Biss's deputation has not yet come to an end, and it is impossible to indicate final results. Preliminary recommendations regarding the extension of primary education have been placed before a Conference of representatives of non-official members of District Boards. Schemes have been worked out in detail for primary education in 35 municipalities. Two have been fully accepted (Rangpur and Chandpur). Eleven have accepted the policy outlined, but are discussing methods of financing it. The remainder are still discussing the schemes put before them. In non-municipal areas it is proposed to work as far as possible through the new union boards, under the supervision of district boards; 25 union board area schemes have been worked out in detail, and some areas have applied to be allowed to begin work on these schemes. It is anticipated that in the coming year the remaining 80 municipalities and 500 out of about 1,500 union boards that have been formed will have detailed schemes submitted to them.

Powers of the Legislative Council to fix the pay of Ministers.

IX. Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department prepared to lay on the table the legal opinion obtained by Government regarding the powers of the Legislative Council to fix the pay of Ministers?

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): The opinions of the Law Officers are treated as confidential, and Government see no sufficient reason to make an exception to that rule in this instance.

Decision in the House of Commons as to powers of provincial Councils over the administration of transferred subjects.

X. Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department been drawn to Reuter's telegram dated London, the 2nd March, and published in the daily papers of the 5th March regarding the decision of the Speaker of the House of Commons regarding the powers of the Local Legislative Councils over the administration of transferred subjects.

(b) If so, are the Government prepared to obtain an authenticated copy from England of the same for the information of the Council?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) Government have seen a Reuter's telegram dated the 1st March regarding a statement by the Speaker of the House of Commons, which is probably that referred to by the member. That pronouncement, however, referred to procedure in the House of Commons itself and does not affect the powers of the Local Legislative Councils over the administration of transferred subjects.

(b) It is not considered necessary, therefore, to obtain an authenticated copy of this decision.

Promotion and prospects of Sub-Assistant Surgeons.

XI. Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

- (i) how many Sub-Assistant Surgeons have been promoted to the rank of Assistant Surgeons during the last five years for exceptionally meritorious services;
- (ii) whether good reports have been received as to their capacity, and
- (iii) how many more Sub-Assistant Surgeons are there who have been considered fit for promotion?

(b) Are the Government considering the desirability of reserving a few posts of Civil Surgeons for these officers?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) (i) Five.

(ii) Yes.

(iii) In the opinion of the Surgeon-General with this Government five or possibly six.

(b) No. There are seven Assistant Surgeons who are Civil Surgeons.

Inquiry into the causes of flood in Naogaon, Bogra and Dinajpur.

XII. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state whether in pursuance of the assurance given by the Hon'ble Mr. Cumming in reply to the resolution moved by me at the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council on the 26th November, 1918, any inquiry was made into the causes of the flood in Naogaon, Bogra and Dinajpur?

(b) If the answer to clause (a) is in the affirmative, does the Hon'ble the Member intend to lay on the table a copy of the report of such inquiry?

(c) Would the Hon'ble the Member state what action has been taken by the Government to prevent a recurrence of such flood?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of IRRIGATION (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): (a) A preliminary report was obtained and the question of flooding was discussed at a joint meeting of the Irrigation and Railway Branch Secretaries of the Local Government and the Senior Government Inspector of Railways in April, 1919. It was decided that further informations regarding levels of floods, railway embankments and water ways of railways should be obtained. These informations have not yet been received.

(b) and (c) As the inquiry is not completed, this question does not arise.

Improvement of Sankararah Khal in Tamluk.

XIII. Babu SARAT CHANDRA MUKHOPADHAYA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state what steps have been taken to re-excavate and extend the Sankararah khal for the effective drainage of the Tamluk pargana in the Tamluk subdivision of the Midnapore district?

(b) If no steps have yet been taken, when will the work be taken up?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Surveys and investigations are in progress for the preparation of a scheme for improving the drainage of the area referred to.

(b) The question does not arise.

Grant to the Calcutta University.

 XIV. Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware of the statement made in the Legislative Assembly by the Hon'ble Mr. Shafi, on behalf of the Government of India, that the allotment of a grant for the Calcutta University would be definitely against the spirit of the financial arrangements under the Reforms?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether the local Government accept the responsibility for the future?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the Calcutta University is in urgent need of funds due—

(1) to its present commitments;

(2) to the necessity for expansion in the Departments of Technology, Commerce and Agriculture, owing to the economic demands of the people; and

(3) to the situation created by the establishment of the Dacca University?

(d) Is it a fact that stability of tenure of appointment and better prospects offered to its teachers have been offered by the Dacca University to a greater extent than by the Calcutta University?

(e) Did the authorities of the Calcutta University apply to the Government of Bengal for a grant for recurring and non-recurring expenditure which they consider to be urgent?

(f) If the answer to the question is "Yes," will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the grounds on which the Government have thought it fit to reject the application?

(g) Is it the intention of the Government of Bengal that the two Universities should be maintained in a position of parity, considering the needs and requirements of each and the possibilities of development?

(h) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to make a definite declaration of the policy of the local Government towards the Calcutta University during the transition period preceding the adoption of the recommendations of the Commission?

(i) Will the Government of Bengal consider the desirability of making an ad interim grant of Rs. 1,25,000 as recommended by the Commission?

(j) If the answer is "No," will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the grounds on which they base their decision?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) I have seen reports in the newspapers to this effect.

(b) A Bill is now before the Legislative Assembly the object of which is to transfer the control of Calcutta University to the Government of Bengal. If this Bill is placed on the Statute Book, the responsibility for Calcutta University, so far as that institution depends upon Government at all, would devolve upon the Government of Bengal. If the Member's intention is that "responsibility" should cover "financial responsibility," then I may add that this Government have made it quite clear to the Government of India that unless adequate financial relief is given to the Government of Bengal in accordance with the recommendation of the Parliamentary Joint Committee that Government will find it impossible to meet adequately the additional financial demands made upon it as a result of the transfer of the University.

(c) (1) and (2) Some information on the points indicated was conveyed to this Government by two representations submitted on or about the 7th February last. Until I have examined the position not only in connection with the commitments of the University, but also with reference to the question of its expansion in these and other directions, I am not prepared to make any statement either with regard to the University's present financial position or its development. Nor am I prepared to suggest on the basis of the information now before me what action, if any this Government might be prepared to take in the matter to which the member refers.

(c) (3) and (d) The establishment of a University at Dacca has been under consideration for the last nine years and the Calcutta University Commission, which contained an ex-Vice-Chancellor of Calcutta University, strongly urged that this University should be established without further delay. The Government of India accordingly passed Act XVIII of 1920, an Act to establish and incorporate a unitary teaching and residential University at Dacca. In the representations recently received, to which reference has been made in the answers given to questions (c) (1) and (2), a statement is made to the effect that certain employees of Calcutta University are being attracted to Dacca University by the superior prospects of the latter. The University of Dacca has been constituted in virtue of section 3 of Act XVIII of 1920, a body corporate and empowered in virtue of section 4 (1) of the said Act to provide for instruction in such branches of learning as the University may think fit and to make provision for research and for the advancement and dissemination of knowledge. Section 50 (1) (c) enacts that at any time after the passing of the Act and until such time as the authorities of the University shall have been duly constituted teachers of the University shall be appointed by the Governor of Bengal after considering the recommendations of an advisory committee consisting of the Vice-Chancellor of Dacca University, the Director of Public Instruction and such other person or persons, as the Governor of Bengal thinks fit to associate with them. The Government of Bengal, therefore, as such, have no status with regard to appointments to the Dacca University, but I am informed that His Excellency the Governor added to the Committee, which he was required to appoint in accordance with the statutory provision just quoted, the Vice-Chancellor, Calcutta University, and the Hon'ble the Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda. So far as the Government of Bengal are aware, the Vice-Chancellor, Calcutta University, has never submitted any representation or objection, suggesting that Dacca University was competing with Calcutta University to the prejudice of the latter.

(e) As stated in the answer to (c) (1) and (2) above, two representations, dated the 7th February, 1921, were submitted to this Government. In one of these representations this Government were asked to provide for a capital grant of Rs. 11,00,000 to be contributed, in part during the ensuing financial year and in part subsequently, towards the construction of a University building on what is known as the fish market site—or more correctly as Madhab Babu's Bazar. It may be explained in this connection that in 1913 the Government of India made a non-recurring grant to enable the University to acquire Madhab Babu's Bazar. The bazar was acquired by the Government of Bengal at an actual cost of Rs. 6,41,440, but, under instructions from the Government of India, the local Government in 1915 made over to the University the balance of the Rs. 8,00,000 grant, i.e., Rs. 1,58,560. The University has also up to the present been enjoying the annual income derived from the market, and at the moment the securities standing to the credit of the University in the Madhab Babu Bazar's fund amount to a face value of Rs. 5,56,800 and to an approximate actual present value of about Rs. 4,50,000. Thus I was in effect asked to commit this Government to a grant of Rs. 11,00,000 towards a project in which a sum of Rs. 8,00,000 of public money has already been contributed. The other representation of the same date contained two requests, viz., one for the provision of a capital grant of Rs. 10,00,000 for the development of technological studies in connection with the University College of Science and one for a further grant of Rs. 1,25,000 to enable the University to increase the salaries of the teachers in its postgraduate department. In putting forward the former of these two requests, it is stated that the provision of Rs. 10,00,000 is needed for the extension of technological studies, as recommended by the Calcutta University Commission in paragraph 75 of Chapter LI of their Report. If the member will look at this paragraph, he will find that the carrying into effect of the Commission's proposals in connection with the inauguration of technological studies in Calcutta University was estimated to involve not only a capital grant from public funds of Rs. 10,00,000 but an annual recurring grant from the same source of Rs. 1,16,400. With regard to this last item, the letter from the University states that it is obvious that a recurring grant would be needed for the purpose of carrying out efficiently the work of technological and agricultural instruction from year to year, but adds that the Vice-Chancellor and the Syndicate do not press for a recurring grant during the ensuing session, as they will be content to utilize the capital grant which may be placed at their discretion with the assistance of their present staff. No particulars are given as to the recurring cost likely to be involved. In the matter of the recurring grant asked for on account of the teachers of the postgraduate department, no information has been placed before this Government. The University's letter merely cites an extract from paragraph 54 of Chapter LI of the Calcutta University Commission Report (Volume V, pages 282-283), which contains a sentence to the effect that it would demand an additional expenditure of about Rs. 1,25,000 to increase the average salary to about Rs. 300. I felt that these two representations were of such far-reaching consequence and would involve the University and this Government in such important financial and other commitments that it would not be right for me to decide these questions without very careful consideration. I also felt that as a Minister it would be my duty to take the Legislative Council, or at any rate some properly appointed committee of the Council, into my confidence before I decided to commit Government to such important schemes. Further, regard being had to the provisions of rule 37 of the Devolution Rules made under sections 45 (a) and 129 (a) of the Government of India Act (of which presumably Calcutta University was aware), it was not possible for me to include the grants asked for or any part thereof in the Budget estimates for 1921-22, which had been provisionally adopted by the Government some time before the receipt of these two representations from the University.

(f) The member is referred to the answer under (e) above. I had not rejected the applications, but under the statutory rules it was not possible for me to consider them for the purpose of the Budget provision for 1921-22.

(g), (h), (i) and (j) If and when the Bill which is now before the Legislative Assembly is placed on the Statute Book, this Government being then the controlling authority of Calcutta University, under the terms of the original Act of Incorporation (Act II of 1857), as interpreted in the light of the Indian Universities Act (Act VIII of 1907) will define their policy towards that institution. What that policy will be will depend largely on the funds then available to this Government or likely to become so, as also upon the views adopted by the Legislative Council. The question of an ad interim grant will then be considered.

Revision of the pay of Sub-Registrars.

XV. Mr. S. M. BOSE: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the Inspector-General of Registration submitted a scheme for the revision of the pay of the Sub-Registrars, involving an additional expenditure of three lakhs.

(b) Is it proposed during 1921-22 to provide the sum of Rs. 75,000 only for such revision of pay?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware of the very keen disappointment that this proposal has caused among the Sub-Registrars?

(d) Does the Hon'ble the Minister intend to grant further relief to the Sub-Registrars during the course of the year?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) and (d) The sum of Rs. 75,000 has been provided in the Budget. It is not at present possible to say whether further provision will be made later in the year. In this connection I may refer the Member to the statement I made on 15th March 1921, in moving the demand for a grant under the head '9.—Registration.'

(c) No representation on the subject has been received by Government.

Free and half-free studentships for school students.

XVI. Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state what was the total grant made last year for free studentships and half-free studentships for school students?

(b) Is it a fact that there are age-limits for candidates for free studentships in the Government and aided schools?

(c) If the answer to clause (b) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state—

(i) how many students, Muhammadan and others, otherwise qualified, were refused aid on account of the age-limits last year and

(ii) the amount, if any, of the grant which remained unutilized for want of candidates within the prescribed age-limit?

(d) Will the Government be pleased to state whether they have any intention to revise or remove the age-limit in the near future?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) Free studentships are remissions of fees: no funds are provided.

(b) Yes; reference is invited to the appendix in Director of Public Instruction's circular No. 231, dated 6th November, 1917, a copy of which is laid on the table.

(c) (i) The information is not available.

(ii) This does not arise.

(d) No.

GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL.Education Department.

CIRCULAR No. 231/4F.-3P.—1917.

THE undermentioned document, with spare copies, is forwarded to the Inspectors of Schools, Inspectresses of Schools, Principals of Colleges and Eden High School for Girls, Dacca, and Principal, Calcutta Madrassa, in continuation of this office memoranda Nos. 4529-47, dated the 10th March 1916.

F. C. TURNER,

Assistant Director of Public Instruction, Bengal.

CALCUTTA,
The 6th November 1917.

No. 639 T.—Edn., dated Darjeeling, the 10th October 1917.

FROM—C. W. GURNER, Esq., I.C.S., Under-Secretary to the Government, Bengal, General (Education) Department,

TO—The Director of Public Instruction, Bengal.

IN supersession of all previous orders on the subject, I am directed to say the Government approve of the accompanying rules for the award of free-studentship in Government and in Government-aided schools in the Presidency of Bengal Rules for the award of Free-Studentships in Government as well as in Government-aided Schools.

1. (a) Free-studentships in Government schools under the control of managing committees are awarded by the committee.

(b) The Inspector and the Inspectress of Schools control the award of free studentships in Government schools for boys (including mixed schools) and Government schools for girls, respectively, which are not under managing committees.

2. Teachers in Government schools, drawing salaries not exceeding Rs 50 a month, are allowed the privilege of educating, in the school in which they are employed, one child free and one child at half the usual rate of fees. Head Master or Head Mistresses may grant these concessions.

3. Government pensioners (other than menials) who have retired from service in the Department of Public Instruction, and whose pensions do not exceed Rs 2 a month may be allowed the same privileges as teachers in Government schools. The concessions may also be extended to the orphans of officers who died in the service of the department while in the receipt of pay not exceeding Rs 50 a month and also to the orphans of pensioners of the department (other than menials) who were drawing pensions not exceeding Rs. 25 a month.

4. In Government as well as in Government-aided schools the numbers of non-Muhammadan and Muhammadan free students will ordinarily be five per cent of their respective enrolments, excluding free places granted in terms of two preceding rules as well as scholarship-holders who have been granted free tuition.

5. In view of the backwardness of the Moslem community, Muhammadan pupils in Government as well as in Government-aided schools will be allowed additional free places (over and above those provided for in the preceding rule) up to limit of a further ten per cent. of their own enrolment.

6. No pupil shall be eligible for a free-studentship who is above the age-limits prescribed in the Appendix on the 1st January of the year in which the award is made.

7. Boys above those age-limits, who have already been awarded free-studentships, may be allowed to enjoy these privileges so long as they fulfil the condition laid down in rule 8.

8. Free-studentships are awarded on conditions of good conduct and satisfactory progress as determined by school examination.

Soadighi-Gangakhali drainage scheme in Midnapore. XVII. Babu SARAT CHANDRA MUKHOPADHAYA: (a)

Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state the estimated cost of construction of the drainage scheme known as the Soadighi-Gangakhali canal, for drainage of the Kashigorah pargana in the Tamluk subdivision, Midnapore district?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the amount, if any, that has been set apart in the next year's budget for the construction of the said canal?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to say why the work has not yet been taken up?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to say when the work will be commenced?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) The estimated cost of the Soadighi-Gangakhali drainage project is Rs. 4,47,206.

(b) Nil.

(c) Owing to the paucity of officers in the Irrigation Department, as also the several anti-malarial drainage works already taken up by that Department which are in progress and on which the available officers are fully occupied.

(d) This cannot be stated at present as the Irrigation Department has been further handicapped by the unfortunate death of two superior officers during the last six months and also for uncertainty of funds.

Dacca University.

XVIII. Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to give the following information in regard to the Dacca University:—

- (i) the name of the Vice-Chancellor, his salary and allowance if any, and the period of his appointment;
- (ii) the designation of the other chief administrative authorities and the salary attached to each of such posts;
- (iii) the number of University professors to be immediately appointed, the subjects they will teach and the salary attached to each professorship;
- (iv) the number of University readers to be immediately appointed, the subjects they will teach and the salary attached to each readership;
- (v) the number of University lecturers to be immediately appointed, the subjects they will teach and the salary attached to each lectureship;
- (vi) the number of provosts of halls, the names of halls and salary attached to each provostship; and
- (vii) the names, with a brief statement of qualifications and salaries (progressive or otherwise), of all persons who have been approved for appointment as—
 - (1) provosts;
 - (2) University professors;
 - (3) readers;
 - (4) lecturers; and
 - (5) chief administrative officers?

(b) Is it true that Dr. J. C. Ghosh has been approved for appointment to a chair of chemistry?

(c) If so, on what salary?

(d) Is it a fact that Dr. J. C. Ghosh was on the staff of University teachers in the University Science College, Calcutta, and that he was on the grade Rs. 200—300, that he has been sent to England by the Calcutta University for special training with a large grant made from the Palit fund and also a substantial study leave grant, on condition that he would after return continue to work in the Calcutta University for not less than three years and, on failure, pay damages?

(e) Is it a fact that Mr. Haridas Bhattacharyya, now lecturer in the Department of Philosophy, Calcutta University, on a salary of Rs. 300, has been approved for appointment at Dacca on a salary of Rs. 500 a month?

(f) Is it a fact that Mr. Satyendra Nath Bose, now lecturer in the Departments of Physics and Applied Mathematics, on a salary of Rs. 250, has been approved for appointment at Dacca on a salary of Rs. 400 a month?

(g) Is it a fact that Mr. Nalini Mohan Bose, now lecturer in the Department of Applied Mathematics in the Calcutta University, on a salary of Rs. 250, has been approved for appointment at Dacca on a salary of Rs. 400 a month?

(h) Is it a fact that Dr. Ramesh Chandra Mazumdar, now lecturer in the Department of History in the Calcutta University, on the grade of Rs. 400—500, has been approved for appointment as University professor at Dacca on an initial salary of Rs. 600, with prospect of periodical increment up to Rs. 1,800 a month?

(i) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to inquire and ascertain how many more University lecturers from Calcutta are intended to be taken away to Dacca by the offer of higher salaries and prospects of increments?

(j) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what prospects, if not actual promises of increments, are being offered to persons selected or approved for appointments as University professors, readers or lecturers in the Dacca University?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) (i) The member's attention is invited to the notification by the Government of India in the Department of Education, No. 1462, dated the 1st December, 1920. This notification was republished by the Government of Bengal (see notification No. 1851 Edn., dated the 13th December, 1920). Mr. Philip Joseph Hartog, C.I.E., was appointed first Vice-Chancellor of Dacca University by the Governor-General in Council in pursuance of section 49 of the Dacca University Act, 1920 (XVIII of 1920). The appointment is for five years in the first instance with the possibility of an extension for a further four or five years, provided that it will be open either to Mr. Hartog or to the Government of India to terminate the engagement after the first five years on giving not less than six months' notice. The emoluments of the appointment are a salary of Rs. 4,000 a month, with a rent-free house, travelling allowance as recommended by the Calcutta University Commission and a first class passage out to India and back to England on retirement. The post is not pensionable but a retiring allowance is provided by virtue of an arrangement, fixed by the Government of India, whereby Mr. Hartog contributes 5 per cent. of his salary for this purpose, the University contributing 10 per cent. of the said salary. Thus the total monthly payments to Mr. Hartog from funds placed by the local Government at the disposal of Dacca University amount to Rs. 4,400 a month exclusive of the value of a rent-free house and such amount as may be claimed in the matter of travelling allowance.

(a) (ii) In the terms of the Dacca University Act the principal administrative authorities of the Dacca University are to be the Vice-Chancellor, the Registrar, the Librarian and the Treasurer. The Vice-Chancellor, informs me that none of these officers have as yet been appointed, and that it is hoped that it may be possible to secure a suitable Treasurer to whom it will not be necessary to pay any emoluments. The proposed initial pay for the Registrar is Rs. 750 a month. The salary will be incremental but the maximum to which it will rise has not yet been fixed.

(a) (iii), (iv), (v) and (vi) Two statements (Statements A and B) compiled by the Vice-Chancellor, are laid on the table.

(a) (vii) (1) (2) (3) and (4) A statement (Statement C), compiled by the Vice-Chancellor, is laid on the table.

(a) (vii) (5) The member's attention is invited to the replies which I have just made under (a) (vii) (1) and (2) above.

(b) The Vice-Chancellor informs me that the answer is in the affirmative.

(c) The Vice-Chancellor informs me that the salary which has been offered to, and accepted by, Dr. J. C. Ghosh is Rs. 800 a month, rising by increments of Rs. 50 to Rs. 1,800.

(d) I am given to understand that Dr. J. C. Ghosh was at one time on the staff of the Calcutta University Science College. For information as to the conditions of Dr. Ghosh's service in that College the member referred to the Vice-Chancellor, Calcutta University, who was one of the members of the Selection Committee appointed in terms of section 50 (1) (c) of the Dacca University Act. The Vice-Chancellor, Dacca University, informs me that Dr. Ghosh was appointed on the advice of this committee.

(e) (f) (g) and (h) The Vice-Chancellor, Dacca University, informs me that the answer to these questions is in the affirmative. He has also explained that in certain cases the teachers, who were mostly part-time teachers in the University of Calcutta, applied through the President of the Postgraduate Councils and with a recommendation on his part: that in all cases these teachers have resigned their posts with the assent of the authorities of Calcutta University; that the Dacca University post in each case involves the promotion of the teacher concerned to a position of higher grade and greater responsibility; that it is on account of the increased work and responsibility involved at Dacca that higher pay has been offered to each of the teachers selected for the staff of that University.

(i) The University of Dacca is not a Department of the Government of Bengal. It is a body, quite distinct from Government, incorporated by an Act of the Legislature and invested not only with certain functions but with a statutory obligation to perform them. In the terms of section 51 of the Dacca University Act, the Vice-Chancellor may, at any time after the passing of the Act with the previous approval of the Chancellor and subject to the provision of funds by the local Government or otherwise, take such action consistent, so far as may be with the provisions of this Act and the Statutes, as he may think necessary for the purpose of bringing the University into being, and for that purpose may exercise any power which by this Act or Statutes is to be conferred on any officer or authority of the University. It is not the business of the local Government to make such inquiries the member suggests in this question.

(j) The member is referred to the statement (Statement A), which I have already laid on the table in reply to his questions (a) (iii) to (vi).

* One Professorship in English and one Professorship in History, the Professorship in Political Economy and the Professorship of Education will remain vacant in 1921-22. the post of Reader in Education at present filled by the Principal of the Dacca Training College is honorary. The three Lectureships in Education will remain vacant in 1921-22 as the Training College will not be taken over in 1921-22.

The strength of the staff detailed above is not finally fixed; it is based on estimates made some months ago of the probable number of students likely to attend for the different subjects and it seems likely that more appointments will be required on the Scientific and fewer on the Arts side.

Grievances of Sub-Registrars as to their pay.

XIX. Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that great discontent prevails amongst the Sub-Registrars of Bengal on account of their poor pay and prospects and house accommodation in the mufassal?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what steps, if any, have been taken or are proposed to be taken to remedy their grievances as suggested by the Sub-Registrars in the memorial submitted to His Excellency in August last through the Inspector-General of Registration?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) I refer the member to the statement I made on 15th March, 1921, in moving a demand for a grant under the head "9—Registration."

Externment order on Mr. C. R. Das.

XX. Babu FANINDRALAL DE: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state—

(i) whether the order of externment passed on Mr. C. R. Das from Mymensingh was issued with the knowledge or sanction of the local Government.

- (ii) if so, what were the grounds on which such order was based; and
- (iii) if the order was issued without the knowledge or sanction of the Government, what action, if any, does the Government propose to take in regard to the officer who issued the order?

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (i) The order prohibiting Mr. C. R. Das from entering Mymensingh was issued under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, by the Additional District Magistrate, in exercise of the powers vested in him, without reference to Government. He cancelled the order, similarly without reference to Government, soon after it had been served on Mr. Das, and passed a fresh order prohibiting the latter from taking any part in public meetings within the town of Mymensingh. It is understood that Mr. Das had left Mymensingh before the fresh order could be served on him.

(ii) Notices had been circulated urging the public to meet Mr. Das in procession, and appeals had been issued to the students, quoting a letter from Mr. C. R. Das, urging them not to sit for the matriculation examination which was at that time in progress. In the opinion of the District Magistrate a breach of the peace was likely to result from the excitement aroused against those students who wished to continue at the examination.

(iii) Government does not propose to take any action.

Reduction of Police grant.

XXI. Mr. S. R. DAS: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state what action will be necessary, if effect is given to the recent vote of this Council reducing the Police grant by Rs. 23 lakhs?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: If effect is given to the vote referred to as it stands, it will be necessary to abandon all new schemes, and immediately to reduce either the pay or the numbers of the Force, or both.

Mr. S. R. DAS: Would Government be prepared to maintain the Force at the strength and on the pay and terms of service proposed by them, when the Budget was submitted, until the Council has had further time to consider the matter?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: It would obviously be improper for Government to incur expenditure upon a scale which was inevitably and palpably in excess of the sum voted, and, should they do so, the audit authorities would most certainly, and properly, comment adversely upon their action. Moreover, if such an action was taken in the earlier months of the year, subsequent reductions would necessarily be still more drastic.

Unstarred Questions

(answers to which were laid on the table).

Secondary and primary schools.

1. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to make a statement showing for each of the last ten years the number of secondary and primary schools in the Presidency under (i) public, and (ii) private management and the average number of pupils in each class of institution according to management during the above period?

(b) What has been the percentage of schools in rural areas and towns in each of the last ten years?

(c) Are the Government aware that the fall in the price of jute has had a retarding effect on the progress of primary education, particularly in the eastern districts of the Presidency?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) A statement is laid on the table.

(b) Figures are not available.

(c) Yes. In times of economic prosperity it is natural that the number of schools should increase. The reverse is also to be expected.

Jail prisoners.

2. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state—

- (i) whether the prisoners dying in jails are buried according to their religious customs;
- (ii) whether the jail prisoners are allowed religious facilities and are dressed compatibly with their religious requirements?

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim:) (i) In Calcutta jails and some district jails where Muhammadan Burial Associations exist, the dead bodies of Muhammadan prisoners are made over to these associations for disposal. In all other cases, the bodies are handed over to the local municipalities for disposal in accordance with the religious customs of the deceased prisoners.

(ii) The member is referred to the answer given to the starred question No. IV (d), (e) and (f) asked by Maulvi Fazlal Karim at the Council meeting of the 21st February last.

Director of Industries and his establishment.

3. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state—

- (i) the qualifications, industrial and technical, of the present Director of Industries, Bengal, and each of his circle officers,
- (ii) whether any Muhammadan has been appointed as a circle officer? If not, why not; and
- (iii) the number of assistants in the establishment of the Industrial Department and how many of these are Muhammadans?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (i) For the qualifications of the present Director of Industries and of the circle officers under him the member is referred to the answer to starred question No. III (c) and (e) asked by Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur.

- (ii) No. Because none of the Muhammadan applicants for the posts of circle officers had adequate qualifications.
- (iii) There are at present 70 clerks, of whom 7 are Muhammadans.

Industrial development of Bengal.

5. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state what steps have been taken to give effect to Mr. Swan's recommendations regarding the industrial development of Bengal?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what steps have been taken or what steps it is proposed to take towards the organisation of the provincial Department of Industries on the lines of the recommendations of the Industries Commission?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) and (b) Mr Swan's report was written before the appointment of the Indian Industrial Commission and has been superseded by their report. A provincial Department of Industries has been organised on the lines recommended by the Commission. An account of its activities will be found in the Report* on the administration of the Department up to December, 1919, a copy of which is laid on the library table.

Expenditure on medical relief and primary education by the 24-Parganas District Board.

6. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it was a fact that of all the District Boards the 24-Parganas District Board spent the least percentage of their income on medical relief and primary education (both the heads being taken together) in the year 1916-17?

(b) If not, which of the other District Boards spent on both these heads a lesser percentage of their income in that year?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state if it was a fact that of all the District Boards the 24-Parganas District Board spent the least percentage of their income on medical relief and primary education (both the heads being taken together) in the year 1917-18?

(d) If not, what other District Board or Boards spent a lesser percentage of their income on both these heads in that year?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state if it was a fact that of all the other District Boards (except that of Burdwan), the 24-Parganas District Board spent the least percentage of their income on medical relief and primary education (both the heads being taken together) in the year 1918-19.

(f) If not, which of the other District Boards (except Burdwan) spent a lesser percentage on those heads in that year?

(g) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state if it was a fact that of all the other District Boards (except Burdwan), the 24-Parganas District Board spent the least percentage of their income on primary education in the year 1919-20?

(h) If not, which of the other District Boards (except Burdwan) spent a lesser percentage?

(i) If the answers to (a), (c), (e) and (g) be in the affirmative, are the Government considering the desirability of calling the attention of the 24-Parganas District Board to this?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Yes.

(b) This does not arise.

(c) No.

(d) Rajshahi, Burdwan and Jessore.

(e) Yes.

(f) This does not arise.

(g) Yes.

(h) This does not arise.

(i) The answer is in the affirmative.

Number of sales of occupancy holdings.

(a) voluntary sales by registered kabalas;

(b) sales in execution of mortgage decrees; and

(c) sales in execution of money decrees?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The information cannot be supplied. Inquiries have been made from the Inspector-General of Registration and from District Judges. Replies received show that the information required is not available from any register or returns, but would have to be collected from records and documents. This would require a special additional staff which the Government would not be justified in appointing.

Questions regarding the interpretation of the Bengal electoral rules.

8. Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: (a) With reference to the Bengal electoral rules, will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state whether any question arose regarding the interpretation of any rules, which had to be referred for decision to the Governor?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to make a statement of such questions together with the decisions made by the Governor?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) One such question was referred for decision to the Governor.

(b) A copy of the reference, together with the Governor's decision, is placed on the table.

The reference mentioned in the reply to unstarred question No. 8 (b).

Dated Calcutta, the 26th August, 1920.

From—Mr. J. G. Dunlop, I.C.S.,

To—The Additional Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Appointment (Reforms) Department.

I have the honour to invite a reference to clause 4 of Schedule II to the Bengal electoral rules prescribing the qualifications of electors for a Calcutta constituency of the Bengal Legislative Council.

Calcutta has been formed into eight constituencies, six non-Muhammadan and two Muhammadan, and whereas residence in Calcutta is a necessary qualification of an elector for any of these constituencies, clause 4, as worded, appears to afford no criterion for determining for which constituency a person, otherwise qualified is entitled to be registered as an elector.

As I apprehend, as revising authority for the Calcutta North non-Muhammadan constituency, that application may be made before me to transfer to the electoral roll of that constituency the name of a person, duly qualified, from the electoral roll of another Calcutta non-Muhammadan constituency, after deletion from the latter, I beg to request that under rule 46 of the Bengal electoral rules the correct interpretation of clause 4 of Schedule II in this matter may be given, and that it may be communicated to me at an early date.

No. 930 A.R.-D., dated Darjeeling, the 30th August, 1920.

From—H. E. Spry, Esq., I.C.S., Additional Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Appointment (Reforms) Department,

To—Mr. J. G. Dunlop, I.C.S.

I am directed to refer to your letter of the 26th instant, and to say that His Excellency the Governor is pleased, under rule 46 of the Bengal electoral rules, to direct that rule 4 of Schedule II to the rules shall be interpreted as if the words "or a place of business within the constituency" were substituted for the words "in Calcutta as defined under section 3 (7) of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1893."

I am to add that the last proviso of rule 7 (1) by which no person shall be entitled to have his name registered in the electoral roll of more than one general constituency should be borne in mind in this connection.

Bengal Secretariat establishments.

9. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing grade by grade the number of clerks in the Upper Division and also in the Lower Division and the pay attached to them in the several departments of the Bengal Secretariat including the Legislative Department, as it stood before the introduction of the Reforms and after?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether there is a Registrar in each Department as now constituted?

(c) What is the present pay of a Registrar and what are his duties?

(d) What is the number of Assistant Secretaries in the Secretariat and what pay is fixed for these posts?

(e) What are the principles on which recruitment to these posts are made?

(f) Are these posts open to Secretariat office assistants?

(g) If so, are the claims of any assistant or assistants considered when making these appointments?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): (a) A statement is laid on the table. This statement does not show the ad interim allowance, as it is drawn at different rates by different assistants and as it is only a temporary allowance pending the report of the Salaries' Committee.

(b) With the exception of the new Agriculture and Industries Department there is a Registrar in each Department as now constituted.

(c) The present pay of a Registrar in the Civil Secretariat is Rs. 600—⁵/₁₀—750. The pay of the Registrar in the Public Works Department is Rs. 475—²/₁₀—575 plus a duty allowance of Rs. 100 and free quarters as caretaker of Writers' Buildings. The pay of the Registrar, Legislative Department, is Rs. 400—²/₁₀—500, but this post will be abolished as soon as the present incumbent (now on leave) retires. A new post, Registrar of the Legislative Council, has been created in consequence of the Reforms, on a pay of Rs. 600—30—750.

The duties of the Registrars are shown in the attached statement

(d) The sanctioned number is six. The pay of the post is not fixed, but it must not exceed Rs. 800 per mensem. There are at present three Assistant Secretaries, who draw their grade pay plus Rs. 100 per mensem duty allowance.

(e) The recruitment may be made from (1) the members of the Bengal Civil Service, (2) the members of the Secretariat staff who have shown special ability and are comparatively young, and (3) outside the two sources mentioned above.

(f) Yes, vide (e) above.

(g) There is no question of any claims in connection with these appointments, and each department selects the person who seems best fitted for the post.

Statement referred to in the answer to unstarred question No. 9 (c).

Duties of the Registrars.

The Registrar is responsible for the proper management, efficiency, discipline and routine of the office, and for the prompt despatch of work. His duties are—

- (1) To see that the Rules of Business and the Secretariat Instructions are properly observed.
 - (2) To keep the Attendance Register, to see that each assistant arrives in office at 10-30 A.M., commences work promptly and does not leave before 5 P.M., or, if his work is not up to date, until permission is granted by the Head Assistant.
 - (3) To supervise constantly the work in the office and to inspect the work of each assistant, typist, etc., at least once a day by going round the office in order to see that there is no delay in the disposal of cases, in copying and despatch, in referencing and in recording, etc., that no case from another Department is unduly delayed in the Department, and that no case is unduly delayed in another Department; that the work is properly arranged and distributed, and to advise in cases of difficulty.
 - (4) To see daily that the office is clean and tidy, that the files in the Reference Section are properly arranged in the racks, that the remainder cases are kept in proper order, and generally that the work is being done without confusion.
 - (5) To see that the Secretaries' rooms are clean and tidy, properly supplied with stationery, etc., and that their books of reference are kept properly up to date, and to arrange for the supply of newspapers for the Secretaries.
 - (6) To examine the case-books showing the state of the work in the hands of the assistants when inspecting the tables, and to examine the pending lists with a view to accelerating the progress of cases.
 - (7) To see that no registers or departmental returns not prescribed by the Rules of Business or Secretariat Instructions are maintained, and that no departure from the Rules of Business or Secretariat Instructions is made without the sanction of the Under-Secretary or Assistant Secretary, or, without the sanction of all the Secretaries when this is required.
 - (8) To keep a confidential character book of the different assistants, typists etc., for the entry of any remarks which the gazetted officers may order should be entered, and to bring to the notice of the Under-Secretary or Assistant Secretary any misdemeanour or bad work done by any assistant or typist deserving notice. All breeches of discipline, errors of procedure, delay, etc., must be promptly investigated by the Registrar, who should deal with the assistant or assistants in fault directly and personally, and, should check any tendency to note at length on such matters or to introduce irrelevant questions. He also shall keep up the character rolls of assistants.

- (9) To deal with office appointments, suspensions and dismissals, leave and promotions of assistants and typists; also with the question of the accommodation of assistants in Darjeeling. All these matters must be submitted to the Under-Secretary or Assistant Secretary.
- (10) To submit every year by the 15th January at the latest all cases of assistants in the Department who will attain the age of 55, or whose extension of service after that age will expire, during the next official year, for consideration and orders whether their services should be further retained or not.
- (11) To supervise the training of probationers in the office. Head Assistants are directly responsible for such training, but the Registrar is required to satisfy himself that it is being properly given.
- (12) To deal with the appointment, leave and promotion of menial servants, and to arrange for the supply of liveries to jamadars, chaprasis and peons.
- (13) To attend to the need of the office in respect of forms, stationery and articles of furniture. To check the stock of stationery, etc., quarterly and to see that there is no waste. The Registrar has power to pass bills for contingent expenditure up to Rs. 20.
- (14) To see that all books received from the library are duly returned.
- (15) To exercise a careful supervision over recording and indexing, in the case of A Proceedings, to examine carefully the editing of the notes, and in the case of B Proceedings to see that the year for their destruction is duly and properly marked on the stiff cover.
- (16) To make a quarterly written inspection of each and every branch of the office to be put up for orders before the Under-Secretary or Assistant-Secretary.
- (17) To dispose of such routine correspondence as may be delegated to him under the written orders of the Secretary, provided that weekly printed tables showing the orders so passed shall be submitted to the Under-Secretary or Assistant Secretary before the expiration of the week following that in which the orders were passed.

The Registrar, Local Self-Government and Education Department, is in charge of, and responsible for, the library, which he inspects quarterly in the course of the usual office inspection.

The Registrar, Finance Department, is in charge of the Accounts Branch which he inspects daily.

The Registrar, Public Works Department, is in charge of—

- (a) Writer's Buildings.
- (b) Cash and pay branch, Public Works Department.

Police Courts.

10. Colonel A. J. PUGH: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department aware of the unsatisfactory way in which the work of the Police Courts is carried on?

(b) Do the Government contemplate taking any steps to improve the efficiency of the Courts with a view to the more expeditious hearing and disposal of cases?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) Yes.

(b) The question of delay in the disposal of cases in the Calcutta Police Courts is under investigation.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: Is the Calcutta Police Court subject to the supervision of the Calcutta High Court?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: Yes.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: When was the Court last inspected by a Judge of the High Court?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: That I am unable to say.

Particulars with regard to the general election of members.

11. Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: With reference to the last general election of members to the Bengal Legislative Council, will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the following :—

- (1) name of each constituency;
- (2) number of voters estimated for each constituency by the Franchise Committee;
- (3) number of actual voters for each constituency, as entered in the lists prepared by the Government;
- (4) number of voters in each constituency who actually recorded their votes;
- (5) number of candidates for election in each constituency and the amount of expenses incurred by each of them?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (1), (2) and (3) The member is referred to the answer given to unstarred question No. 39, put by Rai Harendra Nath Chaudhuri at the meeting of the Council of the 7th February last. For the constituencies not referred to in that answer no estimate of electors was made by the Franchise Committee. The number of actual voters is given in the statement furnished with reference to clause (4).

(4) and first part of (5) A statement giving the information required is placed on the table.

(5) In regard to the amount of the election expenses incurred by each candidate, the information was lodged with returning officers and will have to be collected from them. A statement will be laid on the table at a subsequent meeting.

Salary slips to Munsifs.

12. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state—

(i) whether salary slips for Rs. 300 were issued to certain Munsifs in October last, in spite of their confirmation, solely on the ground that they could not complete two years of actual service before the date of their confirmation; and if so, what is the number of such Munsifs and what are their names;

(ii) whether it is a fact that some of these officers were confirmed four years after the date of getting their first officiating appointment; and

(iii) whether the breaks in the service of all these officers were due to no fault of their own, but to the fact that as a result of the mode of appointment in vogue to the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial) an officer works for a short time and then sits idle for some time?

(b) Is it in contemplation to take into consideration the cases of these officers and to issue slips for Rs. 350 to them with effect from the date of their confirmation?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) (i) The reply to the first part of the question is in the affirmative. As regards the second part the list is laid on the table.

(ii) The period of officiating appointment after which officers are generally confirmed ranges from one to three years, but it is probable that in the case of some officers, confirmation took place four years after the first officiating appointment.

(iii) Yes.

(b) No. The salaries of the members of the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial) (Sub-Judges and Munsifs) under the time-scale were fixed according to the length of actual service rendered by each officer.

Munsifs at Bhanga, Gopalganj and Madaripur.

13. Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state—

- (i) whether there is any proposal before the Government or the Hon'ble the High Court for the removal of the Munsifi from Bhanga;
- (ii) whether any such abolition will be effected before the establishment of the Munsifi at Gopalganj; and
- (iii) whether they are considering the desirability of removing one Munsif's Court from Bhanga and another from Madaripur to Gopalganj at an early date?

(b) Whether Government are prepared to consider any offer of temporary accommodation for the Munsif's Courts and quarters at Gopalganj, if made by the public there?

(c) What is the cause of the unusual delay in preparing plans and estimates of the buildings for the proposed Munsifi at Gopalganj?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) (i) and (ii) There is no such proposal at present before the Government. But the proposal is under consideration of the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court.

(iii) Yes. This has been decided in consultation with the High Court, but the Gopalganj Munsifi cannot be opened till suitable buildings are available.

(b) If suitable court and residential buildings are offered by the public on moderate rent, Government would be prepared to consider the offer.

(c) The delay in preparing the plan and estimate is due to the difficulty of settling the price of the land to be acquired. It is understood that these have now been prepared by local officers and will be submitted to Government shortly.

Bankshall Street Police Court building.

14. Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department aware that the Southern Division Police Court building at 2, Bankshall Street, is dark, ill-ventilated, insanitary, and unsuitable for court purposes and is also unsafe?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether there is any proposal for demolishing the Bankshall Street Police Court building?

(c) If so, when do the Government intend to demolish the same?

(d) Is there any scheme for construction of a new building at 2, Bankshall Street, for accommodation of the Southern Division Police Court of Calcutta?

(c) If so, has any plan and estimate been prepared? Will the Government be pleased to lay a copy of the same on the table?

(f) Has sanction been accorded to any plan and estimate and has any provision been made for the same? If so, what is the provision?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) Yes.

(b), (c) and (d) Government propose to demolish the existing building and to erect a new one in its place. It cannot be definitely stated when the demolition will take place.

(e) and (f) No plans and estimates have yet been prepared and no provision has therefore been made in the Budget. A sum of Rs. 24,000 has however, been shown in the Budget for hiring a house for the accommodation of the courts before demolition is taken in hand.

Amount spent on the Juvenile Court.

15. Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state what sum—

(i) recurring; and

(ii) non-recurring;

was spent, during the last five years, on the Juvenile Court in Lower Circular Road in Calcutta?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: The recurring expenditure incurred on the Juvenile Court and the House of Detention during the last five years was as follows:—

				Rs.	A.	P.
1915-16	10,583	15	7
1916-17	10,193	4	2
1917-18	13,730	11	7
1918-19	13,419	1	6
1919-20	17,926	12	3

No non-recurring expenditure was incurred during these years.

Budget provision for a new Motor Car Court in Calcutta.

16. Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state what provision has been made in the Budget for 1921-22 for a new Motor Car Court in Calcutta?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: No provision has as yet been made for this in the next year's budget. The matter is still under consideration.

Alleged utilization of the services of certain professors of the Calcutta University for the Dacca University.

17. Babu NALINI NATH ROY: Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that the Dacca University authorities have availed themselves of the services of some of the professors of the Calcutta University without the permission of the Governing Body of the latter?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: I have received no complaint from the Calcutta University. The attention of the member is invited to section 50 (1) (c) of the Dacca University Act, No. XVIII of 1920, wherein it is provided that at any time after the passing of this Act and until such time as the authorities of the University shall have been duly constituted, teachers of the University shall be appointed by the Governor of Bengal after considering the recommendations of an Advisory Committee consisting of the Vice-Chancellor, the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, and such other person or persons, if any, as the Governor of Bengal thinks fit to associate with them.

Any appointments which the Chancellor of the Dacca University may have made under the authority conferred on him by the section of the Act above quoted, have presumably been made after considering the recommendations of the Committee of which the Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University is a member.

The attention of the member is also invited to section 39 of the Dacca University Act, in which it is provided that if any question arises whether any person has been duly elected or appointed as, or is entitled to be, a member of any authority or other body of the University, the matter shall be referred to the Chancellor whose decision thereon shall be final.

Provincial Medical Service and its disappointment at the revised scale of pay.

18. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MAITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether any further representation has been made by the members of the Provincial Medical Service, through the President of their Association expressing their great disappointment at the revised scale of pay?

(b) If so, do the Government propose to take any action on their representation?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The revised scale of pay was fixed after careful consideration and Government do not propose to reconsider the matter at present.

Revised scale of pay for Assistant Surgeons.

19. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MAITRA: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the revised scale of pay sanctioned for the Assistant Surgeons has been felt by them to be unsatisfactory and that they in a body pass resolutions at a meeting of the Indian Provincial Medical Service Associations held in February last praying for further improvements in their scale of pay?

(b) Do the Government intend taking any further steps regarding their pay?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The answer is in the affirmative except that the meeting was held in January and not in February.

(b) The member is referred to the reply given to unstarred question No. 18.

Discontinuance of certain traffic services by private initiative during tramway strike.

20. Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state the reasons which have induced the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, to prohibit the continuance of the motor-bus and other subsidiary traffic services, which were introduced by private initiative to meet the situation created by the recent tramway strike?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: During the tramway strike temporary and special permission was given for lorries to ply for hire with makeshift sitting accommodation. When the strike was over, the permission was withdrawn in respect of all lorries which did not conform to the rules laid down under the Motor Vehicles Act for motor omnibuses used for the conveyance of passengers. All omnibuses which are constructed in conformity with the regulations are licensed to ply for hire.

Recommendations of the Wordsworth Committee.

21. Maulvi MUHAMMAD RAFIQUE UDDIN KHAN: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education kindly lay on the table the recommendations of the Wordsworth Committee?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister kindly say from what date the recommendations of the Wordsworth Committee will be given effect to?

(c) Is it the intention of Government to give any ad-interim allowance before the recommendations of the Wordsworth Committee to the teachers of the Government schools?

(d) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister kindly say from what date?

(e) Is it a fact that it is the intention that the teachers will share the special grant ear-marked for improvement of secondary school teachers' pay?

(f) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the figures under different heads of teachers' pay, cost of building and cost of inspection, specifying travelling allowances particularly?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) The report of the Committee is being considered by Government. It is therefore not in the public interest to lay it on the table.

(b) Government are not in a position to make any definite pronouncement on the subject.

(c) The Committee's report includes a recommendation for an ad-interim allowance in the event of abnormal delay in putting into operation the main recommendations. Government propose to act upon this recommendation in the event stated.

(d) The question does not arise.

(e) The question is not understood. There is no new grant in the 1921-22 Budget for the improvement of the pay of secondary school teachers as such.

(f) The question is not explicit but reference is invited to the reports submitted annually to Government by the Director of Public Instruction.

Subordinate Services Reorganisation Committee.

22. Maulvi MUHAMMAD RAFIQUE UDDIN KHAN: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that at the last Government school teacher's conference a resolution was passed expressing discontent at the constitution of the Subordinate Services Reorganisation Committee?

(b) Is it a fact that none of the teachers were appointed to serve on the Committee?

(c) Are the Government proposing to take any action in the matter?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) Yes.

(b) The statement is correct. A member of the Subordinate Service serving in a college was, however, included in the Committee.

(c) The report of the Committee is now being considered by Government.

Murders and dacoities in Basirhat subdivision.

23. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state how many murders, dacoities, and burglaries were committed, and how many of them were detected within the subdivision of Basirhat in the district of the 24 Parganas during the term of office of the present Deputy Superintendent of Police in charge of the subdivision?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the answer to unstarred question No. 22.

	Committed.	Detected.
Murders	... 22 (a)	8
Dacoities	... 2 (b)	1
Burglaries	... 663 (c)	33

(a) Two of these cases are still under police investigation.

(b) Seven reported. One true, one still under police investigation, and five were found on enquiry to come under less serious sections of the Penal Code.

(c) Enquiry was refused in 165 cases.

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: Is it not necessary in view of such a heavy list of serious crimes to remove the officer there and place the subdivision under a better and more efficient man?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I should certainly not commit myself to an answer to that question without further inquiry.

Taxes for supplying uniforms to chaukidars and dafadars.

24. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state whether it is a fact that taxes are levied, every alternate year, from chaukidari unions for supplying uniforms to all the chaukidars and dafadars, but that the uniforms are given only to those who require them?

(b) If so, how is the surplus money dealt with?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of putting a stop to the levying of such taxes until the surplus deposit is exhausted?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) No separate tax is levied in respect of the cost of chaukidar's uniforms. The estimated annual cost of uniforms, based on the price of the articles supplied and the period for which they last, forms part of the budget estimate of the total requirements, to meet which the panchayats assess the annual chaukidari tax. Uniforms are supplied every two years.

(b) The collecting panchayats pay, by quarterly instalments from their collections, the amounts required to pay for the uniforms. An account of the uniform fund is kept by the District Magistrate. As the amount assessed is based on the actual cost of the uniforms required, no surplus usually accrues. The rules on the subject are 53 and 205 to 220 of the Chaukidari Manual.

(c) The question does not arise.

Motor-accidents to passengers getting in or coming out of tram cars.

25. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department aware that a very large number of motor accidents take place when passengers alight from or board tram cars by the sudden onrush of a motor car vehicle from behind?

(b) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of issuing orders to the owners and drivers of all such vehicles not to pass by the left side of tram cars while the latter are standing still?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) Inquiry does not show that the number of accidents that take place in this way is large.

(b) Government do not consider it necessary to issue such an order, as no hard and fast rule can govern the matter.

Naval education of Indians.

26. Babu JOGENDRA KRISHNA ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Marine Department be pleased to state whether the Committee, appointed in February last year to report about the naval education of Indians, has submitted any recommendation?

(b) If so, have the Government passed any orders yet?

(c) If not, what is the cause of delay?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to publish the findings of the Committee, together with any note that might have been submitted by any member of the Committee?

MEMBER in charge of MARINE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): (a) (b) (c) The Committee have submitted a report in which they recommend that a nautical school should not be started in Bengal at present on account of there not being sufficient ships available, which would carry Indian apprentices. They suggest that either Government or the mercantile community of Bengal should obtain one or two vessels of about 1,000 tons to be engaged in mercantile trade and constructed to carry from 15 to 20 apprentices for experimental purposes. One member of the Committee, while agreeing with these two recommendations, has submitted a separate note in which he urges that the question should not be shelved, though he admits that it will not be possible for the Government to do much in the direction of opening the career of seamen for the younger generation of Bengal unless and until there is a sufficient number of ships owned and run by Indians. Before coming to a final decision on the question of a nautical school, Government are endeavouring to ascertain, in consultation with certain Indian shipping firms, who have expressed their willingness to employ apprentices as soon as suitable arrangements can be made on their vessels, what exactly they are prepared to do in the matter, and whether the provision of theoretical education in a nautical school would be advantageous.

(d) The question of publishing the Committee's report will be considered after Government have obtained material sufficient to enable them to formulate their conclusions.

Rules for recruitment to the Provincial Judicial Service.

27. Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state whether the Government contemplate making any change in the rules for the recruitment to the Provincial Judicial Service, and, if so, will the same rules apply to candidates who have already been enrolled for admission?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: The answer to the first part of the question is in the affirmative; as regards the second part, no definite statement can be made now as the whole subject is still under consideration.

Firearms, their possession and licenses.

28. Mr. RAZAUR RAHMAN KHAN: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state in a tabular form the total number of firearms, under the different heads, of rifles, revolvers and shot-guns, possessed by different classes of people such as exempted and unexempted under the former Arms Act, from the years 1915-1920?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member also be pleased to state the total number of licenses of different kinds of firearms taken out under the present Arms Act, and the total number of firearms possessed by persons exempted from the provisions of the present Arms Act?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) A statement showing the number of licensed firearms in Bengal during 1915-19 is laid on the table.

The number of firearms in the possession of all exempted persons is not on record, as the registration of arms by exempted persons is voluntary. A statement showing the number of persons in Bengal exempted under the Arms Act and possessing arms is laid on the table.

(b) Figures relating to the administration of the Arms Act during 1920 are not yet available, as the annual reports for 1920 are not due to Government till the 1st April, 1921.

Statements referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 28.

Telegraph office at Chikandi.

29. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to say whether it is a fact that there is no telegraph office at Chikandi and that the nearest telegraph office is more than five miles away on the other side of the river which is not easily fordable during the rainy season?

(b) If so, what steps are the Government taking to remove this grievance?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): (a) There is no telegraph office at Chikandi. The nearest telegraph office is at Palong, a distance of about four miles from Chikandi.

(b) Negotiations with the Telegraph Department for opening a telegraph office at Chikandi had to be held in abeyance last year on account of the shortage of telegraphic materials. The Telegraph Department have been asked whether they are now able to undertake the work.

Water supply for the town of Tangail.

30. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the prevailing malaria in Tangail is mainly due, according to popular notion and expert opinion, to the silting up of the mouth of the river Lohajang?

(b) Is he also aware that the local public keenly feel the want of water works at Tangail and that this has seriously affected the health of the town?

(c) Is any scheme of water supply for the town of Tangail receiving the consideration of the Government?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The Director of Public Health, to whom the question was referred for opinion, reports as follows:—

Popular opinion, I believe, ascribes the increase of malaria in Tangail to the silting up of the river Lohajang, and my own opinion is that lessened inundation is responsible for it. Lessened inundation of the spill area adjacent to the river might be the cause or the result of the silting up of the stream. A change in the off-take of the stream often results in diminished inundation and this has probably occurred in the present case. Embanking the country for road and railway construction often has the same effect. Whether there has been recent interference of this kind I am unable to say.

(b) The town of Tangail needs an improved water supply, but it is for the municipality to take the initiative in the matter.

(c) No water supply scheme for the town has been submitted to Government.

Amount of road and public works cesses spent on roads and tanks in Dacca:

31. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state the amount collected annually as roads and public works cesses in the district of Dacca, the collection charges and the amounts spent annually during the last five years on roads and tanks in the district?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 31, showing the amount collected as road and public works cess, the collection charges and the amount spent on roads and tanks in the district of Dacca during the last five years.

Water works scheme for Patuakhali.

32. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware of any water-works scheme for the municipality of Patuakhali, in the district of Barisal?

(b) If so, is it a fact that the amount of the present estimate is more than double the original one?

(c) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to explain the reasons for such disproportionate difference in the estimates?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the question of pure drinking water has become vitally important for the people of the municipality of Patuakhali?

(e) Is it a fact that the Commissioner of the Dacca Division promised a grant of one-third, i.e., Rs. 12,000 of the original estimate of Rs. 37,000?

(f) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the amount of money the waterworks committee of Patuakhali has collected up till now for the purpose?

(g) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the amount of money the Government are ready to pay towards the present estimate which has risen to about Rs. 83,000?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a), (b), (c), and (d) A sketch project for the installation of a water supply scheme at Patuakhali was prepared in 1918 in view of the fact that there was a deficiency of pure drinking water, it having been found that the existing filter did not yield a sufficient supply of water and often got out of order. Its estimated cost was Rs. 27,500 and it provided for a supply of about 10,000 gallons a day with a distribution system which did not allow for house connections. A revised scheme providing for 23,000 gallons a day and for house connections, as well as a street supply was subsequently proposed, of which the estimated cost was Rs. 87,000. The municipality represented that the cost of such a scheme would be prohibitive and requested that the estimate might be reduced so as not to exceed Rs. 45,000. Under the revised scheme it would be necessary to store enough water to last for about 270 days in the year; and in view of the heavy expense involved it is thought that it would be better to sink a bore-hole and try to get water from a depth of about 400 feet. It is believed that if a supply can be obtained from a tube well, the cost would be reduced very largely. Proposals on the subject will be submitted by the Chief Engineer, Public Health Department.

(e) The answer is in the negative

(f) Rupees 21,374, including a contribution of Rs. 5,000 paid by the District Board.

(g) Government propose to meet the cost of sinking the bore-hole. Government are unable to make any promise as to a further contribution, until the results of sinking it are known and the Chief Engineer, Public Health Department, reports what the cost of the scheme will be.

Educational inspection charges of the District Boards of the 24-Parganas and Murshidabad districts.

33. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state why only in the 24-Parganas and Murshidabad District Boards the inspection charges under general head of education far exceeded the charges for maintenance and management of middle and primary schools in the year 1918-19?

(b) What was the actual expense incurred in 1919-20 under each of those heads by the abovementioned District Boards?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) A reference has been made to the Chairmen of the District Boards of Murshidabad and the 24-Parganas. The Chairman of the Murshidabad District Board reports:—

The figure shown in column 31 of Form No. III for 1918-19 includes only charges for primary schools under the direct management of the Board and not the aided schools. There are no middle schools under the direct management of this Board. The inspecting pandits have to inspect both Board schools and those aided by the Board. The charges for aided schools are shown in column 32 of Form No. III.

The Chairman of the 24-Parganas District Board reports:—

In three out of the five districts comprising the Presidency Division, excluding Calcutta, viz., the 24-Parganas, Jessore and Murshidabad, inspecting pandits are maintained for the inspection of primary schools out of the funds of the Board. The cost of inspection from the funds of the Board in these districts is therefore larger in comparison with that in the two other districts. The Sub-Inspector of Schools of this district have an unmanageable number of primary schools under their inspection. For efficiency of primary schools, the help of inspecting pandits is thus absolutely necessary.

The cost shown under the head of maintenance and management of middle and primary schools represents the amount of expenditure in these classes of schools under the direct management of the Board. The number of such schools is limited. By far a larger amount is spent on stipendiary primary schools and middle schools aided under the grant-in-aid rules. This expenditure is shown under the head of grant-in-aid and is represented by Rs. 81,499 in this district.

(b) The following figures are reported by the District Boards concerned:—

Road from Keshabpur to Panjia in Jessore.

34. Babu NALINI NATH ROY: (a) Has the attention of the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government been drawn to the deplorable condition of the road leading from Keshabpur to Panjia in Jessore?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware of the inconvenience caused thereby to the passengers and to traffic especially in the rainy season?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of taking immediate steps to metal the road?

(d) Are the Government aware that petitions have been made more than once by the people of Panjia and other villages to the District Board to better the condition of the road?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the amount annually collected from the Sadar and Narail subdivisions of Jessore as road cess and the amounts actually spent during the last five years in constructing and maintaining roads in the two subdivisions, respectively?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a), (b) and (c) A reference has been made to the Chairman of the Jessore District Board, who reports as follows:—

(i) The condition of the road is far better than that of other roads of its class in the district.

(ii) The inconvenience is common and incidental to all unmetalled roads.

(iii) The District Board cannot think of metalling the road in the near future for want of funds. There are other more important roads which cannot be metalled for want of funds.

(d) Government have no information on this point.

(e) The Chairman reports:—

As the Collector's office does not keep any separate account, to show the cess collected from a particular area, the information is not available. The following figures will show the amounts spent on roads and communications during the five years in the two subdivisions.

Pay of the health officers of local bodies.

35. Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether the Government still adhere to the promise of paying half of the pay of the health officers proposed to be appointed by local bodies, namely, the Municipalities and the District Boards?

(b) If not, is the question of the appointment of health officers be left to the discretion of those bodies themselves?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Government intend to continue to contribute half the pay of qualified Municipal Health Officers and also of District Health Officers, provided the District Boards adopt the model rules prescribing the duties of District Health Officers and pay them the rate of pay considered suitable, and also provided that the Legislative Council grants the necessary funds in the Budget from year to year.

(b) The appointment of these officers is a statutory obligation.

Municipal Commissioners to be persons residing within the municipality

36. Babu SATISH CHANDRA MUKHARJI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to say whether it is a fact that in nominating Municipal Commissioners, persons only resident within the municipality are selected?

(b) If so, is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that a departure was made in the case of Babu Chandi Charan Sur, Commissioner, Champdani Municipality, who lives in French Chandernagore?

(c) Is it the intention of Government in future to adhere strictly to the rule of appointing gentlemen as nominated Municipal Commissioners who reside within the limits of the Municipality?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The answer is in the negative.

(b) Government have no information

(c) It is proposed to issue instructions to Commissioners of Divisions that gentlemen who do not reside within municipal limits should not be nominated for appointment as Municipal Commissioners.

Rent Committee's recommendations for the development of Calcutta.

37. Colonel A. J. PUCH: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state with details what steps were taken, up to the end of December, 1920, to give effect to the recommendations of the Rent Committee appointed by the Government as published in the Supplement to the Calcutta Gazette, dated 25th February, 1920, especially with regard to the following points:—

- (i) the development of the suburbs of Calcutta;
- (ii) the acquisition of land for building purposes; and
- (iii) the improvement of internal and external communications?

(b) Has the attention of the Government been drawn to the "constructive proposals" submitted to the Government on or about the 31st March, 1920, by the Committee appointed at a meeting held at the British Indian Association rooms to consider the rent problem?

(c) if so, what steps and decisions have the Government so far taken to give effect to any of the said constructive proposals?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The following is a statement of the recommendations made by the Committee and of the action taken on each by Government:—

(1) That Government should pass an Act by which tenants liable to ejectment in Calcutta, Howrah and other suburban municipalities could have their ejectment postponed for one year.

Government were unable to accept this recommendation but introduced a Bill, which passed into law as the Calcutta Rent Act to restrict temporarily the increase of rents in Calcutta. •

(2) That Government should create a Development Board to carry out building schemes in the suburbs and acquire for the purpose a number of different areas each containing 1,000 bighas, funds being raised by loans on which Government, the Corporation and the Trust would guarantee interest.

(3) That Government should, on the recommendation of this Board, acquire land for approved building societies.

Resolution No. 84 T. M., dated the 24th May, 1920, of which a copy is laid on the table, lays down the policy of Government in the matter of acquisition of land under the Land Acquisition Act for approved building societies.

(4) That Government should establish a co-ordinating authority deal with questions affecting communications and development.

It was considered unnecessary to establish such an authority view of the existence of the Calcutta Public Works Conference which consists of representatives of Government, the Railways, the Calcutta Corporation, the Calcutta Improvement Trust, the Port Commissioner and six suburban Municipalities as well as of the officer at present discharging the duties of the Development Commissioner.

(5) That Government should make a survey of the land they hold and provide accommodation for their employees.

Enquiries have been made and a scheme for building residences on the Pora Bazaar site has been prepared, which awaits the provision of funds.

(6) That the Corporation should not license any more factories in central areas.

This recommendation was referred to the Corporation.

(7) That when Government takes up land in the city for hospitals, educational institutions or public offices, an equal area should be developed in the suburbs.

This recommendation was not accepted by Government.

(8) That the Mint should be moved to the suburbs.

The Government of India appointed a Committee to report on the advisability of removing the Mint from its present site. The Committee's report is under the consideration of that Government.

(9) That a Town Planning Act should be passed without delay.

A Bill for town planning was circulated in January last to various associations and municipalities for opinion.

(10) That Howrah and the suburban municipalities should be brought under the jurisdiction of the Corporation.

This recommendation cannot be given effect to under the existing law unless the municipalities themselves agree to their inclusion in Calcutta.

(11) That the construction of main roads to the suburbs should be pushed through by the Trust.

Letter No. ¹¹⁻⁶/₃₆, dated the 14th July, 1920, from the Chairman of the Calcutta Improvement Trust, is laid on the table.

(12) That provision should be made for crossing the import goods sorting yard to the south of Calcutta.

Government have taken up this matter with the Port Commissioner and propose to make a representation on the subject to the Railway Board as soon as the Port Commissioners' plans are received.

(13) That Government should take up the question of moving the Chitpur yard.

Government have taken up this matter with the Eastern Bengal Railway and the Railway Board. The Railway Board have stated that the proposal to remove the Chitpur yard from its present site is accepted in principle.

(14) That the suburban railway system should be extended and electrified.

(15) That tube railways should be constructed in Calcutta.

The Rent Committee's recommendations were forwarded to a Committee appointed by the Railway Board to consider a scheme for an electric railway and the best method of solving the problem of rapid transit to and from Calcutta. That latter committee's report has been published in the press.

(16) That no more tramways should be laid in narrow streets.

This recommendation was forwarded to the Calcutta Corporation for consideration.

(17) That there should be more landing stages on the river.

(18) That there should be free ferry services across the river.

The Marine Department of this Government has been in consultation with the Port Commissioners regarding these recommendations.

(19) That the construction of the new Howrah Bridge should be expedited, existing bridges improved and the further insulation of Calcutta by canals and railways checked.

As regards the Howrah Bridge Government have invited public opinion to assist them in deciding the most suitable type of bridge.

The construction of the Kidderpore Bridge over Tolly's Nullah with a broader roadway and strength enough for an up-to-date traffic has been undertaken. The Improvement Trust will undertake the reconstruction of wider bridges over the circular canal, at the Jessore and Barrackpore Road crossing, on behalf of the authorities interested.

(20) That the Grand Trunk Canal project should be expedited.

The member is referred to the speech made in the Legislative Council by the Hon'ble Sir Bijay Chand Mahtab, K.C.S.I., K.C.I.E., I.O.M., Maharajahdiraja Bahadur of Burdwan on 3rd March, 1921.

(21) That Government should appoint a special officer to enquire into the possibilities of rendering land in the outer suburbs available for building purposes.

The consideration of this recommendation has been deferred till the completion of the anti-malarial survey of the vicinity of Calcutta by an officer working under the Director of Public Health.

(b) The answer is in the affirmative.

(c) The action taken on the proposals of the Calcutta Rent Committee covered some of the proposals. No action was taken on the remainder.

Letter referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 37 (a)

No. 11-6/36, dated Calcutta, the 14th July 1920.

From—THE HON'BLE MR. F. C. FRENCH, C.S.I., I.C.S., Chairman
Calcutta Improvement Trust,

To—The Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Municipal Department

With reference to your letter No. 1116 M., dated 6th April 1920, and your subsequent reminder No. 1849 M., dated 15th June 1920, enquiring what action proposed to be taken by the Board of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta in connection with paragraph 20, Chapter VI of the Report of the Committee appointed to enquire into land values and rents in Calcutta, I have the honour to say that the Board on consideration of the matter have decided to report as follows.—

The Trust is pressing forward the construction of the great north and arterial road of Calcutta known as the Central Avenue in the north and Russia Road in the south.

In the north of the city it has already taken in hand a great East and West—the Maniktolla Spur from Central Avenue to Upper Circular Road, and this will be extended westward to the river at Jagannath Ghat as soon as the Trust undertake it.

In the south of the city broad roads in continuation of Park Street, The Road and Lower Circular Road converging in the Karaya neighbourhood are constructed and the Engineering Works will be started this autumn.

Still further south a new East and West Road, 100 feet in breadth, will run Chetla to Ballygunge Railway Station. The scheme has been sanctioned by Government and the work will be put in hand without delay.

The Trust has also agreed to undertake the reconstruction of the Canal Bridge on the Barrackpore and Dum-Dum Roads.

The above are the main projects for the improvement of communications the engaging the attention of the Trust at present.

In addition to these schemes the Trust has prepared alignments of a system of main roads in Calcutta and suburbs which have received the sanction of Government and which will in due course be converted into schemes.

It may be added that the Trust is working to the utmost limits of its financial capacity.

The Board is deferring further consideration of the question of communications pending receipt of the Report of the Committee appointed by Government specifically to deal with this subject.

Resolution referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 37 (a)

No. 84T.—M., dated Darjeeling, the 24th May 1920.

RESOLUTION—By the Government of Bengal, Municipal Department

In introducing the Calcutta Rent Bill in the Bengal Legislative Council Hon'ble the Maharajahdiraja Bahadur of Burdwan stated that Government realised that legislation for the restriction of rents was in itself not sufficient to solve the housing problem in Calcutta, and that Government were considering the adoption of further measures for the improvement of existing conditions. At present one of the chief obstacles to the expansion and development of Calcutta is the difficulty which building societies and companies experience in obtaining land and securing firm title. It was on this account that the Calcutta Rents Committee recommended that Government should utilize the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act acquire land for bodies which had been formed definitely for the provision of housing accommodation. There is evidence that private enterprise is prepared to take up housing schemes, provided that it is granted reasonable facilities for the acquisition of land, and Government have accordingly decided to accept the recommendation of the Committee and to acquire land under the Land Acquisition Act on behalf and at the cost of registered companies formed for housing purposes, whose schemes are approved by Government, so long as emergent measures are necessary for the development of Calcutta. In order to give effect to this decision, an officer will be placed on special duty, under the title of Development Commissioner, who will be required to examine the schemes put forward by private companies, to obtain full information about them and to advise Government whether land should be acquired, and, if so, upon what conditions. It will also be the duty of this officer to ascertain whether Government or any local authority or railway has proposals in view or work in hand which may affect or be affected by the building schemes proposed. For this purpose, he will be a member of the Calcutta Public Works Conference which contains representatives of Government, the Railways, the Corporation of Calcutta, the Calcutta Improvement Trust, the Port Commissioners and six suburban municipalities. Each scheme will be considered by Government on its merits and with reference to its public utility, and, if accepted by Government, such conditions will be imposed as will safeguard the interests of the public, for, while Government are of opinion that the existing shortage of houses in Calcutta and its neighbourhood justifies them in making use of the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act for the purpose of making good the deficiency in the interests of the public at large, it is equally clear to them that they would not be justified in using the Act in furtherance of speculative schemes, whose primary object is that of enriching their promoters. Pending the appointment of the special officer above referred to, applications from those desirous of having land acquired for building purposes in Calcutta or its neighbourhood should be made to the Collector of Calcutta.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: How many residences is it proposed to build on the Pora Bazaar site and which employees are they intended for?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I should like to have notice of this question as it refers to details which I am not in a position at present to place before the Council.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: Is the Government prepared to lease or sell the Pora Bazaar site if funds are not provided?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I want notice of the question.

Amounts spent on roads in the Sadar and Narayanganj subdivisions of Dacca.

38. Babu JOGENDRA NATH ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state the amount actually spent during the last ten years in constructing and maintaining roads in Sadar and Narayanganj subdivisions of the Dacca district.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: A statement is laid on the table.

(b) If both are stated to be correct, then what explanations are there for the apparently divergent figures?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) and (b) "Statement B" to which the member refers was an incomplete official statement.

note which it was not intended to include in the answer to question No. 41 asked by the member. It was printed and attached to the answer by the Legislative Department under a misapprehension. The percentage of the income of District Boards spent on medical relief and primary education is as in the statement below.

Post of the Principal of the Government Commercial Institute in Calcutta.

40. Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state—

- (i) the date on which the Government of Bengal has been pleased to represent to His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council for the appointment by the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India, of the Principal of the Government Commercial Institute in Calcutta;
- (ii) the reasons as to why the said appointment has not as yet been made; and
- (iii) when the said appointment is likely to be made?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether it is a fact that in requisitioning the services of the said Principal, knowledge of economics and experience in business has been put in as a secondary qualification for the said post, and, if so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the reasons thereof?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware of a feeling that exists that it is desirable that the Principal of the said Institute should have actual experience in business?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of submitting a fresh representation to the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India through the Government of India, requisitioning that special stress be laid upon the qualification of business experience in selecting a candidate for the said post?

(e) Is it the intention of Government to make the appointment without any further delay?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) (i) On the 9th January, 1920, the Government of Bengal addressed the Secretary of State requesting him to select a suitable officer in the United Kingdom and appoint him to the post in question.

(ii) The Secretary of State has not yet been able to recruit a suitable officer.

(iii) The Secretary of State telegraphed on 18th February, 1921, that it was unlikely that a suitable officer would be recruited by 1st April next. No further information on this point is available.

(b) The qualifications laid down by this Government for the Principal were that he should be a graduate of a British University and should have specialized in some way that will be useful to him as the head of the only Government Institution providing commercial education in an important commercial centre like Calcutta. It was stated that he should, if possible, have had experience of commercial education in Great Britain and have a knowledge of economics or have had some actual experience in business. Thus it will be seen that a knowledge of economics and experience in business is especially laid down as being the kind of qualifications that the Principal should possess.

(c) Yes.

(d) In view of the fact that actual experience in business was mentioned as a desirable qualification for the Principal in this Government's original despatch to the Secretary of State it appears unnecessary to emphasise the fact further.

(e) Government have already cabled in February, 1921, to the Secretary of State with whom the matter rests.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: May I ask when this post is likely to be filled up? It will appear that on the 9th January, 1921 on the representation of—

The PRESIDENT: You cannot make a speech.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I beg to ask further as to when the post of the Principal of Government Commercial Institute is likely to be filled up by the Secretary of State. The Board has waited for more than 12 months, but to no effect.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: Government have no information.

Inconvenience of Dacca Medical School students in coming to Calcutta to sit for the State Medical Faculty Examinations.

41. Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the Dacca Medical School students are required to come to Calcutta three times in the course of four years for the State Medical Faculty Examinations?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that this is a cause of great inconvenience to them and also involves them in heavy expenditure?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of taking steps to open a centre of examination for the State Medical Faculty in Dacca or to attach that School with the Dacca University?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The reply is in the affirmative.

(b) Government are aware that the students have to bear the expense of the journey and of temporary accommodation in Calcutta.

(c) The creation of a separate centre of examination at Dacca would entail considerable expenditure to the State Medical Faculty and in case separate examiners were selected for practical examinations at Dacca, it would affect the standard of examinations.

There is no proposal before Government to attach the Dacca Medical School to the Dacca University.

The practical portions of the higher degree examinations in science of the Calcutta University, are all held in Calcutta.

Lack of accommodation in the Dacca Medical School.

42. Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware of the lack of accommodation in the Dacca Medical School, on account of which classes are held in the open verandah?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that there is no provision for an examination hall, reading room, or waiting room, and that the demonstration classes, and post-mortem house are also congested?

(c) Is it a fact that, to remove these inconveniences, the Superintendent of the Dacca Medical School asked for the extension of the school building by the addition of a couple of rooms?

(d) If so, what action has been taken thereon?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) and (b) The answer is in the affirmative.

(c) and (d) Proposals have been submitted for the extension of the Medical School buildings at an estimated cost of Rs. 55,250. The scheme provides for an examination hall and a post-mortem building, the former of which will afford accommodation for materia medica and pathological museums and set free two class rooms. Administrative approval was given to the scheme in January, 1921, and detailed plans and estimates will now be prepared. Government propose to take up the work when funds are available, provided that the necessary grant is voted by the Legislative Council.

The appointment of a Muhammadan Income Tax Deputy Collector.

43. Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to place on the table a statement showing—

- (i) the number of gazetted, non-gazetted and ministerial officers in the Calcutta Income Tax Office; and
- (ii) the number of Muhammadans both in the permanent and temporary staff?

(b) Is it a fact that no Muhammadan has ever been appointed to the post of Income Tax Deputy Collector in Calcutta?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state when the present Deputy Collector attached to the Calcutta Income Tax Office is due to retire?

(d) Is it the intention of Government to appoint a Muhammadan Deputy Collector in the next vacancy?

(e) Are the Government considering the desirability of laying down a rule whereby gazetted officers, attached to the Calcutta Income Tax Office, will hold appointments in that office for a special period just as in other special Departments like the Settlement and Khas Mahals?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) (i) and (ii) The following statement furnishes the information:—

(b) and (d) The member is referred to the answers given to the unstarred question No. 20 asked by Mr. Razaur Rahman Khan at the meeting of the Council on the 14th March, 1921.

(c) The present Deputy Collector has been granted an extension of service for one year with effect from the 17th July, 1921.

(e) No.

Statement of agricultural demonstrators from the different communities.

44. Maulvi AZAHARUDDIN AHMED: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to lay on the table a statement of the demonstrators employed under the Agricultural Department in the following form:—

Total number of demonstrators.....

Hindus—Baidya.....

Kayastha.....

Brahmin.....

Namasudra.....

Muhammadans.....

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 44.

Total number of demonstrators.	HINDUS *				Muhammadans
	Baidya.	Kayastha.	Brahmin.	Namasudra.
79	10	24	13	4	23

* There are also five men belonging to the following castes:—Barui, Barber, Mahisya, Sudra and Sutgopa.

Percentage of Muhammadans as District Agricultural Officers.

45. Maulvi AZAHARUDDIN AHMED: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state what percentage of the District Agricultural Officers are Muhammadans?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware of a feeling that exists that a demonstrator belonging to the agricultural class would be more suitable for work of demonstration among his own people?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) About 6 per cent.

(b) Yes. It has been decided that in future young men who are practical agriculturists will be recruited for these posts. English is not essential, but they must be literate in the vernacular and have some knowledge of arithmetic. They will be trained for at least one year in practical agriculture in a farm and for another year in demonstration work.

Number of promotions of Hindus and Muhammadans in the ranks of the police service.

46. Khan Bahadur KHWAJA MOHAMED AZAM: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to lay on the table the following statistics, year by year, viz.:—

- (1) the number of inspectors promoted during the last 15 years to the rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police, and the number of Deputy Superintendents appointed direct (the number of Hindu and Muhammadan officers to be given separately);
- (2) the number of Hindu sub-inspectors promoted during the last 15 years to the rank of inspector, and the number of Mussalman sub-inspectors promoted to the same rank (in both cases, the number to be shown, district by district and range by range); and

- (iii) the number of assistant sub-inspectors promoted to the rank of sub-inspector and the number of head constables promoted to the rank of assistant sub-inspector, during 1920, district by district and range by range, and out of them how many are Hindus and how many Muhammadans?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (i), (ii) and (iii) Statements furnishing the statistics from the 1st April, 1912 (the date on which the present province of Bengal was constituted), to the 31st December, 1920, are laid on the table. As appointments to sub-inspectorships are made once a year in January, and as the rank of assistant sub-inspector was created only in April, 1920, no assistant sub-inspector was promoted to the rank of sub-inspector in that year.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 46 (i), showing—

Damage caused by the Madaripur Bil route canal.

47. Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware that the construction of a high embankment along the left bank of the Madaripur Bil route canal and that of the canal itself have had the effect of bringing a large quantity of water from the upper parts of the canal in the rainy season and of flooding large tracts of agricultural lands within the police-stations of Gopalganj, Maksudpur and Kasdani, on the right bank of the canal and of preventing the reaping of the aus crop each year?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member also aware that as a result of the construction of the canal with a high embankment on the left, many low lands on the right bank in the locality mentioned now remain under water throughout the year, and have become unfit for cultivation, though they were formerly culturable?

(c) Are any steps proposed to be taken for preventing the throwing in each year of such a large volume of water by the canal on the right bank?

(d) Is it the intention of Government to grant any compensation to the holders of agricultural lands prejudicially affected by the construction of the canal and embankment, until steps are taken to prevent the damage caused by the canal?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) and (b) Previous reports show that the construction of the bund on the south bank of the Madaripur Bil channel has not the effect suggested in these questions.

(c) and (d) The questions do not arise.

Banibhaban mess for Namasudra students.

48. Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state—

(i) whether the poor Namasudra students of the Banibhaban mess at 10, Simla Street, Calcutta, have to pay seat rent; and

(ii) whether such hostels for the depressed classes at Dacca are rent-free?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware of a feeling that exists among the boarders that they have to live under the superintendence of a man having not much sympathy with the Namasudra community?

(c) Is there any arrangement for free medical aid in the Banibhaban mess at Calcutta, and, if so, how many times has it been visited by the medical officer in the course of last year?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) (i) They pay Rs. 3 and Rs. 2 per month for upper and ground floor accommodation respectively.

(a) (ii) Yes.

(b) Complaints have been received on this score. They were considered by the Students' Residence Committee of the Calcutta University, which decided that no action was necessary.

(c) The answer to the first part of the question is "No." The second half therefore does not arise.

Statement to be made when purchasing non-judicial stamps in Faridpur.

49. Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state whether it is a fact that stamp-vendors in the district of Faridpur compel purchasers of non-judicial stamps to state the purpose for which they require such stamps?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state under what authority such a proceeding is enforced?

(c) If such authority exists, are the Government aware of the fact that persons of position feel reluctant to communicate to a stamp-vendor that they have occasion to borrow money or to transact any other business of a private character requiring a non-judicial stamp?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of ordering the discontinuance of such a practice, wherever it exists?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a), (b) and (c) Government were not previously aware of this practice, which is not authorised by any rule. The Collector of Faridpur, however, reports that it has long been the practice in that district to require the purchasers of stamps to furnish this information, which is entered by the stamp-vendor on the back of the stamped paper and in his register along with the other particulars required by rule 10 of the rules framed under section 74 of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899. The Collector thinks that the practice operates as a check against fraud and that it is in force in other districts also. In this opinion the District Judge concurs. The Collector further reports that no objection was ever raised to the practice until last July, when a Munsif at Bhānga refused to supply the information to a stamp-vendor from whom he desired to purchase a stamp for his private use.

(d) Government are consulting Commissioners as to the prevalence of the practice and as to the desirability or otherwise of maintaining it.

Public Companies.

50. Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to state—

(i) the number of public companies which have been floated each year, from 1914 to 1920;

- (ii) how many of these companies have since failed and how many of them are in existence and with what working capital;
- (iii) what were the causes of their failure;
- (iv) how many of these companies have neglected to comply with the rules under sections 101, 102, 103 and 104 of the Companies Act, 1913;
- (v) how many of these companies collapsed before raising the minimum subscription and how many of them after raising the minimum subscription;
- (vi) how many of the companies started have gone into liquidation
- (b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware of the existence of a feeling at the majority of the managing agents of these companies have never been in business before nor were they ever financially sound?
- (c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state:—
- (i) the number of companies which did not commence business;
- (ii) the total paid up capital of companies which have been wound up or otherwise dissolved;
- (iii) the number of companies:—
- (1) incorporated abroad and working in Bengal;
- (2) incorporated in Bengal and working abroad or outside Bengal;
- (iv) the annual income and expenditure of the Department of the Joint Stock Companies in Bengal?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) (i) Number of companies, public and private incorporated:—

			Limited by shares.	Limited by guarantee	Societies
1914-15	58	4	11
1915-16	69	2	15
1916-17	97	1	16
1917-18	143	4	19
1918-19	172	5	27
1919-20	514	5	13
Total	1,053	21	101

(a) (ii), (iii) and (iv) The number of the above companies that have gone into liquidation is—

			Limited by shares.	Limited by guarantee	Societies
1914-15	1
1915-16
1916-17	8
1917-18	8
1918-19	10
1919-20	7
Total	34

One thousand and nineteen companies incorporated since April, 1914 are still in existence. To give the figures of working capital would entail searching the records of 1,019 companies which would obviously take a long time. Further, private companies, a good many of which included in this number, are not required to file balance sheets. Moreover, the phrase "working capital" is indefinite.

It does not necessarily follow that a company has failed because it goes into liquidation. The three main causes of liquidation are necessity, reconstruction or amalgamation.

(a) (iv) There are no rules in existence under sections 101, 102, and 104 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913.

(a) (v) Companies shown in (a) (ii) which have collapsed:—

(b) The attention of the member is drawn to paragraphs 6, 7 and 8 of the Report of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies for the year 1919-20. It does not seem possible to make more precise inference than have been arrived at by the Registrar.

(c) (i) See answer (a) (v). As the companies there referred to did not raise the minimum subscription, it is to be presumed that they did not commence business.

(c) (ii)

Increased rate of pay of the Civil Assistant Surgeons.

51. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MAITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state the amount of money budgeted last year to provide for the increased rate of pay of the Civil Assistant Surgeons of Bengal and whether the whole amount is still available? If not, why not?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the amount of money necessary to meet the expenditure for this increased rate of pay duly sanctioned by the Secretary of State?

(c) Is it a fact that this increased rate of pay has been sanctioned by the Secretary of State for India to take effect from 1st April, 1920, only, whereas in cases of other Provincial Services, the increased rates of pay have been sanctioned from December, 1919, and in case of the Indian Medical Service from April, 1918?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the reason why this distinction has been made in the different services?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) As the member's question was received on 4th March, 1921, it is presumed that by the last year he means the year 1919-20. No budget provision was made in that year for the increased rates of pay. The sum of Rs. 1,33,000 was provided for this purpose in the Budget for 1920-21, which was raised to Rs. 2,00,000 in the revised estimate; and Rs. 2,20,000 have been provided in the Budget for 1921-22.

(b) Rs. 2,00,000 in 1920-21 and Rs. 2,20,000 in 1921-22.

(c) The answer is in the affirmative.

(d) The date, 1st April, 1920, was fixed by the Secretary of State and the local Government are not aware of his reasons for doing so.

Joint stock companies.

52. Babu JOGENDRA KRISHNA ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Department of Commerce be pleased to put a statement showing—

- (i) the total number of joint stock companies registered in Bengal during the period of two years commencing from November 1918;
- (ii) the total amount of capital which had to be utilized for development of different branches of trade, commerce and industry;
- (iii) the names of the companies which have failed to go to allotment;
- (iv) the names of companies which stipulated in the Articles of Association to go to allotment without having less than at least 25 per cent. of the share capital subscribed?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that during the company boom in Bengal a lot of people with questionable antecedents floated companies and, by sending out canvassers, induced a good many people in a hasty and unadvised manner to purchase shares?

(c) If so, are the Government thinking of taking any steps to check this evil?

(d) Are the Government considering the advisability of appointing an additional officer in the office of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies who may examine the condition of joint stock concerns periodically and thereby put a check to the misuse of the money of the public?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) (i) The total number of joint stock companies registered in Bengal during the two years from 1st November 1918 to the 31st October, 1920, is 903.

(ii) A reference is invited to Statements Nos. 2 and 4 annexed to the Annual Report of the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, Bengal, for the years 1918-19 and 1919-20. Similar information will be given in the report for the current year.

(iii) and (iv) Government do not consider that it is in the public interest to give the names of the companies in this answer.

(b) Yes.

(c) The police are investigating charges against several persons and if sufficient evidence can be obtained, they will be prosecuted.

(d) No.

Number of executive officers on judicial work and the number of additional executive officers to be required on the severance of the judicial from the executive and the local Government's correspondence on the subject.

53. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing—

(i) the number of Deputy Magistrates and Sub-Deputy Magistrates now engaged in each of the districts in Bengal and Calcutta on judicial work;

(ii) how many additional officers of the rank of Magistrates, Deputy Magistrates and Sub-Deputy Magistrates have been estimated by Government to be required approximately on adjustment of distribution of work, if the executive functions are completely severed from the judicial and the judicial portion be placed totally under the administrative jurisdiction of the High Court of Calcutta?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the local Government have had any correspondence with either the Government of India or directly with the Secretary of State for India during the last 25 years on the question of the separation of the executive from the judiciary in district administration?

(c) If they have, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the library table a copy of the whole correspondence on the subject.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The information desired could only be obtained if a definite scheme were worked out in detail and this would involve an expenditure of time and labour which Government would not be justified in undertaking unless the theoretical question assumes a more practical shape.

(b) There has been correspondence from time to time with the Government of India on the subject.

(c) The correspondence could not be published without the consent of the Government of India and, indeed, if it were to be complete, of the Secretary of State. The question has hitherto, until quite recently, been treated as an all-India one, and the publication of papers relating to it is really a matter for the consideration of the Government of India.

Inconvenience of patients in the Dacca Mitford Hospital for want of mosquito curtains and consequent spread of malaria through mosquito bites.

54. Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the patients in the Dacca Mitford Hospital suffer very great inconvenience and become exposed to the danger of developing malaria, through mosquito bites, for want of mosquito curtains?

(b) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of taking steps to provide the patients in the said hospital with mosquito curtains?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) and (b) The Superintendent of the Dacca Mitford Hospital reports that there are 200 mosquito-nets available, but that many of the patients are reluctant to use them.

Progress in the deliberations and proceedings of the Calcutta Transport Facilities Committee.

55. Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state what progress has been made in the deliberations and proceedings of the Calcutta Transport Facilities Committee appointed by the Government some time ago?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC WORKS (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): The Committee appointed by the Government of India to consider the problem of rapid transportation to and from and in Calcutta concluded its deliberations in March 1920.

The report was printed and copies were sent by the Government of India, Railway Department (Railway Board), to the public bodies interested and to the Calcutta press in August 1920.

Registration Department.

56. Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to announce the difference between the income of the Registration Department when the department was organised in 1905 and that at the present time?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to announce the amount of surplus earned by the Registration Department up to the end of 1920 or 1919?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to declare whether there is any resolution of the Government of India to the effect that the surplus earned by the Registration Department should not be absorbed by any other department?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware of the difficulties of the officers of the department in the mufassal—especially as regards housing accommodation, medical aid, education of their boys, etc.?

(e) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that since 1905 the income of the department has steadily increased?

(f) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the pay and prospects of officers of the Registration Department have not been bettered, although the pay and prospects of all other departments have been revised and improved?

(g) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to announce what portion of the surplus will be allotted in the current budget towards the revision of pay and prospects of the officers of the department so as to give full effect to the scheme as recommended by the Inspector-General of Registration, Bengal?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) In 1905 the receipts of the Registration Department amounted to Rs. 12,36,553. In 1919 they were Rs. 23,90,939.

(b) I presume that by the amount of surplus earned by the Registration Department, the member means the amount by which receipts have exceeded expenditure. The excess since 1912 when the existing Presidency of Bengal was constituted has been as follows:—

	Rs.
1912	7,29,455
1913	8,63,613
1914	7,37,179
1915	8,10,393
1916	9,64,642
1917	9,02,992
1918	6,49,598
1919	11,25,006

(c) I am not aware of any such resolution.

(d) Yes. I fear that other officers serving in the mufassal have similar difficulties.

(e) The answer is in the affirmative.

(f) and (g) The member is referred to my speech made on 15th March, 1921, in moving that the sum of Rs. 16,11,000 be granted for expenditure under the head "9—Registration."

Lack of waiting room for witnesses in Bhola Courts.

57. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department aware that there is no shelter at Bhola in the district of Bakarganj for the persons who attend the Civil and Criminal Courts as witnesses?

(b) Are the Government considering the desirability of taking steps to remove this grievance?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) Yes.

(b) Yes.

Number of Deputy Superintendents promoted to the rank Superintendent of Police.

58. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state how many Deputy Superintendents of Police have been promoted (both temporarily and permanently) to the rank of Superintendent during the last ten years and how many officers, so promoted, are Muhammadans?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Nine officers of the Ben Police service (including one Assistant Commissioner of the Calcutta Police) have been promoted permanently or substantively pro tempore to the rank of Superintendent since the 1st April, 1912, and of these three are Muhammadans.

Medical College at Chittagong.

59. Munshi AYUB ALI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware that the Chittagong public have been feeling the want of a medical college at Chittagong?

(b) What steps have the Government taken so far to establish such a college and when is it likely to be established?

(c) If not, are the Government at present considering the necessity and advisability of establishing such a college?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEE: It is presumed that the member refers to the scheme for a medical school, in regard to which a statement will be made in reply to the resolution recommending the establishment of such schools in the Rajshahi and Chittagong Divisions which is to be moved at this meeting.

Broad gauge railway line to Satkhira.

60. Babu SAILAJA NATH ROY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state whether the construction of the broad gauge railway line to Satkhira has been sanctioned?

(b) If so, when is the construction to be taken up?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) No.

(b) The question does not arise.

Principle of appointment in the Dacca University staff and the safeguard of Muhammadan interest.

61. Khan Bahadur KHWAJA MOHAMED AZAM: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state—

- (i) whether all the appointments in connection with the Dacca University staff have been made;
- (ii) whether any professors, readers and lecturers have been recruited from the two colleges of Dacca, namely, the Dacca College and Jagannath College;
- (iii) what has been the principle on which the selection has been made;
- (iv) whether the two colleges, namely, the Dacca College and the Jagannath College, have been treated alike in the matter of the selection of the staff; and
- (v) whether the Muhammadan interests of the two colleges have been safeguarded?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (i) I am informed by the Vice-Chancellor, Dacca University, that all the appointments have not yet been made.

(ii) I am informed by the Vice-Chancellor, Dacca University, that some members of the prospective Dacca University staff have been recruited from both the institutions named.

(iii), (iv) and (v) The member is referred to section 50 (1) (c) of the Dacca University Act (XVIII of 1920). According to this section at any time after the passing of this Act and until such time as the authorities of the University shall have been duly constituted, teachers of the University shall be appointed by the Governor of Bengal after considering the recommendations of an Advisory Committee, consisting of the Vice-Chancellor, the Director of Public Instruction, Bengal, and such other person or persons, if any, as the Governor of Bengal thinks fit to associate with them. The Vice-Chancellor informs me that His Excellency the Governor has added to this Committee—(1) the Hon'ble the Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda and the Vice-Chancellor, Calcutta University. The Government of Bengal has no status with regard to this Committee and the Ministry of Education is not responsible for the selections made by the Committee.

Report of the reorganisation of subordinate educational service.

62. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state when the Committee for the reorganisation of the subordinate educational service submitted their report and when the report is likely to be available to the public?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: The report is under the consideration of Government, whose decisions in the matter will be published as soon as possible.

Facilities to Muhammadan Government servants for Friday prayers.

63. SHAH SYED EMADADUL HAQ: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state whether there is any order by the Government of Bengal to allow facilities to Muhammadan Government servants to say their "Friday prayers"?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: Yes; the member is referred to the reply given to Maulvi Fazlal Karim's starred question No. XVIII at the meeting of the Council of the 21st February, 1921.

Agricultural officers for districts.

64. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state how many and which of the districts in this province have not as yet got District Agricultural Officers?

(b) When will these districts be provided with such officers?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) Every district in the province, except the Chittagong Hill Tracts, has got a District Agricultural Officer.

(b) Shortly.

Bulli bil scheme.

65. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state whether the Bulli bil scheme as prepared by the local officers can be published for public information?

(b) Does the scheme contemplate a sluice or lock gate?

(c) Will the scheme, as prepared, permit the passage of country boats throughout the channel?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR OF BURDWAN: (a) No. Because the scheme is in the rough and will require the scrutiny of, and revision by the department concerned.

(b) and (c) These questions do not arise at present for the reasons state in (a).

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: When the department has finished the scrutiny and revision contemplated in the answer to part (a) of the question, will the scheme be published for public information?

Will the answers to parts (b) and (c) of the question be given after the said scrutiny?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: I cannot promise when this scheme will be published.

Rent court cases.

66. Babu JOCENDRA KRISHNA ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to publish a statement showing—

- (a) the total number of cases decided by the Controller of Rent since the Rent Act came into operation up to end of December, 1920;
- (b) the number of cases that were decided in favour of tenants;
- (c) the number of cases that were decided in favour of the landlords;
- (d) the number of cases in which the standard rent was fixed at more than 25 per cent. of the rent paid in 1913; and
- (e) the largest number of cases conducted by any one pleader, with his name?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) 1,056.

(b) 433.

(c) 209.

The numbers shown in the replies to clauses (b) and (c) do not include 88 cases which have been sent to the Tribunal and 326 cases which have been disposed of in other ways, e.g., by amicable settlement or withdrawal.

(d) 113.

(e) One hundred and forty-three cases were conducted by Babu Hiralal Ganguli, vakil.

Expenditure on the Bangabasi defamation case.

67. Babu JOCENDRA KRISHNA ROY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department be pleased to state whether the expenditure on the case of Inspector Dwijendra Nath Ghose, of Rangpur, against the newspaper Bangabasi is being defrayed out of public money?

(b) If so, what is the reason that induced the Government to spend the public money in this particular case?

(c) What is the approximate amount that has up to date been spent on this case?

(d) From which head of the Budget is the money being defrayed?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) Yes.

(b) After inquiries made Government decided that they were justified in defraying the cost of the suit and in defending one of their officers from false charges relating to the discharge of his official duties. The suit has been decided in favour of the plaintiff, to whom damages and costs have been awarded.

(c) A sum of Rs. 90,003 has been expended up to date.

(d) The charge has been met from the budget estimate of Law and Justice under the head "Legal Remembrancer and High Court Pleaders—Fees to pleaders in criminal cases."

Projected canal from river Damodar at Panagar running from west to east.

68. Raja MANIOLL SINGH ROY: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware that the project of a canal from the river Damodar at Panagar, running from west to east, between the Damodar and the East Indian Railway, has been repeatedly pressed on the attention of Government by various public bodies and for the last time on the 9th January, 1918?

(b) How far has the project of a canal from the river Damodar at Panagar, running from east to west, between the Damodar and the East Indian Railway as a preventive measure against failure of crops during a season of insufficient rainfall advanced since the 9th January, 1918, and what would be the length of the proposed canal and what amount has been spent from the beginning up to date in its survey?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Yes.

(b) The revised Damodar canal project was submitted to the Government of India at the end of November, 1920. The length of the main canal proposed is 26.6 miles, besides branch canals and distributary channels. The expenditure on survey and investigations amounts to Rs. 8,073 only.

The Lawrence de Souza Civil Service Scholarship.

69. Mr. H. A. STARK: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of European Education be pleased to state what is the annual value of the Lawrence de Souza Civil Service Scholarship of which the Official Trustee of Bengal is administrator?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state after the lapse of how many years the said scholarship has been recently awarded?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state how many candidates made application for the said scholarship last January?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what means were adopted by the Official Trustee to give publicity to the pending award of the said scholarship?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether in awarding the said scholarship last January, the Official Trustee consulted the Director of Public Instruction, or the Inspector of European Schools, Bengal, or the Council of the Anglo-Indian and Domesticated European Association, Bengal, Limited?

(f) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what procedure was adopted by the Official Trustee, in awarding the said scholarship last January?

(g) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether as a matter of fact any rules and regulations have been framed for the guidance of the Official Trustee and the general public in the matter of the Lawrence de Souza Civil Service Scholarship, and, if not, whether Government are considering the desirability of appointing a committee to prepare a scheme for the control of the said scholarship?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT OF EUROPEAN EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) The officiating Official Trustee reports that the annual value of the Lawrence de Souza Civil Service Scholarship is Rs. 5,818-11-4, that being the income now derived from the original Fund set apart for this scholarship, together with subsequent accumulations.

(b) The Official Trustee reports that the scholarship has never been awarded, as the funds have not been sufficient to meet the purpose for which the Trust was created. The Official Trustee adds that the funds are now only barely sufficient after years of accumulation.

(c) No candidate applied for the scholarship in January last.

(d), (e) and (f) The following statement has been received from the officiating Official Trustee:—

The funds representing the bequest were made over to the Official Trustee in pursuance of an order of the High Court, dated the 15th of January 1888, since when, owing to there being no applications by would-be candidates for the benefit of the Fund, the income of the Fund has been allowed to accumulate until it has reached the present figure of Rs. 1,57,500 in Government securities. It would also seem that a further reason for the income of the Fund being allowed to accumulate was that the various incumbents of the post of Official Trustee have considered that in view of the fact that the income was not sufficient for the purpose for which the Trust was created, it should be accumulated. When, however, Mr. Kinney investigated the details of this Trust, shortly after being appointed Official Trustee, he came to the conclusion that as the income was then sufficient to enable the objects of the Trust to be carried out, he would not be justified in allowing the income to accumulate any longer. With the object of carrying out this Trust, as directed by the will of Lawrence de Souza, he entered into communication with

Mr. Pickford, who was then actively interested in the welfare of the Calcutta Domiciled Community, and with the Director of Public Instruction. Nothing material having been done, Mr. Kinney, on the 11th March, 1920, wrote to Mr. Leslie, senior member of the firm of Leslie and Hinds, the President of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Association, giving him full particulars and suggesting that an application should be made to the Court for directions since he could no longer allow the fund to remain unutilised. Further correspondence ensued, but nothing material was arrived at. Towards the end of 1920, Mr. Adcock, Principal of La Martinière School, who had been in communication with Messrs. Leslie and Hinds, urged before me the qualifications of one Vernon Cyril Prins as a boy who not only came under the designation of Anglo-Indian, but from his scholarly qualification, as well as his general character as disclosed in Mr. Adcock's letter of the 15th December last (a copy of which I enclose) was fully qualified to be awarded the scholarship. Mr. Adcock at the same time inquired if there would be any delay in making the selection as, owing to the boy's age, it was necessary he should be sent to England at once, otherwise his chances might be seriously affected. I informed Mr. Adcock that I thought that I had the power to make the selection myself, but that before doing so I would consult my solicitors, Messrs. Leslie and Hinds, which I did, and they confirmed my opinion that I had the power to make the selection. In making this selection I was fully aware that public advertisements had not been issued intimating the intended award of the scholarship, and that, had such advertisements been issued, possibly more candidates would have come forward. But it did not follow that those candidates would have been more eligible, or even as eligible as Vernon Cyril Prins. Mr. Adcock's statement in his letter "a performance which has been equalled only one other boy in India . . . and he is not a candidate for the scholarship this occasion" Had I waited to advertise and thereby delayed the selection so that it was too late for Vernon Cyril Prins to avail himself of the scholarship, I must have had no eligible candidate to select for the scholarship and I would have laid myself open to the serious charge of neglecting my duties as a trustee.

A copy of the letter referred to above from Mr. Adcock, i. e., of the 15th December, 1920, to the address of the Official Trustee of Bengal, is laid on the table.

(g) The officiating Official Trustee of Bengal reports that "no rules and regulations have been framed in connection with the selection of a candidate for this scholarship, as, under the terms of Lawrence de Souza's will, the selection was left to the executor." He, however, thinks that in order to avoid misunderstandings in the future, it would be advisable to have this done, and he proposes to take steps to have rules framed with the help of the Anglo-Indian and Domiciled European Association and other bodies representing Anglo-Indian interests. But he points out that the scheme cannot be carried into effect without the sanction of the Court.

With reference to the question generally, I desire to explain that the matter at issue is the concern of the Official Trustee of Bengal and that the Education Department of Bengal is in no way responsible for the matter. The Official Trustee of Bengal comes under the general supervision of the Judicial Department of this Government.

*Copy of the letter referred to in the reply to unstarred question
No. 69 (d), (e) and (f).*

Dated the 15th December, 1920.

From—W. R. C. ADCOCK, Esq., M.A., LL.B., BAR-AT-LAW, Principal, La Martiniere College, Calcutta,
To—The Official Trustee of Bengal, Calcutta.

With reference to the Will of the late Lawrence Augustus de Souza, I have the honour to recommend Vernon Cyril Prins, for the scholarship provided under paragraph 23 of the Will for an East Indian youth to study in England for the Indian Civil Service. The boy is an East Indian, which was the official expression for persons of mixed European and Indian blood now usually known as Anglo-Indian.

2. First, as to the boy's suitability for the Indian Civil Service if he should be successful in the competition, I may mention that he is a most efficient monitor, and for some months has been Captain of the school. In this position he has shown himself tactful and capable and a good disciplinarian, and he has exercised a particularly good influence at a very difficult time. He has also done excellent work as senior non-commissioned officer of the school contingent of the Indian Defence Force and as Captain of the Rugby Football, he is the champion swimmer of the school.

3. In the Cambridge Higher School Certificate Examination held last July, the results of which have just been announced, he passed in his group (Latin and English) and in the maximum number of subsidiary subjects (History, Logic, Physical Geography)—a performance which has been equalled by only one other boy in India, who is also at La Martiniere, and is not a candidate for the scholarship on this occasion. He has previously taken our highest prizes for English Literature and for Latin. The Cambridge Higher School Certificate Examination was instituted only three years ago and is intended for English public school boys of the age for leaving for a University. I consider therefore that this boy should have a reasonable chance of success in the open competition if he proceeds to Cambridge at once and takes the special course provided under University auspices for the I. C. S. Examination. Under the conditions recently announced he will be eligible to compete in August 1923.

Scarcity of drinking water in Manikganj and Munshiganj.

70. Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to say whether the attention of Government has been drawn to the scarcity of drinking water during the dry season in the interior villages within the subdivisions of Manikganj and Munshiganj in the district of Dacca, and if so, what steps they propose to take for providing the villagers with good and sufficient drinking water?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The Chairman of the Dacca District Board reports that the Board is doing its best to increase the number of wells and tanks so far as the resources at its command permit.

A statement is laid on the table showing the amounts spent by the District Board on water-supply in the two subdivisions during the last five years.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 70, shows the amounts spent by the Dacca District Board during the last five years on water supply.

Silting up of a khal in Bhola subdivision.

71. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware that the khal running through the subdivision of Bhola is almost silted up, causing thereby great hindrance to trade and inconvenience to the public?

(b) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of taking any steps to improve the situation in the near future?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) There is no information on the silting up of the khal running through the subdivision of Bhola.

(b) The question does not arise.

Exodus of the cultivating class from Dacca and Mymensingh to districts of Assam.

72. Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) aware of the great exodus for some time past of the cultivating class from the districts of Dacca and Mymensingh to the Goalpara and Nowgong districts of the province of Assam?

(b) Is the Hon'ble Member aware that a very large number of these people are returning in a perfectly destitute condition and attacked with black water fever and similar diseases?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state to what this exodus is due?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of having an inquiry made into this matter and of publishing the result of it for general information?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) It is a fact that for some time past there has been a considerable emigration of cultivators from parts of Dacca and Mymensingh districts to districts in the province of Assam.

(b) It is true that many emigrants return owing to black water fever and other forms of disease, and some return in a destitute condition.

(c) The emigration is due to the attractions of low rent and fertile lands in Assam.

(d) It has not been proposed to make such an inquiry.

Sale of "peshkosh jama" and the amount realised therefrom in the Midnapore district.

73. Babu SARAT CHANDRA JANAH: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state whether the Board of Revenue has issued any orders to the officer in charge of the Khas Mahal Department in the district of Midnapore to persuade the tenants to buy up the peshkosh jama of less than a rupee in value at twenty-five times its premium?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member lay a copy of the said order on the table?

(c) Is it a fact that the peshkosh jama of the value of less than a rupee is being realised by the certificate procedure?

(d) How many certificates have been issued for the realisation of the peshkosh jama in the district of Midnapore in the years 1918-19, 1919-20 and 1920-21?

(e) What is the total number of peshkosh jama that has been surrendered at a premium?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA, BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) and (b) A copy of the Board's letter No. 4050 G. E., dated the 6th December, 1917, to the address of the Commissioner of the Burdwan Division, is placed on the table. This shows that the proprietor's approval was taken in every case before commutation was made.

(c) Yes

(d) 1918-19	...	630
1919-20	...	269
1920-21	...	3,248

(e) The total number of peshkosh jamas surrendered at premium is 3,753.

Copy of the letter referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 7, and (b).

No. 4050 G. E., dated Calcutta, the 6th December 1917.

From—D. H. WARRS, Esq., I.C.S., Secretary to the Board of Revenue, Bengal.

To—The Commissioner of the Burdwan Division.

I am directed to refer to your letter No. 49 R. G., dated the 20th June 1917, subsequent correspondence, submitting a proposal, for the approval of the Board compound, with the consent of the payers, by payment of a lump sum at the rate of 25 years' purchase, the petty demands under one rupee of peshkosh due to the proprietors of the Majnamutha and Jalamutha estates in the district of Midnapore.

In reply, I am to say that the Board, in consultation with the Legal Remembrancer, accepts the proposal and directs that the proprietors' approval be obtained before carrying it into effect.

The operation of the Dacca University Act and the appointment, pay and allowance of the Vice-Chancellor.

74. Babu RISHINDRA NATH SARKAR: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether the Dacca University Act, 1920 (Act XVIII of 1920), has come into operation?

(b) Is it a fact that a Vice-Chancellor of the Dacca University has been appointed before the Dacca University Act has come into operation?

(c) If any Vice-Chancellor has been appointed, what is the rate of pay and allowance, if any?

(d) What is the estimated annual cost for maintenance of the Dacca University and what will be the maximum number of students in the said University?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) and (b) The member is referred to the Dacca University Act (XVIII of 1920). A notification in the Gazette of India directing that the Dacca University Act has come into force shall come into force has not yet been issued or in accordance with the terms of section 1 (2) of that Act. His attention is invited to the provisions contained in the above-quoted section, which runs: "Save as otherwise expressly provided herein."

The Vice-Chancellor has been appointed in accordance with section 49 of the Dacca University Act.

(c) The member is referred to the reply given to starred question No. XVIII (i) at the meeting of this Council held on the 1st April, 1921.

(d) The Vice-Chancellor has estimated the recurring expenditure for 1921-22 at Rs. 7 lakhs, but is endeavouring to reduce it in view of the amount voted by the Legislative Council. The Vice-Chancellor informs me that no maximum in regard to the number of students has been fixed at present.

Contributions for Gumti river embankment.

75. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be pleased to state—

- (i) whether any contributions will be levied on the people for the embankment of the Gumti river in the Tippera district;
- (ii) if so, from which class of person and at what rate?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN:

(i) Yes

(ii) From zamindars and tenure-holders of estates benefited under rules laid down in Part IV of the Bengal Embankment Act, II of 1882, and at rates which will be apportioned by the Collector under the provisions of that Act.

Holding of court at Bagerhat.

76. Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department aware that the Subdivisional Officer of Bagerhat holds court far into the night?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that this causes great inconvenience to parties and pleaders?

(c) What action, if any, are the Government taking in the matter?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Allegations to this effect were brought to the notice of Government last September, and the Commissioner reported that the Subdivisional Officer had been irregular in his court hours and had been warned.

Number and recruitment of Kanungoes: arrangements for their pension and increase in their pay.

77. Maulvi MUHAMMAD RAFIQUE UDDIN KHAN: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state the total number of Kanungoes in the Settlement Department in Bengal, and how many of them were recruited from the permanent and pensionable service of other departments and what arrangements have been made for their pension?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table statements showing the surplus amount in deposit after meeting the expenses of the settlement operations in the districts of Mymensingh, Faridpur, Dacca, Barisal and Chittagong?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be kind enough to say why the pay of the settlement Kanungoes has not been increased as in the case of all other departments?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) The total number of Kanungoes in the Settlement Department is 302; five were recruited from permanent and pensionable service in other departments; contributions are regularly levied from the Settlement Department for their pension.

(b) There is no surplus amount in deposit after meeting the cost of settlement operations in the districts of Mymensingh, Faridpur, Dacca, Bakarganj and Chittagong, as all recoveries under section 113 of the Bengal Tenancy Act were credited direct to the Government of India.

(c) The pay of the settlement Kanungoes was revised in 1915.

Director of Information.

78. Babu SAILAJA NATH ROY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state the special qualifications for which the present incumbent in the post of Director of Information was appointed?

(b) Was any application invited for the post?

(c) If so, when, and how?

(d) If not, why not?

(e) Is there a Director of Information in either of the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras or in any other Indian province?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) Reference is invited to "Who's Who" of 1920, an extract from which is laid on the table.

(b) No.

(c) Does not arise.

(d) It was not considered necessary.

(e) There is a whole-time officer in charge of publicity work in Bombay, Madras, Punjab, Burma, and a part-time officer in Bihar and Orissa.

Extract from "Who's Who—1920," referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 78 (a).

Proportion of nominated members on municipal boards and ballot-voting in election.

79. Babu SURENDRA NARAYAN SINHA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

(i) what will be the proportion of nominated members on the boards of the municipalities in Bengal after the Reforms have been introduced, supplanting the old practice of nomination at the proportion of one-third of the strength of such boards; and

(ii) when do the Government propose to follow in practice, either by amending the existing law or by making new rules, the suggestion given in the Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms—vide paragraph 194 ibid (page 126)?

(b) Are the Government considering the desirability of introducing the system of voting by ballot in the election of municipalities?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) (i) and (ii) The Bengal Municipal Act fixes the proportion of elected Municipal Commissioners at two-thirds, and of appointed Municipal Commissioners at one-third, and these proportions must be followed so long as the Act is in operation. It is proposed to amend the Act, and the question of reducing the proportion of appointed Commissioners will be considered in connection with its amendment.

(b) Government are considering the question.

Number of Deputy Magistrates promoted to the rank of Magistrate.

80. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state how many Deputy Magistrates have been promoted (both temporarily and permanently) to the rank of Magistrate during the last ten years, and how many of them are Muhammadans?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: Since the reconstitution of this Presidency on the 1st April, 1912, eleven Deputy Magistrates, of whom one is a Muhammadan, have been promoted permanently to the rank of Magistrate.

Excluding the eleven officers noted above, twenty-nine Deputy Magistrates, of whom three were Muhammadans, have officiated as District or Additional District Magistrates.

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: Are no more Muhammadan officers available for promotion to higher ranks?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I could not answer a general question in that form without reference to individuals.

Amount to be spent for buildings, roads, etc., in use by reserved and transferred departments.

81. Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state the amount proposed to be spent during 1921-22 on—

- (1) Original Civil Works,
- (2) Communications,
- (3) Miscellaneous Public Improvements, and
- (4) Repairs,

specially for buildings, roads, etc., in use by reserved and transferred departments?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (1) The total demand for "Original Works—Civil Buildings" is shown on page 134 of the Budget estimate to be Rs. 74,68,000. This sum is made up of—

	Rs.
(a) New Major Works—Appendix B— vide pages 62 and 63 of the Budget Review	20,05,000
(b) Minor Works grant for Civil Buildings, Rs. 5,00,000— vide page 62 of the Budget Review, from which should be deducted Rs. 25,000 for Communications, Rs. 8,000 for Miscellaneous Public Improvements and Rs. 4,000 for Irrigation, leaving	4,63,000
(c) Works in progress— vide Budget notes of 2nd March, 1921, Form B	50,00,000
Total	74,68,000

The statements referred to show the distribution under the various Departments of Government, both "reserved" and "transferred."

(2) and (3) The total demand for Original Works—Communications, is Rs. 8,25,000 and for Miscellaneous Public Improvements, Rs. 3,08,000—vide page 134 of the Budget estimate.

These demands are on behalf of the "transferred" Department of Public Works (Roads and Buildings Branch).

(4) The total demand for Repairs is Rs. 11,50,000, which is intended to meet charges for repairs and maintenance of works pertaining to both "reserved" and "transferred" departments. The detailed Repairs Budget has not been finally prepared, as the total amount available for repairs has only recently been voted by the Council.

A copy of the Repairs Budget will be placed on the library table as soon as it has been printed.

Extermment of Mr. C. R. Das from Mymensingh.

82. Rai RADHA CHARAN PAL Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department aware that a great amount of public resentment and general sensation has been provoked by the externment order served on Mr. C. R. Das, prohibiting his entrance into the headquarters station of the Mymensingh district?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the lawyers of the said district have temporarily suspended their practice, and that a considerable number of the candidates for the Matriculation examination at the Mymensingh centre have come out of their examination hall, and that a general hartal, or strike, has been observed by shop-keepers coolies and others, as a protest against the said action of the district executive?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to give the reasons and circumstances which led the Additional District Magistrate of the said district to take such a step?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what steps have been taken to allay the intense public feeling roused by this proceeding?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) The order has been criticised in various papers and on various platforms.

(b) Yes.

(c) The member is referred to the answer given to starred question No. XX.

(d) The order prohibiting Mr. Das from taking part in public meetings in Mymensingh town was cancelled by the Additional District Magistrate on the 5th March, after the conclusion of the Matriculation examination. As already stated, the order prohibiting his entry into Mymensingh had already been cancelled soon after it was served on Mr. Das. Action throughout was taken by the local officers responsible for the peace of the district; and Government do not consider any further steps are necessary.

Extermment and other orders on Mr. C. R. Das and others.

83. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state whether the Government are aware that orders under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code were served on Mr. C. R. Das and orders under sections 107 and 104 were served on Babu Manomohan Niyogi and Maulvi Tejbuddin Ahmed by the Additional Magistrate of Mymensingh during the first week of March, 1921?

(b) What was the nature and the source of information or materials on the basis of which such orders were passed?

(c) Were the orders passed with the knowledge and approval of the District Magistrate of Mymensingh or of any superior authority and with the knowledge and authority of the Government?

(d) What were the reasons for which the orders were subsequently rescinded?

(e) Is it a fact that the Calcutta High Court has held that an order similar to the one passed on Mr. C. R. Das under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code was ultra vires and illegal?

(f) Are the Government contemplating taking any action in regard to the future issue of such orders?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) Yes.

(b) and (c) Reference is invited to the answer given to starred question XX.

(d) As soon as the Matriculation examination was over the Magistrate considered that the orders were no longer necessary.

(e) The question is too vaguely framed to permit of the identification of the ruling of the High Court to which reference is apparently made.

(f) Government do not contemplate the issue of any general orders in this connection.

Status, pay and prospects of the copyists in Collectorates, Magistracies and civil courts.

84. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department, be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing the income from, and expenditure on, the copying departments of—

(i) Collectorates;

(ii) Magistracies; and

(iii) Civil Courts,

during the years 1915-16 to 1919-20?

(b) Is it a fact that copyists in the Collectorate are required to assist the Record-Keepers, besides doing the work of copying?

(c) Is it a fact that for this extra work they receive no additional remuneration?

(d) If not, why not?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the copyists are or are not regarded as ministerial officers?

(f) Was the case of the copyists placed before the Committee on the salary of ministerial officers?

(g) Has the said Committee made any recommendations regarding the copyists?

(h) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether the Government received any representation from the copyists and typists for co-opting them as regular members of the ministerial staff of the Government with graded pay, promotion and pension, etc., such as other ministerial officers enjoy?

(i) If so, what action have the Government taken or what action do they propose to take in the matter?

(j) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether any special allowance was granted to the copyists on account of high prices?

(k) If the answer to clause (e) is in the negative, are the Government considering the desirability of asking the McAlpin Committee, or appointing a new Committee to recommend measures for improving the status and remuneration of the copyists?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) The member is referred to the reply given to unstarred question No. 8 of the Hon'ble Babu Akhil Chandra Datta at the meeting of the Council on the 1st September, 1920. The figures for 1920 are not yet available.

(b) The rule is given in the Bengal Records Manual, rule 324, which is as follows:—

Copyists and typists shall be given to understand that after they have earned the minimum above stated (vernacular copyists Rs. 15 per month English copyists Rs. 25 per month and typists Rs. 50) and where no copies for which payment has been made remain to be taken in hand, their spare time will be at the disposal of Government for such unremunerative copying as may be found necessary.

(c) and (d) These questions are answered by the rule quoted above.

(e), (f) and (g) The typists and copyists are certainly ministerial officers, but their case was not referred to the Ministerial Officers' Salaries Committee as they are paid by fees and are not on the regularly paid permanent establishment. Hence the Committee made no recommendation regarding them.

(h) Yes.

(i) The matter is under consideration in consultation with the High Court.

(j) No.

(k) The member is referred to the replies to clauses (e), (f) and (g).

Litigation in districts where survey and settlement operations have been completed.

85. Babu NALINI NATH ROY: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to show in a tabular form the amount of litigation, year by year, in the districts where survey and settlement operations have been completed, from three years before the survey and settlement operations up till now?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The member is referred to the reports of the High Court on the administration of Civil and Criminal Justice.

Hostel for Moslem students of the Chittagong College.

86. Munshi AYUB ALI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to say whether the Government are aware of the fact that the Moslem students of the Chittagong College reside in a small tin shed boarding-house with bamboo walls?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that this place is unhealthy and of insufficient accommodation?

(c) Are the Government making arrangements for erecting a building on the lines of the Government Hindu Hostel of the Chittagong College, sufficient to accommodate the Moslem students of the College?

(d) If so, what have the Government done in regard to this matter up to date and when will the actual construction take place?

(e) If this matter has not been taken up previously, are the Government at present considering the desirability of building a hostel for the Moslem students of the Chittagong College?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) A reference is invited to the answer to a similar question put by the Hon'ble Khan Sahib Aman Ali at the meeting of the Legislative Council held on 22nd January, 1918. Government are aware that the hostel is a kutch house. The Principal reports it to be in no way unsatisfactory.

(b) No complaint has been made to the authorities that the hostel is unhealthy. The hostel has accommodation for 22 students, but the number in residence on 31st December, 1920, was 20. Additional accommodation for 30 students has also been provided in a house hired at a rent of Rs. 60 a month, but only 17 boarders were in residence there on 31st December, 1920.

(c) and (d) Yes. Plans and estimates for the construction of a hostel were called for in August last. Efforts will be made to finance the scheme when it is complete.

(e) The attention of the member is directed to the answers given to questions (c) and (d).

New bridge at Howrah.

87. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Marine Department be pleased to state the probable cost of the proposed new bridge at Howrah to replace the existing old one and whether it is the intention of the Government to pay any portion of the cost from public revenues?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: The cost of a new bridge at Howrah will depend on the type to be adopted, and this question has not yet been decided. Fluctuations in the cost of material make it impossible to frame any reliable estimates at present, but it has been roughly calculated that at current rates, an adequate bridge of the floating type would cost about £2,000,000 and a single-span bridge about £3,000,000. No decision has yet been come to regarding the method of financing the project.

[NOTE.—The following statement is referred to in the reply given by the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan to starred question No XI asked by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri at the meeting of the 21st February, 1921, showing the total number of appeals and petitions received and disposed of by the Board during the calendar years 1906—1920.]

Discussion of matter of urgent public importance.Grave state of affairs in regard to the Police Force.

Mr. C. W. RHODES: I ask permission of the House for an adjournment for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, that is to say, the grave state of affairs with regard to the police force as disclosed by the replies to the questions put by Mr. S. R. Das.

The PRESIDENT: This motion is in order and has not been disallowed by His Excellency the Governor under rule 22.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: May I rise to a point of order? Under section 80, sub-clause (iii), I think the motion is not in order, because it says that the motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session.

The PRESIDENT: I think this matter is not the same; when the Budget discussion took place a sum of Rs. 23,00,000 was reduced from the police budget, but here the question is to draw the attention of the House to the grave situation that has arisen from that decision. Is there any objection to leave being given for the adjournment of the house?

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: Yes.

The PRESIDENT: Those who are in favour of the motion will please stand in their seats.

The Secretary then counted the number of members standing as 35.

The PRESIDENT: As more than 30 members have risen, leave is given under section 83 of our rules; and I fix 5 o'clock to-day for the discussion.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: May I rise to a point of order? If the House is adjourned for this particular purpose, how can we proceed with the other matters?

The PRESIDENT: The regular business of the Council will be interrupted at 5 o'clock for discussing this matter. Between now and 5 o'clock we can go on with ordinary business. Mr. Rhodes has only got leave of the House to move for adjournment.

Resolutions.

(under the rules for the discussion of matters of general public interest).

Technological and Agricultural College.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government that a technological and agricultural college on the standard of the great technological colleges affiliated to the Universities of Great Britain and America granting B. Sc., M.Sc., and D.Sc. degrees affiliated to the Calcutta University and closely related to the University as in other countries, should be established at Calcutta without delay."

At the outset I must mention that the idea of industrial schools and colleges we owe to the British Government. Committee after committee has been appointed by the Government of Bengal and the Government of India to consider the question of industrial education. The last was the great Industrial Commission. I suppose Government have spent not less than Rs. 20,00,000 upon this Commission. What I now desire is that the recommendations of that Commission should be given effect to. There is no room for uninstructed opinion in this matter. The question has been discussed threadbare upon all its bearings by those Commissions and especially by the Industrial Commission. Therefore, we have only to take the conclusions of that Commission. We have also the recent University Commission, upon which a very large sum of money has been spent, and that Commission has also reported in favour of the scheme that I now propose. All that I now ask you to-day is to give effect to the recommendations of the Industrial Commission and of the University Commission and no more. The Government of India have accepted these recommendations, and now it is for you to give effect to them. If you don't you will stand condemned before the country as having played false.

Now let us see what the University Commission says after describing the results of the old Government Committee about the industrial schools and technical schools. They say:—

While, therefore, these are institutions to be encouraged and developed within the limits specified, we regard them as altogether unsatisfactory, if employed to train artisans for organised industries.

There is no one in this Council competent to question this finding of the Industrial Commission. Let us next go to the matter of technological colleges and see what they say:—

In the past the question of education of engineers has been too much influenced by the immediate requirements of the Public Works Department. Increasing attention has in recent years been paid to the provision of instruction in mechanical and electrical engineering, but the measures adopted are inadequate, and are conceived on altogether too narrow lines to meet the needs, present and prospective, of a rapidly expanding industrial system.

Then the Commission quote with approval the report of the Committee appointed by the Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers in England of 1905. Their recommendations are admirable and include training in a technical college. They recommend that for the average boy the period of college study should be three years, and at least three or four years should be spent in practical training. The Commission then recommend that provision should be made for the education of subordinates in separate institutions which not being of a university rank should be placed under the control of the Director of Industries—that is quite a different matter—and that should be done in the technical schools. Then they say:—It is urgently necessary to prepare for a higher technological training, which will provide the means whereby physical science students of all colleges affiliated to the Universities may learn to apply their knowledge to industrial uses. The simplest way of meeting their demand would be to expand the engineering colleges into technological institutes by the creation of new departments. At present they are chiefly occupied in the training of civil engineers. We have since recommended that they should make provision for the higher technical instruction of mechanical and electrical engineers, and we anticipate that the industrial expansion will justify the starting of departments of general technological chemistry which in each college and teaching University will be specialised to the extent necessary to meet at any rate the more prominent local needs. We regard it as certain that public opinion will demand that these colleges should be connected with local universities, where the students will be able to obtain University degrees."

The Commission is emphatic that industrial education should be so imparted, that it may lead to University degrees. That has nothing whatsoever to do with the training of subordinates and artisans. Not in England nor in any other country, much less in India, will the bhadralok class like to be artisans. Brahmins, Kayasthas, Vaidyas, Maulvis and Shaikhs, will not like to be artisans. We want educated people to be overseers, engineers, and chemists and without degrees and higher course that cannot be done. My hands are weak. For generations we, bhadralok, have been engaged in books and we are weak. I cannot be a mistry, but I can be an engineer. My son can be an engineer, or a chemist, but not a mistry. The Commission therefore rightly is very emphatic that there should be degree courses in India. The Commission says that this College for technological degrees should be provincial and not imperial. The Commission then contemplated the removal of Sibpur College. They say: "For some years past the removal of this College has been under consideration and Government has been reluctant to incur increased expenditure on the existing institution. I ought to tell you here that Government proposed to give Belvedere for a technological college instead of Sibpur College. The Sibpur property might be sold for several lakhs. Then the scheme would not have cost a very large sum of money. That has not yet been done. There are many Government properties, Kidderpore House, Hasting House, etc., all white elephants. But I am not concerned with the removal of Sibpur College just now; that is a matter of detail.

The recommendations of the University Commission were accepted by the Government of India. Let us see what the University Commission says. The Commission says: " . . . and we concur in the findings of the committee which was appointed by the Senate of the Calcutta University on the 13th October 1917, that it is desirable and necessary that the University should take steps to develop the teaching of agriculture, technology and commerce."

The Calcutta University only this year applied to the Government in accordance with the above recommendation for a grant to open technological and agricultural advanced classes leading to degrees. Now, Sir, the Calcutta University at a recent meeting (the report of the proceedings has been sent to me by the Vice-Chancellor and I place it before you) say that they have got the Palit Professor of Chemistry, the Ghosh Professor of Applied Mathematics, the Palit Professor of Physics, the Ghosh Professor of Chemistry, the Ghosh Professor of Physics, the Ghosh Professor of Agricultural Botany, the Ghosh Professor of Applied Physics and the Ghosh Professor of Applied Chemistry. Then they say that the authorities of the Science College have for some time past carefully prepared a programme of work for the development of technological instruction, and its outline is as follows: It is proposed to teach Applied Chemistry, Applied Physics and Applied Botany (including Agriculture). It is proposed to undertake instruction in chemistry of leather and chemistry of dyes. Besides this, it is proposed to have arrangements for practical instruction in the manufacture of sulphuric acid, glass, paper and pulp, lime, mortar and cement, sugar, soap, candles and glycerine, plants and essential oils. For these, factory appliances like disintegrators, centrifugals, filter-presses, hydraulic presses, vacuum pans, etc., would be indispensable. These would require a grant of Rs. 2,00,000 to enable the College authorities to make a good beginning. Finally, at least Rs. 40,000 would be needed for even a small laboratory for technical analysis. The amount required for the Department of Chemistry is Rs. 4,65,000. In the Department of Applied Physics, it is intended to undertake work on Applied Electricity, in the testing and standardization of instruments, in Applied Optics, (including Illumination Engineering) in Pyrometry and in Applied Thermo-Dynamics (including a study of the efficiency of different types of heat engines). An estimate of Rs. 2,00,000 is manifestly a very modest demand for so important a work. They go on further to describe their requirements, but I am a little tired and cannot read further.

Then they proposed to open agricultural classes. They say they only require land and they can do the rest. There is no reason why there should not be an agricultural college at Calcutta. It is said it is difficult to get land. There is plenty of land in the southern suburbs opposite the Tollygunge Club. I myself have got 500 bighas there and I am prepared to place it at the disposal of the University. The price to be payable when able. I shall wait for the payment of it when convenient. I cannot make a free gift of it as I am not rich enough. There is land south and east of the Regent Park property, which is much cheaper than my land. It can be had if required. All that I desire is this: that this resolution be accepted and that Government will appoint a committee to give effect to the recommendations of the University Commission and the Industrial Commission. That is all I desire. Money cannot be obtained this year; you will have to draw up a scheme, find lands bring eminent professors from England—I want the very best that is available in England. Money is not required this year. I have told you at the beginning that many Government Committees, especially the Industrial Commission, have considered every conceivable matter and I need not dilate upon it and upon the objections against the granting of degrees. There is one matter which I should like to mention. There were certain officials during the time of Sir Andrew Fraser, who, when I proposed a commission for the establishment of technological degrees, opposed it on the ground that we must have industries first and then technological education. The matter went before Sir Andrew Fraser for decision. I have his letter with me telling me that he had decided the question in my favour and that technological colleges should not wait until there are sufficient industries in the country. That settled the question, but that was a long time ago. Government then decided that the degree classes should be opened at Sibpur. I have a letter from the then Director of Public Instruction stating that the classes would open in June 1907-08. Fifteen years have elapsed and the classes have not yet opened. Will the Government tell us why?

Now, Sir, I have told you all that is material. Anybody who wants to satisfy himself, will find every objection answered by the University Commission. The greatest objection to my mind is how to find employment for these graduates. Sixteen years ago the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee and myself and six other leaders of the Indian Christian and Muhammadan communities issued a manifesto establishing the Scientific and Industrial Association, one of the objects of which was to have a technological college granting degrees. Every one of those signatories is dead. Only the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath and myself survive, and I desire very much that before we two pass away, this institute should be established. For the last 16 years we have sent about 300 boys to Europe and America and we have got D.Sc.'s by the dozen, M.Sc.'s by the score, B.Sc.'s by the hundred and a large number have got technological degrees, and these gentlemen have got employment, and very high employment. Now, Sir, this is what we Bengali bhadralok Brahmin and Kayastha, and Vaidya and respectable Muhammadans can and will do. In this work, the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda, the Hon'ble the Maharaja of Burdwan, Babu Surendra Nath Ray and other persons, whom I see here, have all co-operated, and the thanks of the country are due to them. I am sure they will help us now.

Now, Sir, we are anxious to send boys to foreign countries for industrial degrees, for we know that without degrees they cannot get employment. Throughout India and Burma, all institutions take our boys. They all want B.Sc.'s, M.Sc.'s from Glasgow, Birmingham, Manchester, Boston Polytechnique, Berlin University and other institutions. Our boys want degrees. Without them they cannot find employment and the Commission knew it very well, and they recommended that, as in England so here, there should be these degrees. There is one more matter to which I wish to refer: the days for mere literary colleges and universities are gone. There are only two now, Oxford and Cambridge of that description. Oxford has also come to have a polytechnic institute granting degrees; Cambridge alone persists in its old ways. Every two or three counties in England have got a university with technological and agricultural departments. Every state in America also has got such a University. The mainstay of a modern university is the technological department, not its literary side. Electricity, Mining, Agriculture, these are the mainstay of the universities of modern times. The old days of prose, poetry and philosophy are gone. The days of mechanical power, the power that is in electricity and other mechanical forces rule the world; other things do not count. Therefore, we must have our university moulded on the modern universities. We must have universities, but not like the ones that are being duplicated throughout India; that is mere waste of money. Let us have one university on the lines of the great universities of Europe and America. We have not even got one. Do you know the cause of the great unrest in this country? Our universities turn out clerks, pleaders and Government officials by hundreds, but thousands remain unemployed. They cry for industrial education, not for literary education. Unless and until you supply this great want this dissatisfaction will remain. Therefore, I submit that we should have a university on the lines of the great universities of Europe and America.

The PRESIDENT: The resolution that has just been moved, and the resolution that follows it, cover the same ground. I call upon Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta to move his resolution.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: This resolution, if accepted, will be provided for in the next year's Budget. To-day is the 1st of April, we are starting on a new year. This is for 1922-23. I ought to make this clear, because members may object to it, on the ground that as we are short of funds, this cannot be provided for in the year just commencing.

At first sight, my resolution looks very similar to the one moved by my friend, Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, but I hope, I shall be able to satisfy this Council, that though both of us want a technological institute in Calcutta, his views about some of the details, are, on principle, quite different from mine. First, there is the question of the agricultural college. I do not know that the great technological colleges of England and America have agricultural colleges attached to them. I must plead ignorance of American conditions, but I have some knowledge of the important technological colleges of Great Britain, and I have yet to know that the industry of agriculture forms part of these institutions. The Imperial College of Science and Technology of London, Sir John Cass's Technical Institute of Jury Street, the Great Regent Street Polytechnique, the Manchester Municipal College of Technology, the Glasgow Royal Technological College, these are the most important technological institutes of Great Britain, and I challenge my friend to say that each of these has an agricultural college attached to it. The most important agricultural colleges are situated in places like Cirencester and elsewhere, and for very good reasons. Calcutta is a large industrial city, and it is in the fitness of things that the technological institution should be established here; but as regards an agricultural college, I should think that Dacca should have the preference, first because there is already a very large agricultural farm there, which is the nucleus of a good agricultural college, and secondly, because all the activities of the Agricultural Department are, for the present, concentrated at Dacca. Is it not proper that the first agricultural college should be at Dacca? I do not say that there should not be more than one in the province, but let Dacca take the precedence in this matter and then the turn of Calcutta may come next.

As regards the granting of degrees to technological students, I must confess that I have a dread of degrees. When the B. Sc. degree was first introduced into the Calcutta University, I was an Arts Course student in the Presidency College and I envied my Scientific fellow-students on having chalked out a new path for themselves. Much water has flowed past the Hooghly since then, and now, we have the sorry spectacle of B. Sc., B. L.'s roaming away from their scientific career, drawn into the ever-widening current of the legal profession. I am really afraid of the technological graduates toying with the same tempting profession. In Great Britain, where degrees have no such peculiar charm as in Bengal, a large number of technological students are satisfied with their college certificates. They do not aspire after degrees. What is a degree after all? It is but the guinea stamp; education—practical training, that is the real gold. In this country, unfortunately, the University degree has a fascination of its own—degree for degree's sake—which is proving a source of discontent and danger; and I should prefer that the industrial students, at any rate, should keep aloof from the temptation of degrees and the mania of degree hunting.

Then I must confess, I do not understand what the Rai Bahadur means by proposing to have the technological college closely related to the Calcutta University. I have all respect for this University. I have studied in it, but I am mortally afraid of bringing an industrial institution in close relation to the academic atmosphere and financial strain of this University. The advantages of close relationship with a large university are dubious. I should like to mention the case of the Imperial College of Science of London, and ask the members of this Council to draw their own conclusions. This large institute—a technological institute—is affiliated to the London University in the sense that its students may, if they like, appear for degree examinations of that University. That is all the connection and nothing more. Lord Haldane and Sir William Ramsay, both well-known and estimable gentlemen, tried hard some years ago to bring this institute into closer relationship with the London University. The Managing Committee of this institute at once scented danger and said in effect:—"We are much obliged to the London University for its great interest in our welfare, but we should much prefer to keep our finance and management in our own hands. The London University has many big schemes in hand, if our finances get mixed up with theirs, we are afraid we may have to go to the wall." I shall not labour this point any more. I request this Council to remember that "close relationship" with the Calcutta University may not be at all a bed of roses for this newly-established technological institute.

I find that Dr. H. Suhrawardy has sent in an amendment referring the matter to a Committee. I have long heard the political maxim—that if you want to shelve a matter, refer it to a committee. We have had enough of industrial committees and commissions, and don't want any more. Nearly 20 years ago, Sir John Hewett of the United Provinces said:—"The question of technical and industrial education has been before the Government and the public for over 20 years. There is probably no subject on which more has been written or said, while less has been accomplished." That was 20 years ago, and 20 more have passed, and we are in the same position as we were before. In 1912 a committee drew up a cut and dried scheme for a technological institute in Calcutta. Has the scheme matured? Is it desirable that we should launch on fresh committees for more voluminous reports? I appeal to Dr. Suhrawardy to save us from the benefit of these committees.

To come now to my resolution, what is the sort of technological institution that I want? It seems to me that there is some confusion in some minds as to what is actually meant by technological and technical education. I have often heard technological confused with technical education. Technical education is a broad and vague term. It means education that fits a person for the practice of any handicraft, art or profession. By technological, is meant that branch of knowledge which deals with the development of industries, an education that trains the person to develop the industries of the country. The carpenter, the blacksmith, the foreman-mechanic, the engineer, have all got technical education; but the manufacturer of paper, glass, sugar, pottery, is the real technologist. These are the people who have got real technological training. All technologists have, of course, to get technical training, but all technically trained men are not technologists. As has been pointed out in the report of the Calcutta University Commission "technology must not be confused with that of training foremen and other servants of the scientific industries." I have gone into some detail regarding the matter, because our ignorance has landed us in a position of utter helplessness in the matter of the technical school that is going to be established in Calcutta.

In answer to a question put by Babu Akhil Chandra Dutta regarding technological institutions, on the 19th November, 1919, Government replied that they were determined to establish a technical school which might ultimately expand into a technological institute. And we, like ignorant people, were content with this reply. Does this Council know what this precious technical school is like? In 1919, when a scheme for a technological school was launched, an estimate of Rs. 10,00,000 was thought too much, and, in 1920, we find that for a mere technical school a sum of Rs. 8,00,000 has already been spent and more asked for in this year's Budget. What is the technical school for? This is to provide theoretical training for the apprentices of the large engineering firms in Calcutta. What are the subjects to be taught there? Drawing, Mathematics, Applied Mathematics, Heat Engines, Electro-technics and Building Construction. These very subjects have been taught at Sibpur and many other engineering colleges. What is the good of launching on a scheme of Rs. 8,00,000 or more to give some theoretical training to some apprentices of European firms in Calcutta? I should like to read out to you the syllabus of what is taught in a real technological college, the Royal Technological College of Glasgow. These are some of the subjects taught:—Sugar manufacture, Textile manufacture, Dyeing, Bleaching, Calico-printing, Boiler-making, Sheet metal work, Tanning, Watch and Clock-making, even Bread-making, and Tailoring, and a host of other real industries. This is the real technology and this is the sort of instruction that we want. This is what Glasgow teaches her children. Is it any wonder that Scotchmen take the lead in the industrial development of the world? What is this Calcutta technical school compared to this? Is it not a mere camouflage foisted on us because of our ignorance? The Calcutta evening school has been doing this work for the apprentices of these Calcutta firms for many years past. The cost to the Government for the work was very small and now, for this very work, Government is launching into a very great deal of unnecessary expense. We do not need a technical school like this; let the Sibpur College be expanded for this purpose; we want a real technological school. India is a country of vast potential possibilities with its abundant supply of raw material, and we want to develop these raw materials and build up great industries here, as is being done in every civilised country in the world. We want Indians to make themselves fit everywhere not merely as labourers, but as leaders who will turn their attention to industrial enterprise and equip themselves for the great industrial regeneration of India; that is what we want. This was a wish expressed by His Excellency Lord Chelmsford himself; but how can that wish be fulfilled if no facilities are given to equip our men and train them up as leaders of industries?

Bengal is rich in raw materials, such as vegetable seeds, bamboo, grass, straw, sugarcane, hides, clay and many other things, and I have it on the authority of one of the best Indian industrial experts—a D. Sc. of London—that the following industries may be very successfully developed here:—Vegetable oils (fixed and essential), paper, sugar, molasses, fermentation of grains, starches, tanning, pottery, glass, shellac, soap and glycerine. When there are possibilities of so many great industries, how is it that we are still lagging behind? Some years ago—I think it was in 1915—Mr. J. A. L. Swan, whom I am glad to see in this Council, wrote a report on the industrial development of Bengal and came to the conclusion that the failures in the development of the industries of Bengal were mainly due to insufficient capital and inefficient management. The question of capital is not before the Council just now, and capital is no longer so shy as before; but how can you expect to have efficient leaders of industries if you will not give us the necessary training? Mr. Swan himself has said: "I think that the encouragement from Government might take a more active form than it has hitherto done. One demonstration is more convincing than a dozen monographs." Where can such a demonstration be given, except at a technological institute? Do the members of this Council know what one single school of technology—I mean the Manchester Municipal School of Technology—has done towards the development of the industries of Manchester and Lancashire? I have heard it said that unless there are factories around, it is not possible to have successful technological institutes. I am afraid this is an argument to put the cart before the horse. I will just explain in as few words as I can, what Manchester has done, and this Council can form its own conclusions. Raw materials for the brewery industry are abundant in Lancashire, and what did the Manchester Technological School do? It established a model brewery inside the institute complete in all details:—I am quoting from the calendar of that institute, 1911-12, page 120. "The experimental brewery contains a complete model working brewery plant of about 4 bushels capacity." It is a miniature brewery showing all the details of a working brewery. If a student goes through this practical work, is it any wonder that he can found a factory and manage it with efficiency wherever he goes? Then again, Sir, we are painfully conscious of the great success of the cotton industry of Lancashire. Here is what the institute has done: "The department of cotton contains a complete plant for all the various departments of spinning and weaving." So also with paper. I am quoting again: "The institute contains a fully equipped paper-making plant." It is no use adding quotations. This great technological institute, established nearly 100 years ago, before there was any Manchester University, has, through its small model plants and factories, materially helped to develop the great industries of Lancashire. Cannot a similar thing be done in Bengal? It cannot be very difficult to establish, gradually, of course, small model plants for the manufacture of essential oils, paper, sugar, glass, etc. The technological institute may thus give a great impetus to several industries in this country. A research laboratory in this connection may greatly help the present industries, which sometimes find it difficult to get expert advice. Without coming under the control of the Calcutta University, this institute may work in co-operation with the Ghosh and Palit Science College. That will save a great deal of duplication of departments. As regards management, it may safely be left in the hands of men like Sir P. C. Ray, and some of his expert students like Dr. Hemendra Sen, practical industrialists like the Manager of the Pottery Works, the Founder Manager of the Belgachia Glass Factory, the expert of the Tannery Research Laboratory, and people of this type. It is hardly necessary to go into details.

In theory, the idea of the technological institute has been accepted by Government. As I have said before, a detailed scheme was worked out in 1912. The Calcutta University Commission has accepted the idea. In September 1919, the Secretary of State accepted the fundamental principle of the Indian Industrial Commission, that in future, Government must play an important and active part in the industrial development of the country. Why, only the other day, His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay said in his Convocation address: "I think there are some grounds for the contention that we have devoted ourselves too exclusively to letters and law . . . I desire to see education given a more practical turn."

After all this, would it be fair to delay the establishment of a technological institute? Much valuable time has already been lost. The matter cannot wait any longer. Let the scheme mature at once, and let there be ample provision for this in the next year's Budget, viz., the Budget for 1922-23.

The question of funds cannot present a very difficult problem after all. During the recent Budget discussions, it was made abundantly clear that a large amount of money had been provided by the Government of India for education, and that the money still remains unspent. This Council has also been able to effect a saving of nearly Rs. 48,00,000 from this year's Budget. Money is no consideration. It is the wish, the determination, that is wanting. Is the Government determined to do good to the people of this province? Ignorance, poverty and cowardice are the three factors that keep a nation down. Is the Government really anxious to remove these factors by providing sufficient facilities for industrial development? Let the Government answer.

Dr. HASSAN SUHRAWARDY: At the very outset I must say that I am convinced that the proposal made by the hon'ble mover will certainly benefit the public and has undoubtedly been put forward with the best of intentions, but before we embark on schemes of technological institutions, it seems highly desirable that we should first of all consider—(1) the present and future needs in technical and industrial education in the province; (2) the present position of education in Bengal, and (3) adopt a broad scheme for the best utilisation of available money, for technical and industrial education, and establish some co-ordination between the existing facilities and the future general scheme for the whole province.

Everyone knows that the proportion of Arts and Law graduates in Bengal is higher than that in the United Kingdom, although the population is very nearly the same. It is not my intention to condemn the fact of there being a large number of graduates, but what I mean is that there should be some reasonable and practical relationship between the sources of employment for such graduates and their number. We all know that one can provide easy wage-earning billets to the scientific artisans, men who have technical education, but we have not sufficient openings for those who possess high diplomas of technological branches. The Rai Bahadur has just made mention of the B.Sc.'s. by hundreds, M.Sc.'s by scores, and D.Sc.'s by dozens who have come out from various universities of Europe and America and who have got very lucrative appointments in various firms. I do not know any of them, but the Rai Bahadur may be able to give the Council facts and figures and tell how many vacancies for such appointments occur every year. It is no use flooding the country with diploma-holders whose minds and brains are full of knowledge and not providing means for their employment to meet the bread question. In this material age, plain living and high thinking are, I am afraid, merely a lofty ideal incapable of realisation which will, certainly, not remove the unrest nor ease the economical distress of the country. I recognise that at present there is a scarcity of educational pathways which lead naturally to an occupation or a profession in life. In fact if we eliminate the meagre facilities we have in this country for medical and engineering training, there is only one natural pathway that is open for earning one's bread, at least so far as Bengal is concerned, and that is the legal profession. We have heard so much of the over-crowding of the Bar in all its stages that it seems almost a waste of time to repeat it and say that the congestion should be removed by throwing open the doors leading to other walks of life. I agree that technological education has undoubtedly the potentiality of relieving this congestion. But education in Bengal is topheavy, not only because it leads, with a very few exceptions, to practically one outlet for the graduates, but very largely because the number receiving elementary and secondary education does not compare favourably with the number receiving university education. Are we going to repeat this vicious circle also with reference to technical and technological education? Let not the distant vision of the technological institutions of Europe and America so enchant us and blur our perspective as not to realise their relative position and utility.

In this country we have nothing analogous to the extramural institutions of the United Kingdom, I mean those guilds which have turned out efficient craftsmen and artisans in every department of technical industry. In the scheme for the development of education, let us aim that our teachers and young men should not be of the type whose brains are full of only theoretical knowledge, but of the type who have really worked with their hands and turned out products of commercial value in industrial undertakings by the sweat of their brow. We do not want the bhadralok class who are afraid of developing corns in their hands by honest manual labour. These are not the persons who will turn out the type of men who will be the bulwark and saviours of our future generations. The matter requires careful and patient consideration.

Now, Sir, a recommendation has been made for the establishment of a technological institution in Calcutta. Will the establishment of one particular type of institution in one particular place necessarily solve the general problem for the whole province of Bengal?

Is it not more important to have technical and vocational educational institutions, spread far and wide into every part of the province, and thereby turn out efficient artisans and craftsmen worthy of successfully taking the place of the European foremen and mechanics and thus forming the backbone of the future industrial development of the country? Is it wise to attempt at once at the very outset to establish a technological institution for conferring the higher diplomas and degrees? If funds were available, I would certainly say, have both. But we must cut our coat according to our cloth. Technical education in all its branches is the one thing that seems needful for our emancipation, for the cure of the unrest of the unemployed, and for the cure for the idle mind which is the devil's workshop.

This matter I submit should be considered very carefully before any definite steps are taken in the way of allotting money for any particular scheme for technological education. Let us consider what are the particular professions in which there are pressing demands for trained men of our own country? What are these demands at present, and what are they likely to be in the near future? We should also consider what are the facilities already in existence in the province and also what are the facilities contemplated by those in charge of this type of education. For instance, we must not forget the great scheme we have of establishing the technical school in Calcutta, in which His Excellency the Earl of Ronaldshay is taking a keen personal interest and for which land is already under acquisition in Corporation Street. Sir I would request the Council to obtain definite answers to some of the questions, before taking a decisive step. It seems desirable that it would be better to ascertain the position definitely and then to formulate a scheme on broad lines. Would it not be better to ask the Director of Industries and his Advisory Board to carefully consider and give their opinion on the general question and to put forward a scheme for general development which will cover the present, and lead up to our future needs? The Advisory Board of Industry is made up of a most happy blend of persons belonging to communities which have a genius for organization and for business acumen and of those who are gifted with imagination, idealism and education. Sir, we find in this Board, men of such great practical and business capacity, as Sir Alexander Murray, the President of the Chamber of Commerce, who, by the way, is also a Fellow of the Calcutta University; and we find the Head of the renowned engineering firm of Messrs. Burn and Co.—I mean our esteemed colleague on this Council Mr. A. Cochran, we have Rai Bahadur Onkar Mal Jettia, O.B.E., we have the father of commercial and industrial chemistry in this country, the renowned Sir P. C. Roy, and the experienced and erudite master of facts and figures, the Hon'ble Sir Nil Ratan Sircar, the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta. Besides these, we have representatives of the Indian Mining Association and others.

I do not think I shall be wrong if I call such a body a sufficiently expert one and qualified to offer opinion on industrial and educational matters.

As regards the financial position, everyone knows that the money is scarce in Bengal. Financial stringency forced the Government of Bengal not to contribute anything to the Indian Science Congress which held its sittings here early in February this year, whereas last year the small Central Provinces made the large contribution of no less than Rs. 10,000. However, different people hold different views and opinions as to the method in which whatever money is available, should be spent, but it seems undesirable to send out on ambitious schemes for the finish of a superstructure without making provision for the laying of its foundation.

The foundation should be strong and the superstructure broad based on it. The finish of a superstructure is usually the most expensive part of the job requiring as it does highly specialised skilled labour, and it seems undesirable to absorb all the available money, for some years to come, in the work of embellishment, while the foundation is neglected or is in the process of construction. The lessons which can be learnt from a study of the present situation, in what may be called a general education, ought not to be overlooked. If all the money be spent on technological education, what do we propose to do about vocational schools? What about evening classes for ambitious youths who are serving their time as apprentices in various business undertakings? What about secondary technical schools?

As a member of the Senate of the University of Calcutta, I am aware of the scheme for bringing into existence a department of technology in the Calcutta University and I have every desire of supporting in this Council any scheme for spending money on technological education. But as the money available is not unlimited, the amount which should be spent on technological education should bear a reasonable relation to the amount available for industrial and technical education, which, after all, are only steps which would naturally lead up to it and are necessary for the establishment of the higher technological education. I therefore request the hon'ble mover of the original proposition, and the Council generally to kindly consider whether it will not be a better step, a step productive of a larger outturn, a more remunerative scheme to the country, to refer the problem to the Director of Industries and his Advisory Board for an early report on the general question and for a definite scheme for consideration, before financial allotments are made for technological institutions. Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta has said just now that I am recommending the establishment of another committee which will have the fate of most committees—time will be wasted and no results obtained. I never suggested that. What I mean by my amendment is that as various committees have already given their opinions, an expert body like the Advisory Board on Industries should formulate a workable and practical scheme. The Council, after all, is not composed of experts. I hope that the hon'ble member will see his way to refer the question to the Director of Industries to draw up a practical scheme. In the meanwhile we should carry out as expeditiously as possible the scheme which is really for the establishment of a technical educational institution in Calcutta.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: A large number of committees have sat for the last 50 years to consider and report on the establishment of a technological institute in Bengal, but unfortunately no school has yet been established. We find that in January, 1878, the Government of Bengal appointed a committee to consider and report what measures it was desirable to take for the establishment of a technical school to be connected with the workshops and manufactories of the Public Works Department of the Presidency. Sir Alfred Croft proposed that the civil engineering branch of the Presidency College should be incorporated with the proposed institution, the whole forming one great technical school for the training of engineers and mechanics. Nothing, however, was done. We then find that in 1888 the Government of India issued a resolution for the industrial survey of each province. This was done in Bengal in 1890. The then Lieutenant-governor of Bengal, Sir Charles Elliott, said, on a review of the report of Mr. Collins, who had been appointed to make the survey, that the advancement of technical education was not a matter which could be pressed regardless of the demand for it or of economy. We find next that in the quinquennial review (1898-1902), Mr. Nathan admitted that the endeavours made to provide through State agency or under State control a system of technical education had met with little success. In 1905, the Association for the Advancement of Scientific and Industrial Education of Indians submitted to the Government of Bengal a proposal to establish a technical college on the lines of the Victoria Jubilee Technical Institute, Bombay. It was suggested that the college should provide for mechanical engineering, electrical engineering, spinning and weaving, sheet metal and enamel work, industrial chemistry, dyeing and paints, ceramics, silk, mining and metallurgy. The result was the opening in 1911 at the Sibpur College of classes in dyeing, and this was closed in 1916. We next find that an influential committee was appointed by Government for the establishment of a technical institute in Calcutta, and their report was published in 1913. I should mention that there was then also a proposal to abolish the Sibpur Engineering College or rather to remove it to Dacca for the training of about 20 students up to the B.E. standard. Their main recommendations were that a technological institute should be established in Calcutta, that a residential and well-equipped Civil Engineering College should be created independently of this institute, and that a mining school should be formed at some convenient centre, such as Asansol. They advised that the subjects to be taught in the technological institute should include mechanical and electrical engineering, in both higher and lower grades, civil engineering up to and including the overseer grade, textile and commercial subjects, and the chemistry required by engineering and textile students. The committee said that there was a great need for a well-equipped and up-to-date technological institute in Calcutta, and recommended that the institute should comprise the following departments :—

- Engineering.—Mechanical, electrical and civil;
- Textile fabrics.—Jute and cotton;
- Chemistry.—Engineering textile;
- Printing;
- Commerce;
- For women.—Dress-making, millinery and commerce.

They further recommended that the Calcutta Institute should prescribe its own curriculum and hold its own examinations in Civil Engineering as in other subjects.

We find in the note appended by Dr. Denning to the report of the Calcutta Technical Institute, the following short sketch of the technical and commercial education in London :—

- (a) London University includes as incorporated institutions, University Colleges, King's College, Strand and King's College, Kensington, and as incorporated "Schools of the University," Imperial College of Science and Technology (which in its turn includes Royal College of Science, Royal School of Mines, Central Technical College), Bedford College for Women, Westfield College N. W., East London College, Royal Holloway College, London School of Economics, Wye Agricultural College, London Day Training College, Five Theological Colleges, Ten medical colleges and some 16 other institutions, of which eight are London Polytechnics. At all of these, higher professional instruction is given.
- (b) In addition to assisting the University and many of its constituent institutions and schools, the London County Council aids ten semi-independent polytechnics, the Goldsmiths' College, a number of Arts Schools, and several other institutions. The students on the rolls of these institutions number over 35,000 and the annual cost to the London County Council is about £110,000. The Council maintains 17 institutions, including the Central and Camberwell Schools of Arts and Crafts, Paddington Technical Institute, Hackney Institute, School of Building, Brixton, Shorditch Technical Institute, School of Lithography, etc. These deal with nearly 12,000 students, cost £81,000, to none of which the Board of Education pays a fairly large amount. The total Board of Education grant is £52,000; also the Council runs 274 evening schools with a roll of 126,000 pupils.

- (c) Independent of London County Council aid, there are numerous institutions ranging from the City and Guilds Finsbury Technical College, the Trades Training School, Leather Trades' School, South London Technical Arts Schools, Pitman's Clerks' Colleges, etc., and a large number of small private commercial schools.

When the question of the abolition of the Sibpur Engineering College was mooted by Government in 1913, I moved a resolution in this Council that the proposal to abolish the Engineering College at Sibpur be dropped and that the said College be either retained at Sibpur, or if its present site was considered unsuitable, it be removed to a suitable site in Calcutta or its immediate vicinity, or be made a branch of the proposed technological institute in Calcutta. As a result of my moving that resolution, the Sibpur Engineering College has been retained and has been, under its energetic Principal, Mr. Heaton, considerably improved, and has now many of the branches of a technological college attached to it. We have, at present, the Electric and Mining Engineering classes. But it is necessary that there should be an independent polytechnic institute for teaching up-to-date standards of a European and American Institute.

In these days when the Arts colleges have flooded the country, when there is no suitable career open to our young boys on account of want of suitable and proper training, it is only meet and proper that Government should take early steps to give the country benefits of technical education, and that of a high standard. Government have spent a large sum of money on an industrial survey of India with a view to the industrial development of the country. There cannot be any industrial development unless we have properly trained men in the country, and there cannot be any salvation for India unless there is industrial development. You cannot hope to do it simply by foreign labour. There must be sufficient men in the country to carry out the great work of national regeneration. We are surprised and sorry to see that 50 years of labour is going to give birth to an apology for a technical institute, which to all intents and purposes would be of very little advantage to the bonâ fide children of the soil.

Motion for adjournment: The Police Force.

The PRESIDENT: As it is now 5 o'clock, we may take up the question of the adjournment of the Council; and I now call upon Mr. Rhodes to move the motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. C. W. RHODES: In view of the permission so kindly given me by the Council I do not think I require to justify my action in moving the adjournment of the House.

The answers given by Sir Henry Wheeler to Mr. Das this afternoon raise matters of very great urgency and importance, especially in regard to that supplementary question where he indicated the possibility of having to cut down the police force. I have read carefully through the account of the debate on the 17th when the police grant was reduced by Rs. 23,00,000. So far as I can see not one of the speakers suggested an immediate reduction in the numbers of the police force without adequate enquiry. The whole tone of that debate showed a reluctance to make an increased grant for police expenditure until the Council had satisfied itself that economies could be effected without the sacrifice of efficiency. I think it was the intention of the House on that occasion to vote sufficient money for the Government to carry on for the present and to vote a subsidiary grant as soon as the Council was satisfied that the increased expenditure was justified. It is quite clear from Sir Henry Wheeler's answer this afternoon, however, that the Council committed an error of judgment and that the Government cannot act on the lines which I think the House intended and which are suggested by Mr. Das in his supplementary question. It is unfortunate that this was not realised or explained to the Council at the time.

I am sorry to see that Mr. Montagu has been bombarded with questions on the subject in the Imperial Parliament. It may have been done with the best intentions, but I think this Council would prefer to work out its own salvation and may yet have to pray to be saved from its friends. We are faced with a huge deficit through no fault of our own, and in this respect we are confronted with difficulties unlike those of the other provinces. If the Council has exercised more zeal than discretion in cutting down expenditure, I think there is some excuse. There is not the slightest wish on the part of the Council to embarrass the Government or to bring about a deadlock. The persistent cry throughout the Budget debate has been for more information, and in this respect I would bear testimony, as others have done, to the readiness with which that information has been supplied. But in the limited time at our disposal we have had to vote large sums in the dark, and during the debates constant reference has been made to the need for the new standing committees which have been elected to-day. There is no doubt that the Council looks to these standing committees to protect the interests of the tax-payer and to give the Council confidence in voting away large sums of money during the Budget debates. We owe our thanks to His Excellency for the speed with which these committees have been called into existence, and I think the Council will recognise in that fact the obvious desire of His Excellency to hasten on full parliamentary government in Bengal. We have been told by the Government that under the Reform Scheme these committees have no statutory powers. We recognise this fact, but we also realise the important functions which these committees will perform. They will keep us informed both in the House and in the lobbies about the details of administration, and it is obvious that the opinion of the Council will largely be guided by what our own representatives on these committees have to tell us. But we look to these committees not only to keep us informed of the problems of the Government, but also to keep Government itself informed as to the state of feeling in this House. I hope Members and Ministers will not look askance at these committees. I can assure the Government that they are going to get more constructive assistance than destructive criticism from these new committees. Such deadlocks as the present are therefore unlikely in the future.

In regard to the necessity for an efficient police force, I think the Council has made up its mind. We have had recent evidence of the necessity for an efficient force in the out-districts, and, nearer home it has been dangerous during the past week for passengers to enter or leave Howrah station by train. I am told that our available police force has been strained to its limit protecting railway passengers. It is quite obvious, therefore, that the Council does not desire any reduction in the efficiency of the police force, rather the reverse. A reduction of Rs. 23,00,000, I may say, is equal to the salaries of 10,000 constables, and I believe that the total number of constables in Bengal, including Calcutta, is under 19,000. The matter is one of urgency, and my object in moving the adjournment is to press upon the Government the importance of asking the Council for a supplementary vote in the shortest possible time after the appointment of the standing committee. If the debate shows that my request is supported by my fellow-councillors, I sincerely trust the Government will take immediate steps to give effect to our wishes. I think we shall be prepared to pass this grant not only because the standing committee asks us to do so, but perhaps chiefly in the knowledge that this same standing committee will be watching the tax-payers' interest throughout the coming year, and, even though the full amount may be voted, the committee will still be there to suggest any economies that may be found possible without loss of efficiency.

In conclusion, may I submit to the House that we are not to-day discussing the efficiency of the police force. I know various views are held on the subject, but, whether we say that the whole force is good or that it is wholly bad, we are all unanimous in our desire that it should become the best possible force at the lowest possible cost. It is our first duty, as a Council, to assist in the maintenance of order in the province, and our equally important duty to work eventually towards a reduction in the cost of the police by co-operating to remove all factors in our social and economic life that tend to unrest and disorder.

The PRESIDENT: I wish to point out to the members that 2 hours is the limit of time for the discussion of this question, and the whole discussion has to be finished within that time.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: May I ask what the resolution is?

The PRESIDENT: There is no resolution; the only motion before the Council is that "the House do now adjourn."

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I am very sorry that my esteemed friend, Mr. Rhodes, has thought it proper to bring forward this discussion this afternoon in the Council. I may state, and I repeat what I stated on a previous occasion when this item of Rs. 23,00,000 was disallowed by the majority of the members of this Council, that if there was a recommendation by the members of the Standing Committee of Police that these items of expenditure were necessary and if the Member in charge of the Police Department were to come with a supplementary budget, we, the members of this Council, would be only too glad to pass it. That is what we distinctly said. Nothing has happened since then why our assurance given then should not be believed by Government. It is not our wish to embarrass Government or to bring about a deadlock in the administration of the country. We shall be only too glad to help Government to carry on the administration smoothly and properly, but at the same time Government ought to put some confidence upon the assurance given by the members of this Council. Under these circumstances, I would ask Mr. Rhodes to put a stop to the discussion and not to press the motion any further.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: The question of the reduction of the grant for an increased expenditure in police this year cannot be reopened under the law. You are trying to go in a roundabout way, but I am afraid the law will not allow you to do that. Section 80 is positive on this question. What is now proposed is to override section 80 by some stratagem or other. I told this Council that the Government might be assured that we were in no way inclined to put any difficulty in its way. By rejecting 165 amendments which, if carried, would have made Government impossible, we have proved our good faith. We do not desire in the least to embarrass the Government. The fact is that we were not satisfied that the increase of Rs. 23½ lakhs—an amount which took our breath away—was indispensable this year. We must be satisfied that the expenditure is indispensable in the interests of good government, order and peace; and, unless you can show that it is so, we are not inclined to pass it. Mr. Rhodes himself has just mentioned that we are faced with a huge deficit of Rs. 2½ crores. It is our bounden duty to try to economise to the utmost and to scrutinise every item of expenditure. I can quite understand that some additional amount would be necessary for the efficiency of the police, because of the higher pay which the policemen would demand by strikes and other ways. Let the Government satisfy us that the policemen require higher pay. I can say that there is not a single man in this Council who would oppose the Government. But you tell me nothing, and you only say, "Give us Rs. 23½ lakhs." Why have you not given us responsible government; why have you brought us here and why have you called us representatives of the people, if we cannot scrutinise the finances of the country? Our occupation would be gone and our places here should be vacated, if we cannot do so. I gave the assurance, and am giving the assurance again—I am not a leader in this Council, but I am only a humble person—that so far as I know me of the members, if not all, would vote for the Government, if the Government say that this amount of money was required for increased pay or such other indispensable items; and for that matter, I gave the assurance, "Satisfy the Committee and, if you find that the Committee is not satisfied, that the Committee is unreasonable and unreasonable discards or rejects the items which you think are indispensable, bring it to the House and appoint a Committee of the House—a larger Committee." And I can assure you that the members of this Council are not at all unreasonable. A few may be irreconcilable and unreasonable who oppose for opposition sake, but there are many here who do not oppose for opposition sake, but oppose for conscience sake. Satisfy them, and they will vote for you. If the Committee are unreasonable, let them come before us, and lay your case before the Council. Who is there in this Council who will not pass it? There is no such man here. Therefore, I say that the way in which Mr. Rhodes has brought this question is not the proper way. What ought to be done is this. With the next week, let the Government show before the Police Committee that they require this increased expenditure for such and such item and, if they are not satisfied, let them bring it before this Council. We should also know for what specific purposes the amount is required and, if that Committee are unreasonable and reject the Government proposals, be sure that we shall set them aside, when we are satisfied that the amount is indispensably required. We have been called here to take some part in the administration of our country, and we do not want to be led like dumb-driven cattle. We want to exercise our discretion, our own judgment. Be assured that we are not opposed to the Government, but, on the contrary, we shall help them to the best of our power when we are satisfied that the amount is required in the interest of Government. I understand that there are certain people who think that the interest of Government is not the interest of the people, but I am one of those who considers that the interest of the British Government is the interest of the people. Whenever the interest of the British Government clashes with the interest of the people, I say the rulers are wrong. I, for my part, do not wish to see any clashing of interest of the British Government with that of the people of British India. Therefore, I say, take us into your confidence, and we shall certainly be with you and will never be against you.

Babu JATINDRA NATH BASU: Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur has spoken from the point of view of an ordinary person and I desire to do the same. The reduction was asked for by a resolution consisting of one line—that the grant be reduced by a certain amount. It is impossible for an ordinary man to understand as to why there should be such reduction. Should there be a reduction simply because there has been an excess of the demand over last year's? Various circumstances may happen—the police force may require to be strengthened, new thanas may have to be opened. We do not know. The details to some extent are set out in the Budget, but not in such detail as the Council would have desired. But still the reduction was sought to be made in that off-hand manner. The Council should not have been kept in the dark. All those who wanted a reduction ought to have indicated under what heads they wanted to effect a reduction, and the Council may reasonably require some information on that point. The Council is entrusted, from the point of view of an ordinary man, to some extent with the preservation of public peace. For instance, if the executive Government are to reduce the grant for the police force in Rajshahi, there is every likelihood of more escapes of prisoners from the jail there. If the grant for the police force employed in Calcutta—in Burra Bazar, Olive Street and other business localities—be reduced, there may be opportunities for more dacoities like the recent Chartered Bank dacoity. If it is intended to reduce the traffic police in Calcutta, then we shall have to be detained for half an hour instead of for 10 to 15 minutes in some streets of Calcutta. So a reduction under these heads is not practicable. The new year commences to-day. The grant has been reduced, and if the executive Government now give effect to the reduction, what will happen? If they keep the police force at the strength at which it is contemplated to keep it, then they will have to pay the extra cost out of their own pocket, unless there is the veto. We have been told by some of the members who have already spoken that the whole thing will be placed before the Standing Committee that is going to be appointed in connection with the Police Department, as if the Police Committee carries an Aladin's lamp in their pocket, and that within three days they will be able to understand the whole question. It is a Budget of a little over a crore and a half, and to ordinary men who have to deal with figures one would think it should take months and probably years before they fully realise and understand how the reduction should be made.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: It is to be regretted that it has been thought necessary by Mr. Rhodes to bring this subject before the Council for discussion. In fact there was absolutely no necessity for this discussion. I maintain that, on the materials which the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler supplied to us when presenting the Budget, we were fully justified in thinking that the police expenditure required a drastic reduction. Most of us were new to the Council, and so it was not quite possible for us to point out definite items wherein we wanted reductions, and so we decided on a lump reduction, leaving it to the Hon'ble Member to adjust his expenses according to the grant. But most of us made it clear on that day that we were prepared to reconsider the grant if either the Government or the Police Standing Committee put further information before us or recommended any further expenses. We stick to the same position to-day, as will be apparent from the speeches made by Babu Surendra Nath Ray and Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur. I still maintain that there was absolutely no necessity for this discussion, and we are always prepared to consider any responsible proposal brought before us in a responsible manner by any responsible officer of the Government. We are not here to make the administration impossible, only what we want is more light and a little courtesy and we are always ready to help the Government. We have come here to co-operate with the Government; if non-co-operation was our ideal we could have remained outside.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I must confess that I generally agree with my esteemed friend, Mr. Rhodes, for whose opinions I had all along a very high respect. He is just opposite to me—in a word he knows more than he says and I am just the opposite. Well that does not matter much either way. But I think I can say on behalf of everybody here that we have not come here to create a deadlock. If there is any lurking suspicion in that behalf in the mind of anybody, however eminent he may be, I shall ask him to dispel that straightway from his mind. We are here as ordinary business men. We know that money is required for the expenses of the police as for our own everyday expenses in life. But there was a reason why we opposed these demands, and to my mind the principal reason was that there is a sense of want of trust that was displayed by some of the Hon'ble Members of the Government in regard to the proposed standing committees and this, taken together with the fact that the demands appear to us to be too high, particularly in a year when there was so serious a deficit and a deficit which has been threatening to be chronic and permanent, we thought it was our duty to oppose the grant. I do not agree with my hon'ble friend Mr. J. N. Basu, who thinks that we did it in an off-hand fashion. If that be his opinion, it is purely personal with him—that is not my opinion; and I do not think that that is the opinion of the other gentlemen who voted with me in this matter. Then, there is another thing that I have also got to say in this connection, that is, that if the Council gets an opportunity, if the Committee that is going to be formed gets an opportunity of considering this matter, then I have every reason to hope that the Committee will find their way to recommend, if it is explained to them how it is that we cannot do without this money. I respectfully submit that, so far as I am concerned, I have no doubt that we can place that much reliance upon our own standing committees that are going to be formed, but, if confidence is not reposed on us, if we are treated as outer barbarians who must not be permitted to know the reason of things, who must not question the reason why, who must pay because they are asked, if that is the spirit in which things are done, then I am perfectly sure there will be very little co-operation. The days of old traditions are bound to go. I do not, as I have already said, want to create any embarrassment. I have come here because I am a Moderate, not because I am something otherwise. If that were not so, I would not have come here at all. But a Moderate does not mean a sycophant, nor does moderation mean flunkeyism. We have not left our conscience behind. My own judgment I am not going to place at anybody's disposal, however high he may be. I am here to consider the matter that is placed before me and to act according to the best of my lights. Therefore, if these things are brought before us—I mean the members of the Committee—and it is explained to their satisfaction why we want Rs. 23,00,000 there is no reason why the same should not be granted. Supposing it was explained to us, “we have got so many lakhs and require Rs. 23,00,000 more. The whole amount has got to be divided by 12, but the Accountant-General cannot do it unless you say whence this Rs. 23,00,000 is to be taken out,” then we can very well realise the position. You simply say, “we demand Rs. 23,00,000 more,” and we say, “we do not understand that.” As such I respectfully submit that my view is, and I think it is the view of all those gentlemen who voted with me, that we were perfectly justified in what we did. All the same I yield to none in my desire that any deadlock that is possible must not be allowed to take place. If His Excellency the Governor be graciously of opinion that things should be done in such a way that you can tide over difficulties and go on with the work, we all bow to his decision, whatever it may be. That is the point of view from which I have to urge. I have no reason to doubt that. Myself and all my brother members will only be too glad to accept the situation that has been so eloquently moved by my esteemed friend over there.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I do not think that there is any necessity of associating my views with that of the gentlemen who have spoken before me. I am of opinion that in spite of the position we created for ourselves by the refusal of the grant it is meet and proper that we should reconsider our position, provided there are fresh materials.

I am sorry that I don't see eye to eye with some of my friends regarding the utility of these so-called standing committees, which the other day the Hon'ble the Member in charge styled as simply advisory committees. The information that the committees may be pleased to give us might be of some use to the members of this Council, and the Council as a body should be supplied with all the facts which are in possession of the Government and which we shall be perfectly at liberty to discuss and upon which we may frame our judgment. If we are satisfied certainly I think we should reconsider our decision, and should not hesitate a moment to make the grant necessary for the purpose of running the administration.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: If I have been able to read aright the meaning of the vote of reduction that was passed the other day, I think it was done on two grounds. First, as a censure on the manner in which the Department was carried on, and, secondly, as a protest against the extraordinary increase of expenditure that was being incurred from year to year. With this view in mind, I cannot congratulate Mr. Rhodes on the question that he has raised before this House to-day. His question practically amounts to this. He comes and asks the House to go back on the vote that was passed by the majority of the House only a few days ago. To rescind or to consider the question of rescinding a vote like this in the same session takes away the importance of this Council. It has been said by many members that a standing committee is being formed for this Police Department. A question like this should have come from that standing committee and not to-day from Mr. Rhodes. As regards the standing committees, I must dissociate myself from the view that has just been expressed by my friend Babu Surendra Nath Ray. He said that if the Standing Committee recommended that this expense was necessary, this Council would pass it. I cannot agree to that view. We ourselves must be satisfied that every item, every detail of the items is absolutely necessary, not to create a deadlock. Then and then only, we may reconsider the matter. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler said that the standing committee would be simply advisory boards. I think that it is the sense of the Council that the four members whom we have the pleasure to elect to-day cannot always and in all matters, represent the opinion of this House. Before I finish, I should like to add another word, the days of carrying on a high and mighty tone in this Council are gone. The angle of vision has changed. I say that this House, or any other House, cannot submit to such terms as have been used during the Budget discussions. If the Standing Committee on behalf of ourselves or on behalf of the Government come forward and say that the Government is in a difficult position and that the Police Department cannot be carried on well for want of sufficient funds, then, after satisfying itself that every particular item is absolutely necessary, this Council may reconsider this matter and not otherwise.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I do not quite understand why this motion has been brought before this House by my friend Mr. Rhodes. This item of Rs. 23,00,000, so far as I remember, represents the additional amount that was proposed to be spent over and above the expenditure last year—I mean the year ending on 31st March 1921. It was not a reduction without rhyme or reason with a view to create a deadlock in the management of the Police Department. If the management could be done in the year 1920-21 on a certain scale, that can as well as be done now. If additional amount is necessary, it must be under certain heads and it must be shown that it is impossible to go on without incurring the expenditure at once—I mean on the 1st of April. It is an ominous day. The 1st of April has some other associations with us. I do not know what we are going to do and what Mr. Rhodes is striving to take us to. If his intention is that we are to reconsider the whole thing because the information supplied to us then was not complete and upon incomplete information we did something wrong and that we must now correct our mistake and say that we should not have cut down that amount, but we must go on with the additional expenditure as proposed, I submit, Sir that would be a position—

The PRESIDENT: I must call the hon'ble member's attention to the point at issue. There seems to be some misapprehension as to the effect of the motion. If this motion is carried, it would not have the effect of restoring the grant that has been refused. It would only have the effect of drawing the attention of the Council to the serious situation that has been created by the curtailment of the demand as shown by the statement made, by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler and asking Government to take such measures as can legally be taken to meet the difficulty. Government may in another session come to the Council and ask for a supplementary grant. It is not now intended to reverse the decision of the Council; that decision cannot be reversed in this session.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I thank you, Sir, for the kind explanation. If that is the position, I am now showing that really we have not created a deadlock and immediate action is not necessary. We were not told then and we are not told even by Mr. Rhodes to-day, that an additional force of say some 10,000 constables is to be appointed at once and that if that is not done to-day, or that if to some already appointed payment is to be made, then it is a difficult situation and something ought to be done. We distinctly stated on that day that the money was not going to be appropriated for some other purpose. The money would be there. If it is necessary, if the Council is convinced that an additional sum is necessary, it would be granted. There would be no difficulty. I am sorry that the responsible advisers of His Excellency could not supply that information to His Excellency and request him to place some confidence in us. We knew then that we might be overruled, but still we did it simply because we thought it necessary, as there was a heavy deficit and we were going to encroach upon earmarked grants for special purposes of education and sanitation, and, if it can be delayed, if anyhow the expenditure can be lessened, that ought to be tried and in that view we suggested, "we grant you so much, the amount which you required for the year 1920-21. The sum over and above that if you can show us absolutely necessary, we would be very glad to grant it," but that was not accepted. There was room given for bringing forward a supplementary budget; that was not done, but simply a censure in a roundabout way, either directly or indirectly, is now being attempted to be passed upon this Council—that upon incomplete information, without taking into consideration the serious difficulties that would ensue, the demand was curtailed. We protest against that. I request Mr. Rhodes not to press the point, and ask His Excellency through his responsible advisers—Ministers and Executive Councillors—here to place some confidence upon us and to give us some reasonable data upon which we can act. It is not a thing on which as my friend Mr. Basu thinks the Standing Committee cannot in a day or two come to any conclusion. I am not relying entirely upon the Standing Committee. I do not say that the Standing Committee would be the arbiter of this affair. But the Standing Committee is composed of persons elected by us. Their existence is between the Council and the Government. They would be in a position to say what additional sum would be necessary. This can certainly be done in one or two days. Where is the special necessity of the motion? Take for instance the increment of pay. There is some proposal for granting increment of pay. That can be granted later on, and, when the grant would be made it can be made with retrospective effect. In that way the charge can be met. I do not see how it is an impossibility to carry on the police administration without the grant, and why the thing should be corrected without a moment's delay. In that view I say: "Here is a standing committee consisting of our elected members. We have some confidence in them. Let them be satisfied." If they are not amenable to reason, and are not friendly to the Government, the matter may be explained to the Council. An additional or supplementary budget may be brought forward at any moment. We do not say it should be six months hence; if necessary, it can be done at any moment, because there is ample room for it. We distinctly stated then that we were not convinced of the special necessity. If we are convinced, we will be very glad to grant any amount they require. As my friend Mr. Mullick has said, we are not for non-co-operation. We are for co-operating with the Government. If we are shown that for maintaining the efficiency and usefulness of the Police Department any additional sum is necessary, we will be very glad to grant it. We distinctly stated it then and for the information of His Excellency, through you, Sir, I reiterate the statement even now. I believe all the members will agree with me in saying this that it was not with the spirit of non-co-operation that we did it. We did it simply upon a public ground, upon a necessity which we are bound to look to first. We are not to encourage any unnecessary expenditure. A sum—a heavy sum of Rs. 23,00,000 or Rs. 24,00,000 was asked over and above the sum spent last year, and to that we objected. If we are satisfied, if we are shown that here are the things for which so much is required, if that can be explained, there would be no difficulty in getting the consent of the House. In that view I request my friend not to press the point. My friend Mr. Basu remarked that perhaps, if the grant is not given, then further convicts would escape from the Rajshahi Jail or further goondaism would be encouraged in Burra Bazar. I do not think that the members had any such idea in their mind or that they were privy to any arrangement which could bring in such a result. I have no such misgiving upon the honesty and integrity of the members. I hope my friend, Mr. Rhodes, would not press the point, and what we say now may be communicated to His Excellency, and I hope His Excellency would have some faith upon our honesty and he would wait. If he can overrule us to-day, he can overrule us a few days hence. There is no urgent necessity why he should do it immediately. I think there is no hurry about it, and my friend would not, I hope, press the point any more.

Babu JATINDRA NATH BASU: I rise to offer a personal explanation. I did not impute any dishonesty to any member of this Council. There are different ways of understanding things. I understood it in one way and my friend understood it in a different way.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: Before I speak on this subject I beg to submit that I was not present in the Council when this was discussed, so that there might not be any misapprehension on the part of my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Mullick.

The first speaker, Babu Surendra Nath Ray (he is not here now), informed us as he gave an assurance to the Members of Government, that the matter would be reconsidered by the Council, the Government should have relied on that assurance. But I do not think there is any member in this Council who can, on behalf of the non-official members, give such an assurance and ask Government to accept it. If there be any member who can do so, I hope the Government would be glad to accept it.

The next speaker, Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur, went into the question of law and said Government cannot reconsider the matter, but I beg to submit, in the first place, there is no question of reconsideration, and in the second place, there is another law which has been resorted to by His Excellency the Governor of Madras. I saw in the papers that the Governor of Madras expressed his regret for having to overrule the vote of the Council. Now His Excellency the Governor of Bengal may follow the example of His Excellency the Governor of Madras and say "I regret I am to veto the decision of the Council." I think that instead of allowing things to come to such a pass we should mend our says and do things properly and reasonably. When the demand was cut down not a single suggestion was made as to how this reduction should be carried out. Two suggestions I read in the papers had been made—one by the learned mover suggesting that honorary Inspectors may be appointed. Inspectors have to enquire into dacoity and murder cases and are to be whole-time servants; they are also to prosecute cases like trained lawyers. Are we to understand that these honorary Inspectors will be able to render whole-time and responsible service to Government? At times information comes to a thana at one in the morning that a murder had taken place; the Inspector has got to go and make an investigation, but I don't think anyone will come forward to take such an honorary post. Moreover, if that is to be done, I think the mover of the resolution will have to request his friends in the Legislative Assembly to omit Chapter IX of the Indian Penal Code which deals with the offences of taking and giving bribes to public servants. If we have to appoint honorary Inspectors, we must make sure that that chapter of the Penal Code is deleted from that book. We have also read in a paper some suggestions about reducing the pay of the European Superintendents of Police. Police Superintendents are not like compositors and printers who can be asked to go away any time. Inspectors, Europeans and Indians, Superintendents, whether European or Indian, have entered the service under certain conditions and Government cannot dispense with their services, and if that is done, they are entitled to compensation. Under the rules Government is bound to give them compensation when their services are dispensed with without any reasonable ground. Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, notwithstanding his great legal abilities, has indirectly made an admission that they made this reduction in the demand not only on the ground of the heavy deficit in the Budget, but also on the ground that there were some observations made by a certain member of Government which they did not at all like.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I did not say so. I do not think the speaker cared to follow me.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: Yes, my friend did say so during his speech and there are others, who heard him saying so. Besides these two suggestions there have been absolutely no suggestions either in this Council or outside it as to how this reduction is to be carried out, and without any such it would not be wise on the part of this Council to reduce the grant. I ask my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Mullick, if any Commissioner of the Calcutta Corporation wants to cut down a certain amount (say Rs. 5,00,000) from the current budget of the Corporation from a certain specific head, would he not ask him from what sub-heads that Commissioner wants to delete the amount. This is the most common-sense view that any reasonable man who has got any idea of administration would take. If we do something simply because a certain gentleman made certain observations which we did not like we would not be doing the right thing. If you want to help Government, help them without any prejudice and without any feeling.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: We came to the conclusion the other day upon some materials which were before the House in regard to the police budget. Every item of the budget was examined and we came to the deliberate conclusion that the amount of Rs. 23,00,000 should be deleted as being unnecessary and extravagant. To-day we are virtually asked to reconsider our decision, and upon what materials? If upon the same materials, we need not go into the subject again; if upon fresh materials, then that is a different matter. In no way can it be argued that we, the members of this responsible body, have treated the subject lightly. On the contrary, we have thought over the matter and, after considering the claims of economy in the expenditure on this subject, we, the non-official members of the Council, came to the unanimous conclusion that this amount represented a very large sum and was consequently disallowed. Is there any gentleman in this House who would come forward and say that we have not acted rightly or without any sense of responsibility? If he says so, I would say to him deliberately, unequivocally and unhesitatingly that he is perfectly wrong. No body of public men ever thought over a matter so deliberately as we have done. Our mission in this House is to co-operate with the Government and to help the Government with advice in matters of difficulty; and we are prepared to discuss this question again if new light is thrown on it, but in the absence of such a factor I do not know what useful purpose is served by this fresh question. I am not raising a question of law, because I am submitting that it is my avowed object to assist the Government as much as possible and to wipe off the deficit—huge deficit as it has been rightly called. We are appointing committees to see if retrenchment can be effected in Government expenditure and I am of opinion that inasmuch as the new Standing Committee on Police has been elected to-day, let us not take up this question again, but wait for their recommendations which will, I have no doubt, be of great assistance to us as well to Government.

Mr. HUSEYN SHAHEED SUHRAWARDY: This Council is not a platform for displaying cheap sentiment, or for earning cheap popularity or for indulging in cheap oratory. To-day we are discussing a question of considerable constitutional importance, and it is up to us to consider it with all caution and deliberation, to feel that we are here as responsible members elected by the public to serve the interests of the public.

Mr. Rhodes does not carry us very far in his motion for the adjournment of the House. His adjournment barely amounts to nothing more than an expression of opinion on our part that perhaps we have done our work in pointing out to Government that the increased expenditure on the police is not agreeable to us; we have done our work in eliciting information from Government as to the reasons that have led them to subscribe to this increased expenditure. I would go further even than Mr. Rhodes in my appreciation of the gravity of the crisis with which we are confronted and at a very grave risk, I appeal to those members of the Council who think—and I know there are some who think the same as I do—that if they have done a wrong they must come forward and redress that wrong. It is not beneath our dignity, as it is not beneath the dignity of an honourable gentleman, to come forward and acknowledge mistakes once committed. I think we shall rise in our own estimation and in that of others if we are strong enough to come forward and declare publicly that at one time or another we did not know sufficiently when we voted in a particular manner. At this stage of our political existence we are far too young in western politics to identify ourselves with any party, to subscribe to any irresponsible programme, and this is just the time when we can act according to our conscience, and I feel that if we do act according to our conscience, we shall have the approbation of the public and the satisfaction of having done our duty.

At this stage the Council adjourned for 15 minutes

After the adjournment.

Mr. AJAY CHUNDER DUTT: I am afraid some members of this Council are labouring under a misapprehension. So far as I could understand, Mr. Rhodes did not desire us to-day to reconsider our position. All that he really asked us was that we should keep an open mind; nothing more than that. There is no question that the Budget was not understood by a very large number of members. I, for one, could not follow the Budget in every detail and I am sure there were others in my position, and I think I am right in stating this because some of the members who spoke during that discussion, said that they were willing to make a supplementary grant if a proper case were made out. It seems to me that these members were not quite certain that they were acting rightly in reducing the grant. What is proposed is this. We have to-day elected the Standing Committees in connection with the various departments. The members of the Standing Committees are elected by non-official members of this Council and it is presumed that they will support the popular views. The members of the Standing Committee for the Police, will make themselves perfectly familiar with the figures, and in a very short time will be able to tell us whether we have acted rightly or wrongly in reference to this grant. It is not that we are bound by the opinions of the members of the Committee, but they will be in a position to explain the whole matter to us and if we are satisfied that that money is really necessary, then the only thing is to grant the money. That is the position so far as I understand it. What we are required to do is to see whether we have acted rightly or wrongly when we have got materials before us. We have only to keep an open mind till we receive the opinion of the Standing Committee and then act upon it. We are not bound to agree, as I have said, with the wishes of the Standing Committee. If the Standing Committee can make out no case why the money should be given, we need not accept the opinion of the Standing Committee. I think the motion of Mr. Rhodes is very appropriate and opportune.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: I am afraid I cannot see eye to eye with Mr. Rhodes and to my mind the motion before the House is premature. We know that a Standing Committee is going to be formed for all the departments of Government, and a similar committee is to be formed for the Police Department as well. When reduction was made we had before our minds the fact that this Standing Committee will be able to go into all the details of the Police Department and enlighten us as to what curtailments should be made. It is not unlikely that this committee may say that there is absolutely no room for any curtailment. But it is equally likely that this committee may say that expenditure has gone up so very rapidly that it is absolutely necessary and safe that a curtailment, not of Rs. 23,00,000, but of Rs. 50,00,000, should be made; so in every view it will be our duty to look into the matter very minutely and then decide as to what we should do.

As has been observed by Mr. A. C. Dutt just now, we, as reasonable men, have to do what is right and, to my mind, this Council will do nothing but what is right. When the question of this reduction came up before the Council, it was certainly the view of the members of this Council, and I think this is also the view of the country, that expenditure in this department of Government has gone up by leaps and bounds and that there is sufficient room for curtailment. There are many who think, for instance, that the Intelligence Branch of the Police, which sprang up with great rapidity some years ago, has possibly been kept up at an abnormal strength; that there is no need for it at the present moment; that the expenditure on buildings is much more than what is necessary, and that the expenses on the higher posts should be, to a great extent, curtailed. These are matters for the Standing Committee to go into and to place their views before the Council. When this is done, this Council will consider every matter that is before it. I do not agree with some of the previous speakers who have said that this reduction was made in an irresponsible way. It was nothing of the sort. When we took up the question we thought it was our duty to do so. My friend, Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy, has said that it might be within the mind of certain persons here to seek cheap popularity; that is not true, but I would have wished him to add that we are not here to bask in the sunshine of official favour. We are here to do our duty to our country.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: This debate which has been initiated by Mr. Rhodes has touched upon a matter of great importance, and upon a vote of this Council which undoubtedly might create a position of considerable difficulty. I think, therefore, that nobody here has any reasonable ground of criticism against the member for having brought this matter prominently to the fore; and his object in doing so, in his own words, is "to press upon the Government the importance of asking the Council for a supplementary vote in the shortest possible time after the appointment of the Standing Committee." That object has been secured in so far as an opportunity has been afforded to the members of this Council of expressing their opinion, freely and frankly, upon the issue which he has raised, and to that extent, since there is no definite proposition upon which, on the merits, this Council will take a vote, I might be content to leave the matter there, with an assurance to the Council that the remarks that have been made this evening will be brought to the attention of the Governor and will undoubtedly be duly considered by him. But on one point I think, in fairness to myself, and in fairness to my colleagues, both Members and Ministers, it is only right that I should say a few words.

We have been told to-night that for whatever has happened we have largely ourselves to thank, because we told the Council nothing, and we have been adjured to credit the members of this Council with honesty and good faith, and a desire to help the Government. That adjuration is really unnecessary, as all of us are prepared to credit the Council with the possession of these qualities, but in all fairness to ourselves may I ask this Council, equally, to credit the Members of this Government with honesty and good intention, and to disabuse their minds of this figment of "official superiority" and "bureaucratic aloofness," which figured somewhat prominently in a recent document which must have been seen by many of the members here present, over the signatures of some of their number. I would like the Council to believe that we, too, are equally instigated by these motives of good faith which the members of the Council claim for themselves.

In the matter of the allegation that we have told the Council nothing, might I recall to the mind of the Council a few facts in connection with the Budget. The whole Budget discussion was initiated on the basis of a somewhat portentous grey-covered book, which figured so conspicuously in this Chamber a few days ago. In that book the Finance Department endeavoured to give the more salient facts. I have not the slightest doubt that many of the members of this Council, perfectly genuinely, found it difficult to follow those figures. Before my connection with the Finance Department, I myself did not always find it easy to understand similar details, but the intention of Government in compiling that book and placing it in the hands of the Council was to give all the information in their power. Apart from that, we have, in the course of the Budget discussion, made various speeches in connection with the various points raised, and may I in our justification plead that for my part, and I think that of all of us, we have tried to keep our speeches to the particular issue that was raised, and after any criticisms, to the best of our ability, have been answered, to be content to sit down and to make room for other members. It is perfectly true that I might have talked for hours on the subject of the police, though I imagine the Council would have been conspicuously bored, and we have endeavoured to be as concise as possible.

Well, what actually happened in this debate? As the Council may remember, I spoke for nearly an hour, till a quarter past seven, in connection with the general discussion, and if the Governor had not extended the time allotted, Mr Kerr, who had every right to be heard on that occasion, would have had to remain silent. The Council will also recall that Mr. Kerr offered, on behalf of himself and us, to help members who had any doubts, if they would only come to our rooms and ask us about them; he assured members that we would then give them all the information in our power. Various members have thus been to me, and I have supplied them with facts and with notes, while some of these facts have actually formed the basis of their speeches. We have to the best of our ability answered all the queries put to us. Apart from that, may I also remind the Council that when I introduced the actual demand for a grant I recapitulated many of the general arguments referring to the police, mentioning also that I would deal with others in connection with specific amendments. On four or five of these specific amendments Mr. Stephenson and I replied in further detail, but five or six of them were withdrawn. I leave it to the Council to say whether it is quite fair first to withdraw amendments, and then to charge us with withholding information which we would have been perfectly willing to give had the opportunity arisen.

That, Sir, sums up in brief our attempts to elucidate the position to the Council in connection with the police budget. Babu Jatindra Nath Basu has said that it is difficult for an ordinary person to understand the raison d'être of a general cut, such as this particular amendment was, and I would remind the Council that the Government also is composed of ordinary persons, and it is equally difficult for them to understand the specific points which the mover had in mind. One could only in these circumstances be content to dwell on general considerations, and could hardly answer specific criticisms when none were made.

I think, Sir, in fairness to ourselves, I am entitled to bring these facts once more to the attention of the Council in justification of our contention that, to the best of our ability, and within the limits of our powers, our sole wish has been to supply to them all the information that was possible.

Mr. H. BARTON: Several members have taken exception to the action of Mr. Rhodes in having this question reopened; but the fact that the majority of the members agree that it should be brought on for discussion, makes it clear that Mr. Rhodes' proposition is a very sensible one, while the attitude of those members who have criticised it virtually amounts to a censure on the President for having allowed this discussion to take place (cries of "order, order").

A great deal has been said on the subject of the Government not placing confidence in the members of this Council. It seems to me, that this is a statement which cuts both ways. (Several voices: "Hear, hear.") Why should we for a moment suspect the Government of having dishonest intentions because they put up a demand for a certain sum of money? There are indications—I say from what I have heard during the past few days, and the various discussions that have taken place in the lobbies and elsewhere—that a good number of the members who voted against that grant have begun to realise that they did not act quite wisely. I may also say that practically all the speeches that we have heard this evening opposing the attempt of this Council to reconsider a resolution which has already been adopted indicate that the objectors are willing to patch it up and bring about a ready solution if they are only given a chance of doing so. It also justifies the impression that a number of our members feel that the throwing out of that motion for the grant to the police was done in a most merciless, thoughtless and reckless manner—I might even say in a senseless manner. You do not think that Government, in preparing the Budget, does it for the sake of mere amusement. They have gone into the Budget very carefully and I think it ought to be evident to any one who is watching the trend of events, specially as regards the claims of the workers of the various departments, that there must be a large sum in this demand which will have to go to the increase of pay of the policemen. One of our members has very generously said that if the Government will come forward and tell us plainly that this money has to some extent to be utilised for the pay of the policemen, we have no objection to giving it to them. I think it ought to have struck him without being told that it must be so utilised.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I rise to a point of order. Does all that relate to the motion for adjournment?

The PRESIDENT: I do not think the member is in order. The question is whether a serious situation has arisen.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I have a decision of the President as to whether the whole of Mr. Barton's speech is irrelevant?

The PRESIDENT: I have given my ruling. The member's remarks must be relevant to the point under discussion.

Mr. H. BARTON: I do think that we ought to have an adjournment as a very serious situation has arisen. One member has said that if we go back on the resolution, we might just as well vacate our places in this Council. I say that if the resolution is put through we might as well leave the country or stay at home. I think the interest of the country and safety of the individual is concerned in this matter. As the question raises a very serious issue I beg to support Mr. Rhodes' proposal.

Mr. H. A. STARK: Let us not deceive ourselves. The fact that we consented to interrupt the business of the day and adjourn on our reduction of the police Budget by Rs. 23,50,000, is an admission that we have misgivings, and a concession to our fallibility. The truth is that since we discussed the police Budget in this Council and pruned it, we have had time to reconsider the whole matter in the light of the additional information which we have gathered. We find that we have tied ourselves into a knot and that we cannot undo our past action. At the same time we are not inclined to force the hands of His Excellency the Governor to veto our reduction of the police Budget. We are therefore in search of a deus ex machina—a contrivance which will save the situation. Accordingly, we express our willingness to vote a supplementary grant on the recommendation of the Police Standing Committee. The question now is—can we give that Standing Committee a mandate to make any recommendation? In any case there will be some delay, for we are about to adjourn sine die. What are Government going to do in the meantime? Are they to work in anticipation of the supplementary grant? If they are to work to the curtailed Budget by reducing the strength or salaries of the police force, difficulties may arise, of which, at the present moment, we have no conception.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: From our experience of district boards and municipalities of Bengal, we know that when a resolution is arrived at, it cannot be altered or modified within six months. This is a salutary provision of the law which is exercised in district boards and municipalities, but it seems we have come to learn a different lesson here—

The PRESIDENT: I think I must again say that this is not a correct view of the motion under discussion. There is no resolution before the Council to undo what has been done or to reverse the decision of the Council. The only question is to draw attention to the gravity of the situation and I have pointed this out on several occasions.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: But when the discussion is going on, am I in order in referring to this matter?

The PRESIDENT: You are out of order and you must obey the chair.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: I beg to submit that only the other day we came to the conclusion that a lump sum grant of Rs. 23,00,000 for the police be not granted. To-day we come to reconsider that matter.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: I rise to a point of order. This is irrelevant.

The PRESIDENT: I have told you that you cannot go into that matter. There is no question as to whether the vote was right or wrong, and I have stated it several times.

Maulvi YAKUINUDDIN AHMED: Then I beg to submit that when we arrived at that conclusion we also kept an open mind. We stated then that as the details were not given we come to that conclusion; and, if hereafter there is a reason for our modification of the resolution, we may consider it when the time for it will come. Only to-day the elections for the standing committees have been held; and I think it is proper for us to await the decision of the Standing Committee before we come to a conclusion.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: To-day we have heard that His Excellency has, before exercising his power of vetoing the resolution which was passed by this Council, given us an opportunity to-day of discussing the matter. From the tenor of the speeches that have been made in favour of the mover to-day, we find that some evil expressions had been in store for us. From the very moment the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler began his reply to my motion for the reduction of the police grant, he called us "irresponsible" members; and to-day he has been followed by some of his followers with the same expression; and the climax has been reached in the end by Mr. Barton. He has said that the motion was quite "senseless." (Several voices. "Hear, hear.") We must be credited with what amount of sense we possess, and we have to act according to our own judgment. We have not to borrow any sense from Mr. Barton or anybody else. We are the representatives of the people, who have very little sense. If they had any sense, they could come and show that in spending the revenue you take to a large extent from them you give them the smallest return; yet they keep silence. This is the sort of people who have elected us; and it is natural that we who represent them are wanting in sense. (Several voices. "Hear, hear.") We are not merely wanting in sense, but in many things. Of course, we thank the Government for providing some money for the constables. The other day I stated that I bore no grudge against the constables and that they should have a larger proportion of the increments. What I objected to was the case of the officers drawing higher salaries. But, at the same time, I must remind the Council that the gurus of patshalas, who are also human beings and have got to maintain their families, have to remain satisfied with only Rs. 18 a year or Re. 1-8 per month.

The PRESIDENT: The member is straying from the point. The question before the Council is not whether the money should have been spent on this or that object; but the question is whether a serious situation has been created as a result of the reduction of the grant.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: Of course, in moving that motion, I made certain suggestions. Those suggestions may not be considered advisable and we expected that some supplementary Budget grant would be brought in, showing in clearest possible terms that the expenditure was necessary for the maintenance of peace and order in the country; and without this the Government could not go on. To-day a Standing Committee for the police has been constituted. We expect that this committee will consider the whole situation, and we think it quite unnecessary to have any sort of discussion bearing on the question which we already passed through. However, as the matter has been brought before the Council and different members have expressed their views, it has done some good no doubt; and we can assure the Government that we keep an open mind and we are not in a mood to fight or thwart the Government. But our object is that we want some materials for consideration. We see that the Government could maintain peace and order in 1919-20 with a smaller sum; they could do so also with a smaller sum in the year 1920-21; but we do not know what strange circumstances have happened in the year 1921-22 so as to raise the expenditure from Rs. 1,67,00,000 to Rs. 1,90,00,000. That was the thing we resented. Of course, we know that some increments have been granted, but what we propose is that increments to the higher officials might be postponed for a year or two, because the financial situation is very stringent, we having begun the Budget with a deficit of Rs. 2½ crores. Therefore, I think that the postponement of the increment to higher officials for a year or two will not stagnate the whole Police Department or will bring in anarchy and disorder anywhere. Some of our friends apprehend that, if this amount be not granted immediately, it may not be possible for any one to pass through Burra Bazar safely to-morrow or something of that kind. One of my friends has referred to the incident of the Rajshahi Jail. May I remind him that the same police, whom he wants to fatten, have proved themselves to be quite unfit to hold charge as they could not stand in front of the prisoners and prevent them from escaping! (Cries of "Order, order.")

The PRESIDENT: You are digressing from the main point.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: My suggestion is that the Standing Committee, which has been constituted to-day, may prepare an estimate, giving due consideration to all the matters, and, if they present it before the Council, we are quite willing to grant any amount that is indispensably necessary for the upkeep of the police.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: There has been a good deal of misapprehension regarding the debate that has taken place just now. It appears that many members think that we are discussing the question as to whether the resolution which we passed the other day about the reduction of the police grant should be reconsidered or not. I think that the adjournment of the Council for considering a question of public importance simply assumes two considerations: first, that the question of public importance, and, secondly, that the question is of an urgent nature. Then the matter comes up for discussion; and, while discussing the matter, any member may of course express his own views or suggestions. Therefore, to me it seems that almost all the speakers have at least admitted the fact that a serious situation has arisen. The fact is clear from the speech of the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, as he says that he will have to reduce either the number of the police officers or that he will have to reduce their pay. The question is whether these two facts, if we take the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler's statement to be a correct one, has created a serious situation or not. If a serious situation has been created, or, in other words if there is really a sufficient ground for review, as the lawyers call it, the object of discussing this matter is simply to ascertain the opinion of the Council as to whether a question of a serious nature and of urgent public importance has arisen or not. I have listened to the various speakers, some of whom, no doubt say that this should have been done or that should not have been done; that we are not honest, we have not done our duty conscientiously. That is not the matter for discussion. The Council has simply to state its views about the situation that has arisen in consequence of the resolution that was passed reducing the police grant. That is the only question; and I think that even the members who voted for the reduction of the grant—in fact, I was not present on that particular day and I do not know what they said on that day—are, I gather from their speeches, quite willing to reconsider the matter, if fresh materials are placed before the Council. They themselves admit that a serious situation has arisen, and say: "Let us have more materials." That is the whole question before the Council; and in expressing my views, I would also state, as the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has said, that he has no other alternative but either to reduce the number of the police force or to reduce their pay. If he has really no other alternative, we must, as ordinary men, accept his statement to be correct, unless and until we are in a position to contradict it by facts and figures—I myself must take his statement to be correct—and, if his statement is correct, then we must have to say, and there is no gainsaying, that a very serious situation has arisen. Then there is the other question. If a serious situation has arisen, what are we to do? No definite resolution can be moved in a matter like this, no definite suggestions can be made, but each member, I think, under the rules, is perfectly at liberty to make his own suggestions regarding the matter. Some members have suggested that the matter be considered by the Standing Committee, and then the Council may reconsider it. Other members did not of course in a way oppose it. One member said that he had no confidence in the Standing Committee; another member said: "Well, I will see the opinion of the Standing Committee first, and then I will decide for myself." But, I think that when we have elected a standing committee—and it is an advisory committee—we can have at least a recommendation of that committee, and then we can have the matter discussed. So, I think, that of all the suggestions that have been made, the suggestion of the mover is the most prudent one and that it ought to be followed. Let the Standing Committee give its opinion and then we shall consider it and we shall see as to how we can avoid the serious situation. I think that 99 per cent. of us have admitted that a serious situation has arisen on account of this reduction of the police grant.

Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: I am not going to waste the precious time of this Council, which has already been wasted a little too much by long speeches. The question before us is not the merit or the demerit of the police or our want of faith in the officials who administer the police. The question is whether a serious deadlock has happened in the police administration by the refusal of the grant of Rs. 23,00,000. I understand that the increased pay sanctioned for the subordinate Indian staff cannot be paid in the face of this resolution. If so, I appeal to the members of this Council to leave aside all questions of pride and prestige and allow the Government to bring in a supplementary grant with the fullest possible explanation for discussion. The majority of the members who voted in favour of the refusal of the grant, wanted the Government to climb down, and the Government have climbed down; and we should face the situation, and allow the supplementary grant to be brought in and discussed.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: I think that Mr. Syed Nasim Ali has correctly stated that the only question before the Council is whether a serious situation has or has not arisen as a result of the resolution passed by this Council reducing the police grant. Then, what is the answer? My friend sitting below me Kumar Shib Shekhawar Ray thinks that a serious situation has not arisen. He says that when they passed that resolution they could not decide as to what items should be left out, and therefore they decided to veto a lump sum and leave it to the Government to decide as to what items should be left out. That is not the way we should approach a subject or the Budget. I do not wish to detain the Council further, because what I wanted to say has very well been said by

Mr. Syed Nasim Ali The whole question is whether a serious situation has or has not arisen. We know perfectly well, so far as Calcutta is concerned that we want more police and that, as the police are badly paid, their pay ought to be increased. I think that a resolution was recently passed for raising the pay of the Calcutta police, and, if the pay be not increased then a very serious situation will indeed arise in the next few months

Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: I am glad that Mr. Rhodes has brought forward this motion. I am glad not because he has given us an opportunity of recanting what we declared by our vote or of acknowledging our mistakes, for we do not acknowledge we committed any mistake, but because he has given us an opportunity of restating our position—the position we took up other day in voting for the reduction of the police grant. What was our position that day? In face of the fact that the police expenditure was going up by leaps and bounds year by year and also the fact that we were not supplied with facts and figures relating to the increased demand for Rs. 23,00,000 we could reasonably doubt and were not in a position to understand why this increase was necessary; and we voted for the reduction of the grant on the understanding that facts and figures relating to the proposed increase would be submitted before the Standing Committee which was going to be constituted. If the Standing Committee approved of it and, upon a closer examination of details, were of opinion that administration without this increased grant would be impossible, then and then only we could understand that a serious situation had arisen and, in order to solve the serious situation, if a supplementary budget for the grant were brought forward, then we should vote for the supplementary grant; otherwise we could not acknowledge that a serious situation had arisen to merit reconsideration. However, I am sorry to find that in the course of this discussion some members have not only questioned our conduct, but have called us “senseless and irresponsible.” I may say that we are not irresponsible, because when we are the custodians of the people’s money, we cannot vote it away, unless we are assured that the item of expenditure is absolutely necessary. The onus is on us and, as we are not administrators, we cannot say under what head the curtailments could be made. We can only say: “If you have sufficient reasons, very well, give us the facts and figures and convince us that the expenditure is absolutely necessary under such and such heads. The onus is on the executive to prove the necessity of a grant and not on us to show that it is otherwise, and I think, therefore, that these criticisms of our conduct are nothing but irresponsible. I would also take a serious objection—

The PRESIDENT: I am sorry to interrupt the member, but the time limit of 2 hours under the rules has now elapsed and the result is that the motion has been talked out and there is no question before the Council. As it is a quarter past seven, the usual time for adjournment, the Council stands adjourned to 3 P.M. on Monday, the 4th instant in this Chamber.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council assembled at 3 P.M. on the 4th April, 1921, in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers and 99 nominated and elected members.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda):

Before commencing the business of the day I would like to ask the Council's permission to send to His Excellency Lord Reading a message of welcome on the occasion of his assumption of the high office of Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

The Council agreed.

Starred Questions

(to which oral answers were given).

Promotion of Muhammadan assistant jailors.

XXII. Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state whether the Government are considering the desirability of promoting some of the Muhammadan assistant jailors as soon as vacancies occur in the cadre of jailors?

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): One Muhammadan assistant jailor has already been promoted to act as a jailor. Special promotion cannot be given to Muhammadan assistant jailors, to the detriment of officers of other communities, but Muhammadan officers who are fit for promotion will be promoted in due course.

Appointment of District Sub-Registrars.

 XXIII. Babu BHISHMADEV DAS: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether there are any rules for the appointment of District Sub-Registrars?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to lay them on the table?

(c) If there are no such rules, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state how these officers are selected?

(d) Is it a fact that a special examination of picked Sub-Registrars was instituted in 1915 for testing their fitness for performing the duties of a District Sub-Registrar?

(e) What has been the total cost to Government, including travelling allowances, of the examinees on account of this examination since 1915?

(f) Is it a fact that a promise was held out in notification No. 852 Regn., dated the 19th January, 1915, that after the end of 1915, in filling up vacancies as District Sub-Registrars, officers who have passed the examination will be given preference?

(g) How many of the District Sub-Registrars appointed since then have been promoted from among officers who have passed the special test and how many from those that have not passed?

(h) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the appointments of District Sub-Registrars in recent years have been made almost invariably on the score of seniority and that the test of competency provided by the examination has not been considered?

(i) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the Sub-Registrars, who have passed the "special test," regard the overlooking of their claim with great disappointment and discontent?

(j) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what policy the Government intend to follow with regard to their claims?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): (a) Revised rule 2 of the rules regarding the special test of Sub-Registrars for District Sub-Registrarships, published by Government notification No. 1045 T.R., dated the 11th August, 1919, governs the appointment of District Sub-Registrars

(b) A copy of the rule is laid on the table.

(c) This question does not arise.

(d) The reply is in the affirmative.

(e) Exact figures are not available, but roughly the total cost amounted to about Rs. 1,200.

(f) Yes. But this was modified by the revised rule referred to in answer (a) above.

(g) Eighteen appointments have been made since January, 1916, of which one was filled up by the promotion of a Sub-Registrar who passed the special test and the rest by promotion from among the most efficient and senior Sub-Registrars.

(h) Appointments have been made in accordance with the rule referred to above.

(i) The Inspector-General of Registration reports that there are a few who feel disappointed.

(j) Government propose to consider whether the revised rule referred to in the reply to clause (a) should be modified.

Rule referred to in the reply to starred question No. XXIII.

2. District Sub-Registrars are ordinarily recruited from the most efficient and senior Sub-Registrars in the province, though vacancies in the rank of District Sub-Registrars for periods not exceeding six weeks are usually filled by selection on this principle from among the Sub-Registrars posted in the district. In each case, however, where other considerations are practically equal, the officer who has passed the special test will have preference.

Improvement of communications in the Baikunthapur Estate.

* XXIV. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether the Government received any representation in 1920, from a member of the Jalpaiguri District Board praying that the Government may direct contribution from khas mahal revenues for the improvement of communications in the Baikunthapur Estate to compensate for the loss of funds diverted to the improvement of roads in Government khas mahal by the orders of the District Board of Jalpaiguri with an alternative suggestion for directing the Board to raise loans and carry out the improvements suggested in his letter to the Chairman of the District Board of Jalpaiguri dated the 28th November, 1920?

(b) If the answer to (a) be in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what action Government have taken upon the said representation?

(c) With reference to the statement laid on the table in answer to question No. XX asked by me at the Council meeting of the 4th August, 1920, last, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether it is a fact that in proportion to the amounts of Road and Public Works cesses realised from the Government Khas Mahal (Western Duars), Chaklajat estate and Baikunthapur estate, respectively, during the years 1907-08, to 1918-19, a disproportionately larger amount was spent on the construction and repair of roads during those years in the Government Khas Mahal than in the other two estates?

(d) If the answer to (c) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what the reasons for it are?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea): (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) The representation was forwarded to the Commissioner of the Rajshahi Division for disposal.

(c) and (d) A statement is laid on the table containing revised figures furnished by the Deputy Commissioner of Jalpaiguri. In the tea garden portion of the khas mahal area sanitary and medical arrangements were made at the expense of the tea gardens and not of the Board. A portion of the Board's income, which otherwise would have had to be spent on medical and sanitation work, was consequently set free and devoted to extra road making in that area. The Chaklajat and Baikunthapur estates lie in the permanently settled portion of the district, which has formed part of the province of Bengal much longer than the khas mahal portion and have had their most urgent needs in the matter of communications satisfied long ago. The khas mahal portion was taken over from Bhutan and had much greater leeway to make up in the matter of communications.

Statement referred to in the reply to starred question No. XXIV.

RECEIPTS.*
Area.	Road cess (1907-08 to 1918-19).	Government 1½ per cent. grant for im- provement of roads in the Khas Mahal area (1907-08 to 1918-19).	Public works cess (1913-14 to 1918-19).	Total	Expenditure on roads and bridges in 1907-08 to 1918-19, ex- cluding cost of establishment on civil works
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
Government Khas Mahal	5,45,000	1,11,954	3,29,000	9,85,954	9,80,166
Chaklajat estate ...	3,45,600	...	1,77,600	5,23,200	3,44,263
Baikunthapur estate ...	2,03,350	...	1,07,350	3,10,700	2,21,539

* In addition to these sums an augmentation grant for the district amounting to Rs. 2,39,899 was received from Government during 1907-08 to 1918-19, which roughly corresponds to the cost of the establishment maintained on civil works.

Status of Vakils.

XXV. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department been drawn to the proceedings of a recent meeting of the Indian Legislative Assembly regarding a resolution moved by Mr. Bhurgri on the question of the status of the Vakils and in particular to the statement of the Hon'ble the Law Member on the subject?

(b) In view of the statement of the Hon'ble the Law Member on the subject, are the Government proposing to consult the Bengal Legislative Council before submitting their opinion to the Government of India?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) No official communication on the subject has yet been received by the local Government from the Government of India.

(b) In view of what has been stated in answer to clause (a), no definite statement can be made now.

Unstarred Questions(answers to which were laid on the table).*Managers and sub-managers in Court of Wards' estates.

88. Maulvi ABDUL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state how many managers and sub-managers there are in the Court of Wards' estates under the control of the Board of Revenue and how many of them are Muhammadans?

(b) Is it a fact that a resolution was adopted in the Bengal Legislative Council a few years back recommending the appointment of Muhammadans, whenever opportunities occurred, as managers and sub-managers in the Court of Wards' estates?

(c) Is it a fact that recently an appointment of this nature was made in an Eastern Bengal district?

(d) Is it a fact that there were several Muhammadan candidates for the vacancy?

(e) What was the reason for not appointing a Muhammadan to the vacancy?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of REVENUE [LAND REVENUE] (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan):

(a) There are twenty-one managers and three assistant managers in the estates under the Court of Wards, and, of these, only one is a Muhammadan.

(b) Yes.

(c) No.

(d) and (e) The questions do not arise.

Non-performance of "janaza" prayer at the funeral of dead prisoners in the Dacca Jail and the appointment of Muhammadan preachers to reform the character of the inmates of that Jail.

89. Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL, Khan Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department aware that no janaza prayers are performed on the occasion of the funeral of such Muhammadan prisoners as die in the Dacca Jail?

(b) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of taking necessary steps to see that the janaza prayers are offered before the dead bodies are removed to the burial-grounds?

(c) Have the Government considered the desirability of appointing Muhammadan preachers to preach every Friday, for an hour or so, with a view to reform the character of the inmates of the Dacca Jail as is done in the Alipore Central Jail and other places?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) In the case of Muhammadan prisoners dying in the Dacca Central Jail, janaza prayers are not arranged for by the Jail Department, as the dead bodies are made over to the local Municipality for disposal.

(b) Instructions are being issued to Superintendents of all jails—

(1) to ascertain from local recognised Muhammadan Associations whether they are willing to take charge of the bodies of such prisoners and give them burial in accordance with the requirements of the Muhammadan religion;

(2) to arrange for the burial of deceased Muhammadan prisoners through such associations as are willing to undertake this duty.

(c) Government have granted permission to some Muhammadan gentlemen to give moral instruction to Muhammadan prisoners in certain jails and have also issued directions to permit a Muhammadan preacher to preach to Muhammadan prisoners in all jails in Bengal. No one volunteered for such work in the Dacca Central Jail. Steps are being taken to ascertain what arrangements can be made for imparting religious instruction on Fridays to Muhammadan prisoners.

Differential treatment of votes in municipal or other local bodies' elections.

90. Maulvi AZAHARUDDIN AHMED: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to say whether in municipal elections a voter can give all his votes to one candidate, whereas in elections under the Local Self-Government Act he cannot do so?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the reason for this difference?

(c) Do the Government intend to make the rule uniform in all the elections?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Yes.

(b) The papers in the possession of Government do not show what was the reason for making this difference, which dates back to 1886

(c) Government are prepared to consider the matter after consulting local bodies.

Agricultural demonstrators.

91. Maulvi AZAHARUDDIN AHMED: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state separately how many of the Hindu and Muhammadan demonstrators belong to the bonâ fide agricultural class and on what principle they have been appointed?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of AGRICULTURE and INDUSTRIES (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur): Hindu, 28; Muhammadan, 23.

These men have all been through a course of training on a Government farm and have had to pass a practical examination before they were permanently appointed.

Amount spent for the Agricultural Department and the number of bighas of land under Government cultivation and the average annual outturn per bigha for each crop.

92. Khan Bahadur KHWAJA MOHAMED AZAM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state how much money is annually spent for the maintenance of the Agricultural Department and how many bighas of land are now under Government cultivation?

(b) Is all the cost incurred in connection with each bigha of land borne by the Government?

(c) What is the average annual outturn per bigha for each crop?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) The amount varies from year to year. The estimated expenditure for 1921-22 is Rs. 11,25,000.

The total area of land under cultivation in the several farms under this Department is about 2,100 bighas.

(b) Yes.

(c) The average annual outturn for the main crops is given below—

Paddy—6 to 8 maunds.

Jute—6 to 10 maunds.

Sugarcane—28 to 30 maunds of gur.

Tagore loan.

93. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state whether it is a fact that Maharaja Sir Prodyot Kumar Tagore Bahadur, Kt., has made arrangements for repayment in full of the balance of the loan which had been advanced to him by the Government of India amounting to about Rs. 26,00,000 and, if so, whether the money is expected to be received from him during the ensuing financial year?

(b) If the answer be in the affirmative, are the Government of Bengal considering the advisability of approaching the Government of India with a request to advance the money as a loan to Bengal in view of the deficit in the Provincial Budget?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Maharaja Sir Prodyot Kumar Tagore Bahadur has proposed a fresh settlement, the object of which is to enable him to repay the balance of the loans advanced to him by the Government of India.

(b) No.

Industries Department and help to industrial concerns.

94. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state—

(i) whether the Industries Department has got any sum of money at its disposal to help industrial concerns? If so, how many concerns have so far been helped; and

(ii) whether the Industries Department helps private companies to acquire land for industrial purposes? If so, how many European and how many Indian firms were so helped?

(b) Did the Bengal Chemical and Pharmaceutical Works, Limited, apply for such help? Was the help given? If not, why not?

(c) Did the Industries Department send any exhibits to the British Industrial Fair? If not, why not?

(d) Has the Director of Industries done anything with regard to—

- (1) the housing of labourers,
- (2) strikes,
- (3) organisation of market,
- (4) indigenous medicines,
- (5) glass-works, or
- (6) manufactures of paper?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) (i) No provision has been made in the Budget estimates for this particular purpose, but there is a lump provision of Rs. 1,20,000 for the development of industries. So far no industrial concern has been given financial assistance.

(ii) The Industries Department examines applications of private firms desiring acquisition of lands for industrial purposes and submits proposals with its recommendations to the local Government for decision. Since the creation of the Department, the applications of the undernoted (Indian and European) firms have been supported by this Department:—

Indian firms.

- (1) Bengal Chemical and Pharmaceutical Works.
- (2) National Tannery.

European firms.

- (1) Marshall and Sons.
- (2) Burn and Company.
- (3) Davenport and Company.
- (4) Thornycroft (India), Limited.

(b) Yes. An inquiry under section 40 of the Land Acquisition Act was made, but on receipt of a letter from the Government of India in which it was stated that acquisition for private companies was not legal unless the public were to be directly benefited by the Act, further proceedings were dropped. The Company then represented that they were willing to submit to conditions which would confer direct benefit on the public. The proceedings were then resumed. The Company, however, have arranged for the purchase of a part of the land, and their amended proposals are awaited.

(c) The Industries Department participated in the fair held last year, but they could not do so this year owing to the notice being received too late to make any arrangement for the purpose.

(d) No. The general question of the housing of labourers is under the consideration of the Government of India.

The member is referred to the reply given to unstarred question No. 14, asked at the meeting of the Council held on the 7th February last, and to pages 71-80 of the Journal of Indian Industries and Labour, Volume I, Part I, published in February, 1921.●

The Department has taken steps to find markets for the sale of cotton and silk embroideries, dextrine, starch, potash and soft soap.

The Department has compiled a list of chemicals manufactured by the principal chemical manufacturing concerns of Bengal and submitted it to the Government of India for publication.

The Department has successfully recommended the applications of the Raja Glass Works, the Calcutta Glass Works and Messrs. Peer Mohammad and Sons for necessary facilities to secure supplies of coal through the Coal Transportation Officer.

Scientific and technical information has been given on the subject to a number of inquirers.

Formation of local boards in Comilla.

95. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state when effect is going to be given to the clauses of the Local Self-Government Act for the formation of local boards by election by union boards in Comilla?

(b) Why has this not been given effect to up till now?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The member appears to be under a misapprehension, for the Local Self-Government Act does not provide for members of local boards being elected by union boards.

Inadequate representation of Patuakhali on the Bakarganj District Board.

96. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state what action the Government are going to take upon the representation of the people of Patuakhali against the decisions of the District Board of Bakarganj about the number of District Board members allotted to Patuakhali and the low percentage of expenditure for the Patuakhali subdivision?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The representation will be considered by Government before they pass orders about the distribution of elected seats on the District Board among the different Local Boards.

Rent sales.

97. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state the number of rent sales in the courts of Bengal, district by district, from 1910 to 1920, year by year?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the number of applications to set aside those sales, with results?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the percentage of applications to set aside those sales rejected in the courts of Bengal, district by district, from 1910 to 1920, year by year?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the value of agricultural lands has increased by leaps and bounds during these ten years?

(e) If so, by what proportion has the value increased?

(f) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that tenure-holders find it more profitable to keep lands in khas possession rather than keep them with raiyats?

g) Are the Government aware that as a result processes and sale of rations of rent execution proceedings are suppressed?

h) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware of the fact that there has been a proportionate increase in the rent sales during recent years?

i) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of inquiring from the Bar Associations of Bengal as to the cause of the increase in rent sales and of calling for suggestions in the matter of these sales?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a), (b) and (c) The labour involved in the compilation of the statistics called for is incommensurate with their utility and the Government do not consider, therefore, they would be justified in undertaking the work involved in their compilation.

d) The answer is in the negative.

e) The question does not arise.

f), (g), (h) and (i) The answer is in the negative.

Duties of district agricultural officers.

8. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state the duties of district agricultural officers of Bengal?

b) Is it a fact that some of those officers do nothing but sell potato and jute seeds and act as agents for foreign vegetable seeds?

c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state the number of months on which the district agricultural officers of Bengal were on tour, by district, from the years 1918 to 1920 separately, and the number of days they were beyond the sadar subdivisions of the districts?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Bahadur: (a) The main duties of the agricultural officers are to advise the cultivators interested in agricultural improvement by personal instruction and visual demonstration. They are the chief means by which the Department brings home the results of scientific research and experiment to the agricultural population. The agricultural officers advise the people in their own fields and on demonstration farms the advantages of improved methods and of improved varieties of crops and manures and suggest remedies for crop diseases, insect pests, etc. These officers are also responsible for organising village agricultural societies and seed stores, which play an important part in introducing agricultural improvements of proved efficacy among the cultivators. They also have much work to do in connection with crop forecasts and estimates.

(b) The answer is in the negative.

(c) A statement is laid on the table.

Muhammadan officers in Veterinary Department.

99. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state the percentage of Muhammadan officers in higher and lower grades of the Veterinary Department of Bengal?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware of the discontent prevailing among the Muhammadan veterinary officers on account of their not getting their share in the higher grade appointments?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to say whether the Government are considering the desirability of setting apart a proportion of the higher grade appointments of the Veterinary Department for the Muhammadans?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) Provincial service—12·5 per cent.; Subordinate service—Inspectors, 6 per cent.; Veterinary Assistants, 14·6 per cent.

(b) Government have no information to this effect.

(c) Yes.

Muhammadan estates under Court of Wards.

100. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state the number of Muhammadan estates under the Court of Wards from 1915 to 1921, year by year?

(b) Is it a fact that in reply to a question by the Hon'ble Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq the Government gave an assurance to appoint suitable Muhammadan managers in the Muhammadan estates under the Court of Wards?

(c) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the number and names of the Muhammadan managers appointed since that time?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) There were ten such estates in the year 1918 and nine in the other years.

(b) No; but, in a resolution passed on the 3rd September, 1918, the Council recommended that whenever practicable and desirable, suitable Muhammadan officers be appointed to be managers of the Muhammadan estates under the Court of Wards.

(c) Since then, no managership of a Muhammadan estate has fallen vacant and no Muhammadan manager has been appointed.

Grievances of the Patuakhali people against the Bakarganj District Board.

101. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government aware of any representation made to the Government by the people of Patuakhali against the decisions of the District Board of Bakarganj about the allotment of the number of District Board members from the Patuakhali subdivision and about the low percentage of annual expenditure for the Patuakhali subdivision by the District Board?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The answer is in the affirmative.

Insanitary condition of Burra Bazar and consequent increase in the death-rate.

102. Babu CHANESHYAMDAS BIRLA: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government been drawn to the general insanitary condition of Burra Bazar and the prevailing high death-rate in that locality?

(b) If so, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what measures the Government have taken or propose to take for improving the sanitary condition of Burra Bazar?

(c) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the Burra Bazar Objections Committee of the Calcutta Improvement Trust completed its report some time ago?

(d) Is the Hon'ble the Minister aware that the Objections Committee recommended that a park should be opened at the junction of Burtolla Street and Jag Mohan Mullick Street without delay?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether any steps have been taken to open the park referred to in (d) and when the park may be expected to be opened?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Yes.

(b) Government are taking no action for improving the sanitary condition of Burra Bazar. The Calcutta Corporation and the Calcutta Improvement Trust are the responsible authorities.

(c) The Calcutta Improvement Trust in 1918 resolved that a series of improvement schemes should be undertaken in Burra Bazar. As a necessary preliminary a series of road alignments was prepared covering the whole area and these have been considered by a representative committee: the committee's report was submitted to the Improvement Trust in March, 1921, and is now under consideration.

(d) The majority of the committee recommend that an open space should be made at the junction of Burtolla Street and Jag Mohan Mullick Street.

(e) The Improvement Trust has not yet considered the recommendation.

Derailment of trains of the Barasat-Basirhat Light Railway.

103. Rai HARENDRANATH CHAUDHURI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works aware how often during each of the last six years trains have got derailed on the Barasat-Basirhat Light Railway?

(b) Has the complaint that evening trains on that light railway are run without lights, even in ladies' compartments, attracted the notice of the Government?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of PUBLIC WORKS (the Hon'ble the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri, Khan Bahadur):

(a) Derailments have occurred during the last six years as follows:—

1915-16	9
1916-17	6
1917-18	3
1918-19	4
1919-20	9
1920-21	8

(b) Complaints regarding defective lighting of trains have been received by the Railway administration. As far as possible, action has been taken to improve the lighting arrangements. Further enquiries will be made as to the adequacy of the lighting, and steps will be taken, as far as possible, to improve matters if found inadequate.

Agricultural farms and Joint Fisheries Department.

104. Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to furnish the following information:—

- (i) whether the farms at Manipur (Dacca), Chinsura and Rangpur are exclusively experimental farms or whether they are partly experimental and partly demonstration farms;
- (ii) what has been the total cost of maintenance of each of these farms for the last three years (to be shown separately);
- (iii) what money contribution, if any, was made to the Pusa Agricultural Station, Sabour Agricultural College and Sabour Agricultural Farm;
- (iv) are there any specific conditions under which these contributions were made;
- (v) what was the total cost of maintenance and gross income of the breeding farm at Rangpur for the last three years (to be shown separately);
- (vi) what money contributions have been made for the Cleghorn experiments (sericulture) during the last three years, and what were the conditions attached to the result of these experiments; and
- (vii) what contributions have been received from the Bihar and Orissa Government towards the maintenance of the Joint Fishery Department during the last three years (to be shown separately for each year)?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI,

Khan Bahadur: (i) The Dacca and Chinsura Farms are exclusively experimental. At Rangpur there are three farms, viz., Rangpur Demonstration Farm, Rangpur Cattle Farm, Burirhat Tobacco Farm. The first is purely a demonstration farm, the second one is purely experimental, and the third is both an experimental and a demonstration farm.

(ii) The member is referred to the reply given to unstarred question No. 112 (d).

(iii) and (iv) No contribution is made by the Government of Bengal towards the maintenance of any agricultural institutions or farms outside this Presidency.

(v) The Member is referred to the reply to unstarred question No. 112 (d).

(vi) 1918-19, Rs. 16,500; 1919-20, Rs. 16,500; 1920-21, Rs. 16,500.

The object of the contribution is to enable Miss Cleghorn to continue and extend her experimental and research work in connection with the production of hybrid races of silkworms. The work is purely experimental and no conditions are attached. The experiments made are, however, so far promising and the results will be found in detail in her annual reports.

(vii) According to the Provincial Financial Settlement made with the Government of India on the separation of Bihar and Orissa from Bengal in 1912 a sum of Rs. 39,000 was taken as the standard expenditure for the joint staff of the Fisheries Department of the two provinces and any excess expenditure over this sum was divided equally between the two provinces. The figures showing the contributions from the Government of Bihar and Orissa towards the excess expenditure for the last three years are given below:—

			Rs
1917-18	2,457
1918-19	4,260
1919-20	6,142

Attendance in the Royal Botanic Garden office.

105. Babu HEM CHANDRA BHATTACHARJI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries aware of the fact that the assistants in the office of the Superintendent, Royal Botanic Garden, Sibpur, are required to attend office punctually at 10 A.M.?

(b) Is it a fact that in other Government offices in Calcutta assistants are required to come at 11 A.M.?

(c) Are the Government aware that these office assistants have to come from very great distances?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of passing orders directing that the assistants of that office be allowed to attend office from 11 A.M.?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Chan Bahadur: (a) It is not a fact that the assistants in the office of the Superintendent of the Royal Botanic Garden, Sibpur, are required to attend office punctually at 10 A.M. The usual hour of attendance is 10 A.M. but half an hour's grace is always allowed.

(b) No. The usual hour of attendance is 10-30 A.M.

(c) Four out of twelve assistants have to come from distances ranging from 5 to 7 miles, and one assistant, who lives at Ulubaria and is a daily passenger, has to come from a distance of about 20 miles.

(d) No.

Mr. Hannah and Kalighat Tramway tragedy.

106. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department be pleased to state—

- (i) whether it is a fact that Mr. J. S. Hannah, Deputy Commissioner of Police, was the officer in charge of the police force near the Kalighat tramway depôt on the 18th January last;
- (ii) whether it is a fact that a judicial inquiry regarding the incidents at Kalighat on that day is still pending undetermined;
- (iii) whether Mr. J. S. Hannah has taken leave and is shortly going out of India; and
- (iv) whether Government have considered the desirability of keeping Mr. Hannah in India till the publication of the report of the judicial inquiry?

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (i) and (ii) Yes.

(iii) Arrangements were made in January to grant leave to Mr. Hannah on the return of Mr. Kidd from leave. Mr. Hannah was relieved by Mr. Kidd on the 1st March, and after waiting till the 8th March, when he gave evidence before the enquiring officer, he left India on leave on the 10th March.

(iv) This was not considered to be necessary.

Revised minimum and maximum pay for certain services.

107. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state the revised minimum and the maximum pays of the following services:—

- (1) Provincial Educational Service;
- (2) Provincial Executive Service;
- (3) Provincial Judicial Service;
- (4) Provincial Engineering Service;
- (5) Provincial Agricultural Service;
- (6) Provincial Veterinary Service;
- (7) Provincial Medical Service (Military);
- (8) Provincial Medical Service (Civil); and
- (9) Indian Medical Service?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether members of the Provincial Services (Upper) have actually drawn their pay according to the revised scale? If not, why not?

MEMBER in charge of APPOINTMENT DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) A statement giving the information required is laid on the table.

(b) Yes.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 107.

Failure of rice-crops in Khulna district.

108. Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to say whether it is a fact that there has been a failure of rice-crops in the Khulna district?

(b) If so, what is the extent thereof?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of taking any relief measures in connection therewith?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) The rice-crop has failed in a portion of the Khulna district.

(b) The crop has completely failed in an area of 59 square miles consisting of isolated plots in thana Paikgacha on the east of the river Kobadak and in parts of thanas Asasuni, Tala, Shyamnagar and Kali-ganj on the west of that river. There has, however, been a good crop in adjacent lands and the estimated outturn of the crop for the district as a whole is 92 per cent.

(c) The District Board have proposed to take up construction of roads on a considerable scale in the affected area both in order to improve communications as well as to provide work for the destitute. Distribution of agricultural loans will also be made before the commencement of the cultivating season. No further relief measures are considered necessary at present.

" Goondaism " in Calcutta.

109. Mr. KRISHNA CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Police Department in a position to make a statement as to the extent of goondaism in Calcutta and as to which quarters of Calcutta are mostly affected?

(b) What is the approximate number of goondas known to the Calcutta Police and where do they mostly reside and which districts do they mostly come from?

(c) What is the strength of the special force at present dealing with them?

(d) Have the Government come to any decision as to whether, and, if so, what extra power it requires to suppress goondaism?

MEMBER in charge of POLICE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): (a) and (b) The problem of goondaism in Calcutta is now under investigation by a special police staff deputed for the purpose. The investigation has not yet been finished, but from reports so far received it appears that the majority of goondas come from the Mirzapore and Benares districts in the United Provinces, and from Peshawar.

They reside chiefly in Burra Bazar, Jorasanko, Jorabagan, Burtolla and Muchipara in the town, and Belliaghatta in the suburbs.

(c) The strength of the special police force is one assistant commissioner two sub-inspectors, two assistant sub-inspectors and six constables.

(d) Government have not yet come to any decision.

Raiyats and the non-transferability of their occupancy holdings.

110. Maulvi MAHAMMED MADASSUR HUSSAIN: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) aware that great dissatisfaction prevails amongst the raiyats of this province on account of the provision of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which makes occupancy holdings non-transferable without the consent of the landlord and which prohibits them from cutting down and appropriating trees planted by themselves on their holdings?

(b) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member been drawn to the observations made in 1914 by a Full Bench of the Hon'ble the High Court of Calcutta, in the case of Dayamoyi versus Annada Mohan Roy Chaudhuri, reported in 18 C.W.N., page 971, at page 991, where they have said: "We would only add that the uncertainty as to the transferability of holdings has been one of the most fruitful sources of litigation and it is urgently necessary that it should be set at rest by the legislature?"

(c) If the answer to clauses (a) and (b) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state why the Government have not taken as yet any steps to legislate over the matter?

(d) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table the following statements:—

- (1) A statement showing the number of different kinds of voluntary transfers of occupancy holdings in the different districts of Bengal, from the year 1910 to the year 1919.
- (2) A statement of the number of compulsory sales of such holdings by courts in the different districts of Bengal, other than rent sales, under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, from the year 1910 to the year 1919.
- (3) A statement of the number of ejectment suits instituted by landlords against purchasers of occupancy holdings, on the ground of non-transferability, in the different districts of Bengal, from the year 1910 to the year 1919.
- (4) A statement of the number of suits for damages instituted by landlords for cutting down and appropriating trees, on occupancy holdings against the raiyats, from the year 1910 to the year 1919?

(e) Is it not a fact that a Bill amending the Bengal Tenancy Act, giving a qualified right of transfer was drafted, circulated, and that opinions were invited on the same?

(i) If the answer to question (e) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table the draft Bill as well as all the papers and correspondence on the subject?

(ii) If the answer to question (e) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state why the Government have dropped the Bill?

(f) (i) Is it not a fact that a considerable number of judicial officers have expressed themselves against non-transferability in their report on the working of the Bengal Tenancy Act?

(ii) If the reply to (f) (i) is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state how many officers wrote in favour of transferability and how many against the same, during the year 1910 to the year 1919?

(g) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member been drawn to the judgment of the full Bench of the Hon'ble the Calcutta High Court, dated the 1st June, 1920, in the case of Chandra Binode Kundu versus Shaikh Alla Bux Dewan, reported in 24 C.W.N., page 818, in which it has been held that all occupancy holdings are liable to be sold for the ordinary debts of the raiyats without their consent?

(h) Is it a fact that since that ruling was issued a good many occupancy holdings have been sold by courts, in spite of the objections of the raiyats?

(i) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state what is the policy of Government on the subject?

(j) Do the Government intend in the course of this year to introduce a Bill amending the Bengal Tenancy Act, by making provision for the grant of the right of transfer to occupancy raiyats?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Dissatisfaction on various grounds has been reported from time to time but the grounds usually given for such dissatisfaction are the exaction of abwabs and other acts which are contrary to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

(b) Yes.

(c) The answer is given below in reply to (e).

(d) Materials for such statements are not readily available and could only be collected by a scrutiny of case records. The labour involved in such a scrutiny would not, in the opinion of Government, be justified.

(e) Yes.

(i) A copy of the draft Bill will be laid on the library table. The papers and correspondence cannot be laid on the table.

(ii) The criticisms on the draft Bill and on the attempts to revise it, showed the great difficulties in the way of framing a satisfactory Bill. In 1919, the Hon'ble Sir J. G. Cumming finally decided not to proceed further for the present, as he considered that there was no real demand for legislation.

(f) (i) and (ii) Reports by judicial officers on the working of the Bengal Tenancy Act have not been received by Government.

(g) A report of this case has been seen.

(h) No information about this has been received.

(i) and (j) A private Bill for amending a part of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been received and is now awaiting the sanction of the Governor-General to its introduction. The policy of Government towards this Bill cannot be stated at present.

Deputy Directors of Agriculture and Sericulture.

111. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state the nature of additional work which necessitated the creation of a post of another Deputy Director of Agriculture and a Deputy Director, Sericulture?

(b) What is the amount spent up to date on sericulture and the result so far achieved?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) The Additional Deputy Director of Agriculture is required to cope with the rapid expansion of work in the Western Circle. The circle as it is now constituted, comprises two large and agriculturally important divisions, viz., Burdwan and Presidency Divisions, and it is impossible for one Deputy Director to manage both the divisions efficiently.

The Sericultural Department has not yet got its administrative head and in view of the great possibilities of the Department it has long been recognised as necessary to provide it with an officer of the status of Deputy Director for Sericulture, who will formulate a policy and direct investigations in the right channels.

(b) The amount spent up to date on Sericulture is Rs. 12,10,176 and the receipts therefrom amount to Rs. 3,59,447. For the results so far achieved, the member is referred to the annual reports of the Agriculture Department. Since 1908 efforts have successfully been made to produce disease-free seed cocoons for supply to professional silk-worm rearers. The sericultural nurseries have been able to supply about 28 per cent. of the total requirements.

Agricultural demonstrators.

112. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state from what class of people agricultural demonstrators to the number of 50 will be recruited and what qualifications will be required of them?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether it is the intention of the authorities to make selections for these appointments from practical agriculturists?

(c) Is there any truth in the complaint that the largest portion of the agricultural allotment goes for the salaries of officials and their travelling expenses and very little is spent for agricultural development or for helping practical agriculturists?

(d) What was the amount of capital and yearly expenditure of every agricultural farm in Bengal, the result of the outlay and income derived up to date?

(e) What are the names and number of districts in which agricultural improvements have been made through the efforts of the Agricultural Department and the nature of any agricultural achievements, if any?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) and (b) The 50 new demonstrators to be appointed in 1921-22 will be recruited from the men who have received practical training in a farm at least for one year and have passed the practical examination held last year by the Deputy Directors of Agriculture or who are now completing their apprenticeship on the farm. Most of these men belong to the agricultural class.

(c) The reply is in the negative.

(d) A statement showing the figures as far as available is laid on the table.

(e) It is not possible to describe in a short space the various activities of the Department in the several districts of the Presidency. The attention of the member is therefore invited to the annual reports of the Department.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 112(d).

Appointment of Council Secretaries from among the non-official members.

113. Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department be pleased to state whether the Government intend to appoint Council Secretaries, from among the non-official members of the local legislature, as provided for by section 52 (4) of the Government of India Act?

(b) If not, why not?

(c) Is it a fact that the provision was made with a view to train up members in the work of actual administration?

(d) How are the proposed fifth Secretary and his staff and also additional Deputy Secretaries and Assistant Secretaries, for which appointments provision has been made in the Secretariat budget, going to be recruited?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) and (b) The matter is at present under the consideration of Government, and no decision has as yet been arrived at.

(c) Paragraph 224 of the Joint Report and the remarks of the Joint Committee in relation to clause 4 of the Government of India Bill indicate the idea underlying the suggestion.

(d) It is presumed that clerical staff is not covered by this question.

The present fifth Secretary is a member of the Indian Civil Service, as also is the one Deputy Secretary so far appointed. Three Assistant Secretaries have been recruited up to date, viz., two from the Bengal Civil Service (Executive), and one from the Provincial Executive Service.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: May I ask when the decision of Government is likely to be known?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: I think a decision will be come to very shortly.

List of certain heads of expenditure not requiring submission to the Council.

114. Colonel A. J. PUGH: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to furnish the following:—

A list, as far as Bengal is concerned, of all items of "expenditure of which the amount is prescribed by or under any law" [referred to in section 72 D (3) (iii) of the Government of India Act], including in each case the specific legislation on the subject, and the details of such items.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): A list of such items in the Budget estimate for the year 1921-22 is laid on the table.

List referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 114.

Discontinuance of the construction of wells and tanks by Mymensingh District Board.

115. Maulvi MUHAMMAD RAFIQUE UDDIN KHAN: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the District Board of Mymensingh has discontinued the construction of wells and tanks in the district?

(b) If it is a fact, will the Government be pleased to state the reason why it has done so?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) It is not a fact. Rupees 52,264 were provided on this account in the Budget for 1920-21 and Rs. 51,100 have been provided in the Budget for 1921-22.

(b) No reply is necessary.

Relief of cultivators in Khulna district suffering from the cyclone of 1920.

116. Babu SAILAJA NATH ROY CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state—

- (i) the amount spent on gratuitous relief and advances to the cultivators in the district of Khulna after the last cyclone;
- (ii) the number of men who received such aid; and
- (iii) the number of men from whom the advances have not yet been realised and the amount still outstanding?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (i) A sum of Rs. 33,526 was spent on gratuitous relief, and Rs. 1,77,973 were advanced to cultivators.

(ii) Gratuitous relief was given to 19,867 persons, while 15,995 persons received advances.

(iii) Advances have not yet been realised from 9,421 persons; the amount still outstanding is Rs. 1,03,484.

Rent Controller.

117. Babu SAILAJA NATH ROY CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state the reasons why a pensioner was appointed as Rent Controller in supersession of the claims of equally capable men?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: Government appointed Rai Bangsidhar Banerjee Bahadur, C.I.E., after careful consideration, in view of his intimate knowledge of land values and rents in Calcutta.

Dietary arrangement in Campbell Hospital.

118. Babu SAILAJA NATH ROY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the patients in the Campbell Hospital suffer great inconvenience for want of proper dietary arrangements?

(b) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of seeing that necessary improvement is made so as to ensure every comfort to the patients?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The answer is in the negative.

(b) No reply is necessary.

The Urdu shorthand reporter.

119. Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Political Department aware that public speeches are more frequently delivered now-a-days in the vernacular than in English, and that the vernacular shorthand reporters who are called upon to report them, have to do the double work of deciphering their shorthand notes and translating them into English while the English shorthand reporters have simply to transcribe their notes?

(b) Is it a fact that the present permanent Urdu shorthand reporter of this Presidency is the only Urdu shorthand-knowing graduate in India?

(c) Is it a fact that he has broken the record of the highest speed previously attained in Urdu shorthand, for which he was awarded an honour certificate in addition to shorthand diploma?

(d) Is it a fact that he was granted by the Government a scale of pay which is half of that of the English shorthand reporters?

(e) Is it a fact that the scale of pay of the Urdu shorthand reporter is less than that of the Bengali shorthand reporters?

(f) Is it a fact that when the Government of Bihar and Orissa advertised for Urdu shorthand reporters on a salary of Rs. 300 to Rs. 500 per month, according to qualifications, the Urdu shorthand reporter of this province applied through the proper channel for the said post, but the local Government refused to forward his application?

(g) Is it a fact that the Urdu shorthand reporter submitted a representation to the Government for increment of his pay nearly four months ago, but he has not received any encouraging reply as yet?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) It is the fact that vernacular reporters have to decipher their notes and then to translate them into English.

(b) It is not known whether this is so or not.

(c) The instructor at the College where this reporter was trained stated that he has attained a speed of 160 words a minute. It is not known whether he was awarded an honour certificate.

(d) and (e) The pay of the reporters is as follows:—

English, Rs. 200—10—300 a month.

Urdu, Rs. 100—5—150 a month.

It is proposed to appoint Bengali reporters on Rs. 150—10—200 a month. The Urdu reporter was trained at Government expense. He received a scholarship of Rs. 50 a month and his tuition fees, amounting to Rs. 37-8, were paid for a period of about 18 months on the understanding that he would be employed on a pay of Rs. 100—5—150 if he reached the necessary standard of efficiency.

(f) The application for employment under the Government of Bihar and Orissa was withheld by the Inspector-General of Police on the ground that as the reporter had been trained at the expense of this Government he should not seek employment elsewhere so soon after his appointment.

(g) He submitted a representation for increased pay to the Inspector-General of Police in November, 1920. The question of granting him an ad-interim allowance is under consideration.

Schemes of local bodies on primary education and amounts of Government grants thereto.

120. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: Will the hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to make a statement showing the local bodies that submitted schemes of primary education during 1919-21 and the amounts of Government aid granted in each instance?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of EDUCATION (the hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter): In accordance with section 3 of the Bengal Primary Education Act, 1919, the Government of Bengal called for certain statements from the municipalities of Bengal through the Divisional Commissioners. A special officer (Mr. Biss) was appointed to examine the replies and to draw up detailed schemes in consultation with the municipal authorities and local inspecting officers.

The replies received by Government were sent to Mr. Biss, Appendix B gives the names of 27 municipalities that did not submit returns. Of the 88 (vide Appendix A), that did reply, three (Santipur, Pabna and Asansol) did not offer complete constructive proposals regarding finance. The statements submitted by most of the remaining municipalities were in need of careful revision and re-statement.

Mr. Biss has already drawn up detailed draft schemes in connection with 35 municipalities, on the basis of free primary education for all boys of 6 to 10 years of age as a minimum and of a grant of half capital and recurring cost from Government. These schemes have been submitted to the municipalities for their consideration. Of these municipalities two (Rangpur and Chandpur) have already accepted the scheme (as drawn up by Mr. Biss) in full. Two have indefinitely postponed its consideration—Bankura and Dinajpur. Five (vide Appendix C) have not yet made any reply on the subject. Fifteen (Appendix D) have expressed their approval of their schemes, but the financial arrangements connected with them are still under discussion, while eleven (Appendix E) have for various reasons not yet been able to come to a conclusion.

Darjeeling has submitted a scheme which is developing and to which Government have sanctioned a grant of Rs. 25,000. A grant of Rs. 6,000 has also been sanctioned to Rangpur municipality.

Only one District Board has put forward a scheme for primary education, namely, Khulna, and Government have sanctioned Rs. 8,000 for carrying out an experiment in organising three unions completely for primary education. In addition to these three unions, 20 union areas (Appendix F) have been worked out by Mr. Biss and the investigation is still proceeding.

Appendices A to F referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 120.

Sub-registry office at Fakirhat in Khulna.

121. Babu SAILAJA NATH ROY CHAUDHURI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that there is a strong popular demand for a sub-registry office at Fakirhat in the district of Khulna?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what action, if any, Government contemplate taking in the matter?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) The answer is in the negative.

(b) In April, 1917, the District Registrar of Khulna recommended the opening of an independent sub-registry office at Fakirhat as an experimental measure for one year, but this proposal could not be taken up for want of funds. Since then no further proposals have been received either from the public or from the Registrar of Khulna on the subject, and no action is contemplated at present.

Want of adequate waterways in parts of Chittagong.

122. Munshi AYUB ALI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation aware that the cultivation of certain able parts of the thanas Hathazari, Raojan and Fatikchhari in Chittagong, is rendered very difficult for the want of a proper drainage system.

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that this is due to the want of adequate number of water-ways across the Hathazari-Raojan Road, the shallowness of the Halda and Karnafuli rivers and to the zig-zag course of the Halda?

(c) What action, if any, are the Government taking to relieve the stress of the people in this regard?

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of IRRIGATION (the Hon'ble the Maharajadhiraja Bahadur of Burdwan): (a) and (b) Government have no information.

(c) The question does not arise.

Amelioration of the condition of the subordinate educational service.

123. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state what steps are being taken for the amelioration of the condition of the subordinate educational service officers?

(b) Is it a fact that the revised scales of pay of the Indian educational service and provincial educational service officers have been given effect from 1st December, 1919?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state from what date the scheme for the subordinate educational service will come into effect?

(d) Is there any truth in the statement that ad-interim allowances have been granted to some officers of the subordinate educational service, while the claims of others have not been considered?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to explain the reasons for this differential treatment?

(f) Are the Government considering the desirability of removing this anomaly at an early date?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) A committee was appointed, with Mr. W. C. Wordsworth as its President, to enquire into the matter. Its report is now being considered by Government.

(b) Yes.

(c) Government are not in a position to make any definite pronouncement on the subject.

(d) and (e) A temporary ad-interim allowance was sanctioned from April, 1920, to all ministerial officers, subject to certain conditions, including the revision of their pay. Only those members of the subordinate educational service, who are clerks and who could satisfy the necessary conditions, have been allowed to participate in its benefit. As the temporary allowance was intended exclusively for ministerial officers, it was not possible to grant it to members of the subordinate educational service as such.

(f) In view of the replies to clauses (a), (d) and (e) above, the question does not arise.

Births and deaths in Bengali Labour Ward of Eden Hospital.

The Hon'ble SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: A statement is laid on the table.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 124, showing the number of births and deaths of children in the Bengali ward of the Eden Hospital for the period 1918 to 1920.

Professors and lecturers and demonstrators.

125. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the qualifications, duties and responsibilities of the professors in the provincial educational service and the lecturers and demonstrators in the subordinate educational service are almost identical?

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative, will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state whether the Government propose to place the lecturers and demonstrators on an equal footing with the professors?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) and (b) The member is referred to the answer given by Mr. O'Malley in reply to unstarred question No. 5 put to the Bengal Legislative Council on the 12th April, 1920, by Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur.

Municipal contribution to Assistant Surgeons' pay in municipal dispensaries.

126. Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

- (i) the names of the municipalities in Bengal that are required to pay contribution towards the pay of Government assistant surgeons in charge of municipal dispensaries, with the amount of contribution each is required to pay per annum;
- (ii) what is the number of beds for indoor patients in each of these dispensaries, and how many in the average remained vacant during the last five years per month;
- (iii) whether the statement is true that this contribution has proved too heavy a burden on account of the high prices of medicine and diet and that some municipalities have applied for being relieved of the burden; and
- (iv) whether Government contemplate taking any action in the matter?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (i) and (ii) A statement is laid on the table. Information as to the monthly average of beds which were vacant during the last five years is not in the possession of Government.

(iii) Complaints to this effect have been made and some municipalities have asked to be exempted from paying the contribution.

(iv) The matter is under consideration and Government are not at present in a position to make a statement.

Difficulty of primary and middle schools when the District Board stops grants for mismanagement.

127. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM: Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that the primary, middle vernacular and middle English schools fall into great difficulty and awkward position when the District Board stops its grant to those schools for a little mismanagement for want of funds?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: I have no information.

Assessment of income-tax in the Bakarganj district.

128. Maulvi FAZLAL KARIM:(a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Finance be pleased to state the amount of income-tax realised in each subdivision of the district of Bakarganj, during the years 1919 and 1920, year by year, other than those deducted from the salaries of Government officers?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the assessors of income-tax generally take capacity rather than liability of the assessee to pay the tax as a basis of taxation?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether appellate courts make any enquiry about the grounds of exemption or reduction of the income-tax assessed?

(d) If so, how and through what agency?

(e) Is it a fact that there was a proposal to appoint an advisory committee in each subdivision to help in the proper assessment of income-tax?

(f) If so, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state the stage at which the proposal now is?

(g) If no committees have been appointed, will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to say whether the Government are considering the desirability of appointing such committees with the subdivisional officer as President and at least one non-official representative from each thana in each subdivision to help in the assessment of income-tax?

The Hon'ble Mr. KERR: (a) The income-tax realised in each subdivision of the district of Bakarganj in 1919 and 1920 (excluding income-tax deducted from the salaries of Government officers) is noted below :—

		1919.	1920.
		Rs.	Rs.
Sadar	...	85,484	89,652
Pirojpur	..	21,348	14,729
Patuakhali	...	15,297	16,442
Bhola	..	13,280	13,504

(b) No.

(c) and (d) Yes. Enquiries are made by appellate courts, where necessary. Such enquiries are made by the courts themselves or through the agency of Income-tax Deputy Collectors and Income-tax Assessors.

(e) and (f) Yes, but the proposal was dropped for the reasons stated in the Government of India resolution, No. 1287 F., dated the 11th August, 1915, a copy of which is placed on the library table.

(g) No.

District Judge of Dacca.

129. Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Appointment Department been drawn to the fact that the District Judge of Dacca—

(i) attends court very irregularly; and

(ii) is in the habit of imposing fines on the clerks and other ministerial officers, in contravention of the standing order of the Government to the contrary?

(b) If the answers to (i) and (ii) are in the affirmative, what action, if any, are the Government taking in the matter?

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: (a) and (b) Government are not aware of the truth or otherwise of these allegations, but are making enquiry.

Equipment for saline injection in mufassal dispensaries.

130. Babu SAILAJA NATH ROY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that very few of the hospitals and charitable dispensaries in the mufassal have got proper equipment for saline injection in cholera cases?

(b) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of directing that adequate arrangement should be made without delay?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) and (b) The Sadar hospitals and Government dispensaries are provided with apparatus for saline injections. Government have no information as to how far the dispensaries under local bodies are provided with the necessary apparatus. It is proposed to draw the attention of the dispensary committees, which are the responsible authorities for such dispensaries, to the desirability of providing apparatus.

Muhammadan student for M.A. class in Sanskrit.

131. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Education aware that the Calcutta University refused to admit into their M.A. class in Sanskrit one

Mr. Abdul Majid, who graduated with honours in Sanskrit from the Presidency College, in 1920, on the ground that he was a Muhammadan?

(b) If so, what steps have the Government taken in the matter?

(c) If no steps have been taken, are the Government considering the desirability of moving in the matter?

The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. MITTER: (a) No.

(b) and (c) The allegation is being brought to the notice of the Vice-Chancellor and Syndicate.

Conduct of nurses in female wards of Calcutta Medical College Hospital.

132. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to make a statement showing the number of beds in the female wards of the Calcutta Medical College and the number of nurses attached to each ward?

(b) What is the total number of nurses in the Calcutta Medical College Hospital and how many of them are Indians?

(c) Are the Government aware of a feeling that exists that the ignorance, on the part of European and Anglo-Indian nurses of the language wants, customs and manners of the Indian patients in the female wards often lead to unhappy results, the patients being not unoften neglected, insulted and ill-treated?

(d) Is it true that a general notion prevails amongst the nurses and staff of the Eden Hospital that the patients admitted into the Bengali Labour Ward often come from disreputable classes, and that this is often responsible for insults and ill-treatment of respectable patients at the hands of nurses and dais?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) The number of beds for females is as follows:—

Medical College Hospitals	68
Prince of Wales' Hospital	20
Eden Hospital	105

Each ward has two nurses on day duty, and there is one nurse on night duty for every two wards.

(b) The figures are as follows:—

	Total number.	Number of nurses.
Medical College Hospitals	.. 82	...
Eden Hospital	... 57	21

(c) The answer is in the negative. Government must take strong exception to the insinuation, conveyed under the cover of this question, that the patients are neglected, insulted and ill-treated.

(d) The answer is in the negative. There is no differentiation in the treatment of patients, whatever their class may be, and no complaints have been received by the Professor of Midwifery or Sister-in-charge of insults to, or ill-treatment of, patients of any class. In this case also Government consider it necessary to object to the insinuation of insult and ill-treatment which is conveyed by the question.

Loan to the late Nawab of Dacca.

133. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state the balance of the loan given to the late Nawab Sir Khwaja Salimulla of Dacca, and the probable period during which it is likely to be repaid?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: The balance of the loan given to the late Nawab Sir Khwaja Salimulla of Dacca amounts to Rs. 8,89,000. It will take 32½ years to repay it in full.

Decrease in milk supply.

134. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to make a statement giving the average price of milk in Calcutta and different district towns of the Presidency for each of the last seven years?

(b) Has there been a gradual increase in the supply of milk in these areas commensurate with the increase in population?

(c) If not, what are the Government going to do to effect an increase in the supply of milk?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) and (b) The information asked for is not available.

(c) The Agricultural Department is conducting experiments at the Rangpur Farm to improve the breed of cattle and the Co-operative Department are trying to improve the supply of milk in Calcutta through the agency of Co-operative Milk Societies.

Choked-up waterways or silted-up rivers in Dacca and Mymensingh.

135. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Irrigation be leased to state what choked-up waterways or silted-up rivers, in the districts of Dacca and Mymensingh have been opened up during the last ten years?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of URDUWAN: No choked-up waterways or silted-up rivers have been opened up in the districts referred to during the past ten years.

Revision of pay of officers of Jail Department.

136. Khan Bahadur Nawabzada K. M. AFZAL: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state whether it is a fact that under the scheme for the revision of pay of officers of the Jail Department in Bengal, probationary and sub. pro tem. periods of service will not be counted towards increment?

(b) Do the probationary and sub. pro tem. periods of service count for increment in the case of sub-inspectors of police?

(c) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of placing the officers of the Jail Department on the same footing as sub-inspectors of police in this matter?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) The answer is in the affirmative.

(b) No. The matter is under the consideration of Government.

(c) This question does not arise.

Medical institutions.

137. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state—

- (i) how many medical institutions are there in Bengal and in what places are they situated;
- (ii) how many students are getting education in them at present;
- (iii) how many students applied for education, how many were admitted, and how many were refused admission in 1920; and
- (iv) whether there have been previously any communications for the establishment of a medical school in the Chittagong Division?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (i), (ii) and (iii) statement is laid on the table.

(iv) Yes.

Indian Medical Service officers.

138. Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: (a) Has the attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government been drawn to Devolution Rule No. 12, issued by notification, dated Delhi, December 16th, 1920, which states that a local Government shall employ such number of Indian Medical Service officers in such appointments and on such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State in Council?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state what appointments in the Medical, Sanitary and other Departments, respectively, have been specifically reserved in the past for Indian Medical Service officers and which of these appointments are at present held by officers of this service?

(c) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased further to state whether the Government have considered the question of the possible reservation of posts other than these for officers of the Indian Medical Service?

(d) What are the substantive appointments in Bengal at present open to officers of the Indian Medical Service?

(e) Which of these appointments are at present occupied by officers of that service?

(f) What is the present cost to Government of the substantive appointments referred to above?

(g) What will be the likely increased maximum cost if all the above posts are filled by officers of the Indian Medical Service?

(h) In the event of all these appointments being occupied by Indian Medical Service officers, how will the increased cost be met?

(i) Is it proposed to employ the full sanctioned strength of Indian Medical Service officers in Bengal as soon as they become available?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) Yes.

(b) A statement (A) is laid on the table.

(c) Yes.

(d) and (e) A statement (B) is laid on the table.

(f) About Rs. 61,000 a month.

(g) It is estimated that the additional cost would be about Rs. 80,000 a month if all the Indian Medical Service officers allotted to Bengal, who are now on deputation to the Military Department, returned to civil duty.

(h) This is a hypothetical proposition depending on a possible contingency, to which Government are not in a position to reply.

(i) If the Government of India place the full staff of Indian Medical Service officers at the disposal of this Government, their services must necessarily be utilized.

No. 2316-Medl., dated Calcutta, the 21st December 1920.

RESOLUTION by—A. MARR, Esq., Secretary to the Government of Bengal, Financial Department.

THE recommendations of the Public Services Commission and of the Medical Services Committee on the subject of the pay of Civil Assistant Surgeons have for some time past been under the consideration of the Government of India and of the local Governments. The sanction of the Secretary of State for India to a revision of the pay of these officers has now been received and the local Government has been authorised to fix new scales, subject to the limits sanctioned by the Secretary of State. After careful consideration, the Governor in Council has decided to adopt the following revised scales of pay. The existing scales are also shown for purposes of comparison :—

				Selection grade for Assistant Surgeons appointed to be Civil Surgeons 1,000

Until further orders, the passing of departmental examinations after 7 and 14 years of service will continue, as at present, to be a condition precedent to the drawing of further increments

2 Temporary Civil Assistant Surgeons will in future draw the same pay, viz., Rs. 150 per mensem as probationers. The pay of Assistant Surgeons appointed to officiate as Civil Surgeons will continue to be regulated by article 142 of the Civil Service Regulations as at present. The selection grade is limited to 25 per cent of Civil Surgeoncies reserved for Military and Civil Assistant Surgeons taken together. There being 12 Civil Surgeoncies at present available in this Presidency for both these classes of officers, there will be three posts in the selection grade, one of which will be reserved for Military Assistant Surgeons and two for Civil Assistant Surgeons.

3 The officers at present in service will be permitted to count the whole of their service towards the new time-scale, and the various allowances at present drawn by them in addition to their grade pay will continue to be drawn by them in addition to the new scale of pay.

4 These orders will have effect from 3rd September 1920.

5 Contributions are at present realised from local bodies for the services of Assistant Surgeons lent to them at the rate of Rs. 290 per mensem in the case of local fund dispensaries to which Assistant Surgeons were lent before the 1st August 1913, and at the rate of Rs. 280 per mensem in other cases. In consequence of the increase of pay of Assistant Surgeons now sanctioned, these rates will require revision. Orders on the subject will be issued separately.

Army Instruction referred to in the statement A mentioned in the reply to unstarred question No. 139.

Army Instruction (India) No. 544, dated Simla, the 27th July 1920

544. Increased rates of pay for Assistant Surgeons of the Indian Medical Department.

With the approval of the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India the Government of India have decided that the pay of Assistant Surgeons of the Indian Medical Department shall, with effect from the 1st April 1920, be revised as detailed below. The revised rates are purely temporary and provisional pending a decision on the future of the Department. The new rates have been granted in consideration amongst other things, of the present high cost of living and will be subject to revision on this account also, either upwards or downwards, to an extent not exceeding 20 per cent according as the cost of living rises or falls. The first revision will take place after an interval of five years and subsequent revisions will be undertaken at such intervals as circumstances may determine:—

* This rate will only apply to those Assistant Surgeons who entered the service before March 1908.

2. Charge allowances as admissible under Army Regulations, India, Volume I, paragraph 398 (b), will be drawn in addition to the new rates of pay.

3. Lodging, fuel and light allowances, granted to the families of officers during the war, will cease with effect from the date of this Instruction.

4. The army of Occupation bonus is not admissible concurrently with these new rates of pay which will not carry any claim to exchange compensation allowance.

5. Until further orders, leave allowances will be regulated according to existing rules (Army Regulations, India, Volume I, paragraph 435). The allowance for leave in India will be calculated on the existing rates of grade pay, and not to the increased rates now sanctioned.

6. With the introduction of the new rates of pay the concession† of free quarters will be restricted to those Military Assistant Surgeons in military employment whose duties require them to live in particular quarters in order to be near their work.

7. The Government of India reserve to themselves the right to withdraw or modify the present concession under which salaries not exceeding Rs. 500 per mensem are exempt from Indian income-tax.

A. H. BINGLEY, Major-General,
Secretary to the Government of India,
Army Department

Industrial and technical institutions.

140. Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing a list of all the industrial and technical institutions in Bengal, under the following heads:—

(a) Controlled and financed by Government—

(i) total number of institutions; and

(ii) number of institutions intended mainly for particular communities—with the names of the communities;

(b) Aided by Government—

- (i) total number of institutions; and
- (ii) number of institutions intended mainly for particular communities—with the names of the communities; and
- (iii) number of institutions under the management of Christian mission bodies;

(c) Managed entirely by private enterprise—

- (i) total number of institutions; and
- (ii) number of institutions intended mainly for particular communities—with the names of the communities?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) (i) Twenty-three.

(ii) One intended for European and Eurasian girls.

(b) (i) Thirty-nine.

(ii) Ten institutions intended mainly for Christians and one for Muhammadans.

(iii) Twenty-five.

(c) (i) Thirty.

(ii) One for Muhammadans.

One for Jains.

Want of drinking water at Chikandi.

141. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state whether it is a fact that there is a great dearth of good drinking water at Chikandi in the Faridpur district?

(b) What steps are the Government taking to remove the want?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: (a) It is reported that there is a dearth of good drinking water owing to the river having silted up and to the fact that a tank excavated by the District Board has not been a complete success in consequence of the sandy soil.

(b) This is a matter for the District Board of Faridpur. The Chairman reports that steps are being taken to have a masonry well sunk in the locality.

Technological Institute in Calcutta.

142. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries aware that the United Provinces has got an up-to-date Technological College of its own at Cawnpur?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state when the proposed Calcutta Technological Institute will be an accomplished fact?

(c) What will be the scope of the proposed institution?

(d) Is it a fact that the higher branches of technology will not find place in its programme of work?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) Yes, Cawnpur has got a Technological College but it cannot yet be called an up-to-date College. So far as is known the College is at present primarily a research institute.

(b) The member is referred to the answer given to the unstarred question No. 6 asked by him at the meeting of the Council held on the 28th February last.

(c) The school will be organised primarily for giving theoretical training to the apprentices employed in the large industrial workshops in and round Calcutta.

(d) Yes, the higher branches of technology will not find a place in its programme of work at present, but in the selection of its site, in the design of the buildings and also in the constitution of the management of the school, allowance has been made for its gradual expansion into a fully-equipped technological institute.

Scholarship for technical training in foreign countries.

143. Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state whether it is the intention to award from Bengal only one Government scholarship for an Anglo-Indian and another for an Indian student for technical training in foreign countries?

(b) Are the Government contemplating increasing the number of these technical scholarships?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (a) Under the existing rules State technical scholarships are open to any one who is a statutory native of India, including both Indians and domiciled Anglo-Indians. Nothing is laid down with regard to the distribution of these scholarships as between Indians and Anglo-Indians. The total number of scholarships that may at present be held by candidates from Bengal is four, and each scholarship is tenable for three years or more. As soon as one of the scholarships becomes vacant, necessary steps are taken to select another candidate. The selection rests in the first instance with the Board of Selection appointed for the purpose.

(b) No increase in the number of these technical scholarships is at present contemplated.

Ferry-service on the Ganges between Malda and Murshidabad districts.

144. Rai Sahib NILMANI CHATAK: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state—

- (i) whether the portion of the river Ganges lying between the districts of Malda and Murshidabad is a Government estate bearing a tauzi number; and
- (ii) whether any private party is allowed to ply any ferry service on this portion of the Ganges not as a lessee but for his personal profit as owner?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to lay on the table a statement of the current year's income from each of the ferries maintained by the Government on that portion of the Ganges and state how the income is credited in the Collectorate?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) (i) A portion of the river Ganges lying between the districts of Malda and Murshidabad is a Government fishery estate bearing tauzi No. 557 of the Malda Collectorate. No such estate exists in the district of Murshidabad.

(ii) Permission has not been given by the Collector of Malda to any private person to maintain a ferry service over that portion of the Ganges.

(b) There are no ferries maintained by Government on the portion of the Ganges referred to.

Telegraph and Railway connection between Nawabganj and English Bazar towns.

145. Rai Sahib NILMANI CHATAK: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Public Works be pleased to state whether it is in the contemplation of the Government to connect Nawabganj in the district of Malda with the headquarters of that district by—

- (1) telegraph, and
- (2) railway

lines? If so, when?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (1) The proposal to open a combined post and telegraph office at Nawabganj had to be dropped, as the inhabitants of the place failed to furnish the necessary security by the execution of a guarantee bond required by the Telegraph Department against any loss that might be incurred on account of the working of that office.

(2) The construction of a railway of the nature referred to in the question is a subject which should be initiated by the Government of India

(Railway Board). In reply to an enquiry the Railway Board have informed this Government that, after investigation, they are of opinion that the prospects of traffic do not warrant the proposal for railway extension to Nwabganj being proceeded with.

Summary procedure for recovering arrear rent.

146. Rai Sahib NILMANI CHATAK: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to lay on the table a statement showing—

- (i) the names of the landlords in the different districts of the Presidency in whose zamindari the summary procedure for the recovery of rent under section 158A of Chapter XIII-A of the Bengal Tenancy Act has been introduced with dates; and
- (ii) the number of certificates annually issued in each case up to the end of February, 1921?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: A statement is placed on the table relating to part (i) of the question. The information required in part (ii) of the question will be obtained and supplied later.

Statement referred to in the reply to unstarred question No. 146.

Name of landlord.	Date of introduction into his estate of summary procedure for recovery of rent
(i)
(a) Itisham-ul-mulk, Rais-ud-daula, Amir-ul-Omra Nawab Sir Asif Qudr Saiyid Wasif Ali Mirza Khan Bahadur Mahabat Jung, K.C.V.O., Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad.	1st October, 1917.

Excise Superintendents and Inspectors.

147. Mr. S. R. DAS: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state:—

- (i) whether the qualifications required for direct recruitment of Excise Inspectors are exactly the same as those required for direct recruitment of Excise Superintendents;
- (ii) whether it is a fact that Excise Superintendents and Inspectors belong to the supervising staff of the Excise Department;
- (iii) in what respects, if any, are their duties different;

- (iv) whether in recruiting a Superintendent and an Inspector any principle is followed in differentiating between their qualifications, and, if so, what is that principle;
- (v) how many direct appointments of Excise Superintendents have been made during the last five years and how many by way of promotion from the rank of Excise Inspector, giving the figures for each year separately;
- (vi) whether there is any fixed proportion for recruitment direct as Excise Superintendents and by way of promotion from the rank of Excise Inspector;
- (vii) how many Inspectors of Excise are now officiating as Excise Superintendents and for how many years have each of such Inspectors been officiating as such;
- (viii) whether any of them have the qualifications now required for recruitment either as Inspectors or as Superintendents;
- (ix) how many graduates have been recruited as Sub-Inspectors;
- (x) how many direct appointments as Inspectors have been made during the last five years and how many by way of promotion from the rank of Excise Inspector;
- (xi) whether it is the policy of the Government to encourage promotions from Sub-Inspectors to Inspectors and from Inspectors to Superintendents?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (i) Yes. The minimum qualifications are the same.

(ii) Yes.

(iii) The Superintendent of Excise is the chief executive Excise officer in the district and is directly responsible for every branch of the Excise administration, whereas the primary duty of an Inspector of Excise employed on executive work is to assist the Superintendent of Excise in the training and supervision of Sub-Inspectors and other subordinate executive officers. For full details of the duties the member is referred to paragraphs 110 and 112 of the Excise Manual, Volume II. as well as pages xxxi—xxxiv of the Index to this volume of the Manual.

(iv) No particular principle is followed. Full consideration is given to all the qualifications of the candidates.

(v) Nine Superintendents of Excise have been recruited direct during the last five years, viz., one in 1917, five in 1918 and three in 1920. Four Inspectors of Excise have been promoted to the rank of Superintendent during the same period, viz., one in 1917, two in 1918 and one in 1919.

(vi) No

(vii) Eight Inspectors of Excise are now officiating as Superintendents of Excise, with effect from the dates shown against their names below:—

- (1) Babu Kshetra Mohan Bose, from 15th September, 1918.
- (2) Mr. A. E. Smith, from 24th September, 1918.
- (3) Babu Probodh Chandra Sen, from 10th August, 1918.
- (4) Babu Banikanta Mukherjee, from 22nd August, 1917.
- (5) Babu Srish Charan Roy, from 23rd February, 1918.
- (6) Mr. M. R. Cox, from 6th July, 1920.
- (7) Maulvi Shafiqur Rahman Siddique, from 18th January, 1921.
- (8) Mr. C. W. Craven, from 18th February, 1921.

(viii) None of them have the qualifications at present required, as they are senior Inspectors recruited under the old rules.

(ix) Nineteen graduates have been recruited as Sub-Inspectors of Excise since the new recruitment rules came into force.

(x) Twenty-five Inspectors of Excise have been appointed direct during the last five years and sixteen Sub-Inspectors have been promoted to the rank of Inspector during the same period.

(xi) Yes. Officers of outstanding merit have been promoted and it is intended to continue the policy.

Supply of milk for the benefit of child population in towns.

148. Babu BROJENDRA KISHOR RAY CHAUDHURI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to state what steps, if any, have been taken by the Government for the supply of pure and cheap milk for the benefit of the child population in town areas?

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: Government are not directly responsible for the supply of pure milk at a cheap rate to municipal areas. The attention of the member is, however, invited to section 6 of the Bengal Food Adulteration Act, 1919, which provides inter alia for the supply of pure milk. It is also proposed to incorporate provisions regarding milk supply in the Calcutta Municipal Amendment Bill and to consult local bodies outside Calcutta as to the desirability of legislation on the subject.

Duties and allotment of Agricultural officers.

149. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Agriculture and Industries be pleased to state:—

- (i) what are the duties of District Agricultural Officers;
- (ii) whether every district in Bengal is provided with one such officer;

- (iii) the material improvement effected in Bakarganj by the officer in charge of the Department;
- (iv) the amount drawn as travelling allowance during the period in which the improvement has been effected; and
- (v) the steps taken for the improvement of agriculture in the agricultural subdivision of Rhola?

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: (i) The member is referred to the reply given to unstarred question No. 98 asked by Maulvi Fazlal Karim.

(ii) The member is referred to the reply given to unstarred question No. 64 asked by Rai Harendranath Chaudhuri.

(iii) The chief items of improvement are:—

(1) Distribution of improved seeds of rice and jute raised by the experts.—In most places Indrasail and Kataktara paddies have proved their superiority over the local varieties. The present area under the former is reported to be over 12,000 acres. The superiority of the Kakya Bombai jute over the local varieties has been established and the area under this crop is now said to be over 13,000 acres. The demands for improved rice and jute seeds are still very heavy and the areas under them are steadily increasing.

(2) Introduction of new crops.—The cultivation of potato has been established in many parts of the district. The introduction of the improved variety of sugar-cane is progressing gradually. Rangpur tobacco has been introduced in places. Ground-nut is also being tried with success.

(3) Formation of agricultural associations.—Several agricultural associations have been started, and endeavours are now being made to start seed farms through the members.

(iv) The amount drawn as travelling allowance by the District Agricultural Officer, Bakarganj, from the date of his appointment in 1915 till 1920 is as follows:—

					Rs.	A.	P.
1915	553	6	3
1916	722	15	6
1917	923	3	6
1918	1,207	12	3
1919	1,035	3	3
1920	961	4	6
Total				...	5,403	13	3

(v) In the Bhola subdivision the agricultural work was first taken up in 1916-17. The following crops have been introduced with success:—Potato, Indrasail and Kataktara paddies, Kakya Bombai jute, Tanna sugarcane and tobacco. Small demonstration gardens have been established in places by the Government khas mahal. Several agricultural associations have been started at Daulatpur and an endeavour is being made to extend their number.

Number of Muhammadan munsifs.

150. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state—

- (i) whether any attempt is being made to raise the number of Muhammadan munsifs to a third of the total strength; and
- (ii) whether it is the intention of Government to give the few new appointments for which provision has been made in the Budget to Muhammadans?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (i) The Government have accepted the principle of communal representation in the services. Under the provisions of the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, the local Government are bound to appoint as munsifs persons nominated by the High Court, and the High Court has been addressed on the need for representation of the different communities in the Bengal Civil Service (Judicial). It is hoped that a definite scheme will be formulated before long.

(ii) There will be no fresh recruitment for the new appointments referred to, when sanctioned by the Secretary of State, as these appointments will be absorbed by officiating munsifs.

Increase of fares on inland steam service.

151. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Marine Department aware that the Rivers Steam Navigation and India General Navigation and Railway Companies are always increasing fares on all the services on which they have a monopoly, and that this has caused great hardship and inconvenience to the travelling public?

(b) Are the Government considering the desirability of taking such action as they deem fit to put a stop to this practice?

MEMBER in charge of MARINE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): (a) Government are informed that the Rivers Steam Navigation Company, Limited, and the India General Navigation and Railway Company, Limited, increased intermediate and third class fares on all steamer services by 10 per cent. on 1st August, 1916, and again on 1st January, 1921. In addition, third class fares were increased by 10 per cent. in 1919 on three sections, viz., Khulna to Hulerhat, Sobipur to Narayanganj, and Narayanganj to Goalundo. The Companies state that these enhancements were made in every case to assist in meeting the increasing cost of maintaining and working their services. Government are not aware that these increases have caused great hardship and inconvenience to the travelling public.

(b) In the circumstances Government do not consider that any action is required.

Amount of rent realised by zamindars from tenants.

152. Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state whether it is a fact that the figures in the answer to question No. 14 (c) (unstarred) of the 28th February, 1921, are calculated on the amount of cesses, which includes calculations made on rent-free holdings?

(b) In that case is it not a fact that the actual amount of rents realised is far less than what is given in the answer?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Yes.

(b) To obtain an exact figure of the amount of rent realised by zamindars, the figure calculated for the levying of cess on rent-free holdings should be deducted. It is not possible to state this figure Cesses and "abwabs" realized from tenants of the Dacca Nawab estates.

153. Mr. S. M. BOSE: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Department of Revenue (Land Revenue) be pleased to state whether it is a fact that cesses or abwabs, under the name of taharr, mamuli, britti, gramkharach, nazzar, etc., are realised from the tenants of the Dacca Nawab family estates which are being managed by the Court of wards?

(b) If so, under whose orders were or are such cesses collected?

(c) What is the total amount of such cesses realized in 1326 and 1327 B.S.?

(d) Are the Government considering the desirability of passing immediate orders for the cessation of the levy of these cesses and also for their refund?

(e) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to say whether it is a fact that permission to the tenants to dig tanks in the Dacca Nawab family estates is not given by the manager without the payment of a salami?

(f) If so, are the Government considering the desirability of passing orders for stopping such levy of salami?

(g) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that the administration by the Court of Wards of the Dacca Nawab family estates has given rise to considerable dissatisfaction and unrest among the tenants?

(h) If so, what steps are being taken to allay such dissatisfaction and unrest?

(i) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state whether there are any, and, if so, how many, dismissed Government servants, employed in responsible positions by the Court of Wards for the Dacca Nawab family estates?

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: (a) Taharir and mamuli are realized. Nazzar is also realized, but this is not a cess or abwab.

(b) There are no orders on the subject.

(c) The exact amount is not known.

(d) A general enquiry on the subject will in due course be made by the Board of Revenue.

(e) Yes.

(f) The Government are not prepared to consider the matter without due enquiry as to the general custom on the subject. The Board of Revenue will be asked to enquire.

(g) No.

(h) The question does not arise.

(i) Yes; one. A dismissed sub-inspector of police is employed. A reference was made to the Inspector-General of Police before he was employed.

Standing Committees.

The PRESIDENT: I wish to inform the Council that His Excellency the Governor has approved of the Standing Committees as elected by the Council.

Resolutions.

(under the rules for the discussion of matters of general public interest).

Technological Institute in Calcutta.

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! The debate on the resolution on the establishment of a Technological Institute in Calcutta will be resumed.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I should like to make a few preliminary observations of a general character on the resolutions that have been moved. A few weeks ago a resolution was passed by this Council on vocational training, and that resolution is engaging the serious attention of the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of Education. Here we have three cognate resolutions on a technological college or institute. A little later on we have two resolutions, Nos. 10 and 36, about the establishment of an agricultural school in every Division in Bengal. A little further on, in No. 39, we have a resolution that an industrial school with a workshop attached to it be established and maintained at the industrial centre of every division of Bengal. Further on, in resolution No. 46, there is a proposal that a commercial school with a museum of commercial products attached to it be established and maintained at the commercial centre of every Division in Bengal, and then in the very last resolution—resolution No. 48—there is a further proposal that a commercial college be established in Calcutta as early as practicable on the lines of the Bombay Sydenham College of Commerce. I wonder whether any useful or really practical purpose will be served if resolutions of such a far-reaching character are going to be discussed in this Council in an isolated and disconnected fashion. What we need is an inter-related and well-adjusted comprehensive scheme. We have three well-demarcated stages—the primary stage, the secondary stage and the higher stage. It is of utmost importance to know how far technological, agricultural, industrial and commercial education can be related to the various stages. I shall simply quote only one line from page 186 of volume 3 of Part I of the University Commission's report. The opinion of Mr. E. F. Tipler, Professor of Roorkee College, runs thus:—

In India much confusion has existed between high and low grade technical education, and it is only now being realised administratively that the high grade must be reared on foundations laid in the secondary schools.

The Commission then proceeds:—

We endorse Mr. Tipler's view in this matter.

And the same proposition has been endorsed by the great educationist, Dr. Brajendra Nath Seal. So far as the present resolutions are concerned three distinct issues have been raised: first, should the institution be affiliated to the University, i.e., should courses be provided and recognised by the University? The University Commission's report is distinctly in favour of this. I shall be satisfied by quoting only one or two passages. The Commission says:—

The weight of our evidence is in favour of the University providing and recognising courses of instruction and facilities for research in connection with applied science and technology.

Sir Nilratan Sircar, the late Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University and one who may be regarded as an authority on the subject, says:—

Under the present conditions it is desirable for the University to organise education in applied science and technology at least two standards, viz. a high standard for degrees and a somewhat lower one for licences or diplomas.

A little later on Mr. Alfred Hay of the Tata Institute, Bangalore, is of opinion that applied science and technology should form an important part of the scheme of any modern university and that degrees and diplomas should be granted in these subjects. I need not quote any further: passage after passage there is in this report confirming this view.

The second issue that has been raised by Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta is whether degrees should be awarded or not. In this connection the Commission says:—

It is essential that, before any new degree or certificate is authorised in technological subjects, the organisation of effective teaching including practical work, should be assured. In our Judgment it would be premature to sanction them until the University has either itself made provision for the teaching and laboratory equipment required or is satisfied that students wishing to take these courses will be able to find in other institutions the scientific and practical training indispensable for the purpose. . . . But precipitancy in awarding degrees or licenses in technological subjects to students whose scientific and practical training might be inadequate for the purpose in view would have the unhappy result of disappointing expectations in these branches of study. We suggest, therefore, that the Government of India should express its approval of the addition of these technological subjects to the courses recognised by the University of Calcutta, but should withhold its assent to the draft regulations for degrees and licenses until the provision for the necessary teaching and laboratory accommodation is guaranteed. A further reason which weighs with us in support of this recommendation is our anxiety that the work done in the intermediate classes should be very materially improved before the University ventures upon the practical execution of its plan for the encouragement of these branches of the technological training.

So it goes on confirming the view. There is that reservation about conferring degrees immediately without previous laboratory and work-shop training.

The third issue that has been raised is—should the matter once more be referred to the Director of Industries and his Advisory Board? We are getting a bit tired of committees and commissions. Two such big commissions as the Industrial Commission and the University Commission have gone into the matter in minute details, considering the whole subject in all its bearings, and I myself do not see that any useful purpose will be served by relegating the matter once more to a committee. What we really need is a thoroughly well-considered practical scheme and to launch into the matter as soon as possible.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: I have much pleasure in supporting this resolution. There is no doubt that the country wants vocational education, and this resolution aims at giving scientific training for the purpose of enabling our young men to earn their livelihood. When we first talked about a technological institution in Calcutta, at the time when the question of the Victoria Memorial was being discussed we approached the Government and made our representations. Lord Curzon told us that it was an impossibility having regard to the resources available and he also doubted the efficacy of an institution of that character. Those days are gone. We want it—the country wants it very badly—and I have not the least hesitation in supporting this resolution, I do not think it requires a speech.

With regard to the degree question, all I have to say is this, I think the Calcutta University will be prepared to add these technological classes and see to the subjects being introduced and provision being made for the training of our young men.

As regards the granting of degrees, so far as the Calcutta University is concerned, I do not see any reason why degrees should not be granted. But that is a question which may be discussed later on, but what is needed at present is that education must be given in technological subjects.

Dr. JATINDRA NATH MAITRA: I rise to support the resolution so ably moved by Rai Bahadur Jogendra Chunder Ghose. It is a known fact that the majority of our students are in great need of new avenues of education to enable them to earn their living. The departments of Law, Medicine and Engineering are already congested and therefore an effort must be made, as early as possible, to provide education in technology and other cognate subjects not only for the benefit of students of average merit, but also for those who want higher training in those subjects. We owe it to ourselves the duty of saving thousands of our qualified countrymen from chronic starvation and the miseries that follow in its train, and this is only possible if we provide them with the means to combat them. Those who have seen the Tata Iron Works (so close to Calcutta) will realise how many men of all shades of education and intelligence can be provided with their bread if we only open similar avenues throughout the province, and it will be in the fitness of things if Government take the initiative in this direction by creating Colleges in Technology and Agriculture, and I am sure public benefactions will immediately follow to supplement Government grants and resources.

Now one word to Babu Indu Bhushan Dutta. He wants an agricultural college at Dacca and not at Calcutta. I personally belong to the Dacca Division and I shall be glad if Dacca be allowed this proud position. But before quarrelling about the site of the agricultural college, will it not be proper for us to carry the resolution now and settle about the details later? His second point is that he is not very keen about university degrees. Will my friend tell me that he really believes in what he says—that our B.Sc.'s and M.Sc.'s have not justified their degrees. True it is that some of our B.Sc.'s and M.Sc.'s are following the profession of Law. The reason is that you do not provide any opening for their scientific talents and, to make two ends meet, they are forced to join the Bar. It is particularly to remedy this state of things, that not one but several technological colleges are necessary. Does my friend dispute that?

With regard to the amendment of Dr. Hassan Suhrawardy, I am not eager to refer the matter to the Director of Industries in the beginning, as we must first ascertain the views of the Council in this matter and, if our brother Councillors realise the necessity of institutions of Technology and Agriculture by signifying their assents to the resolution in question, it is then that we will ask the Government to give the resolution a definite shape without delay, and Government knows whom to refer to for expert advice in that connection.

Professor S. C. Mukherji has questioned the propriety of several resolutions of a similar nature demanding the establishment of Technological, Agricultural, Industrial and Commercial Colleges all at once. But necessity knows no law, and that several members who have given this matter their earnest consideration and have realised their importance speak very greatly in favour of their acceptance by the Council.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: We always complain of the high prices of the necessaries of life, and what is the reason for this? It is nothing but the undevelopment of the industries of India. I beg to submit that unless and until we give industrial education we shall not be able to develop the Indian industries. I strongly object to the amendment of our esteemed friend, Dr. Hassan Suhrawardy. He has suggested to us that the matter of the establishment of a technological institute in Calcutta should be referred back to a committee. To speak the truth, we are sick of committees and commissions. This question has been pending for a long time, not less than 20 years. I see that the Government has already submitted a report on the subject and I may be allowed to say that the report may be regarded as the final one. I draw the attention of the Council to the report on the technological institute for Calcutta. From that report it appears that the committee has carefully gone through the previous reports and they have submitted this opinion.

They say that "the result of the detailed enquiries which we have made fully bears out the opinion of the Calcutta Committee that there is a great need for a well-equipped and up-to-date technological institute in Calcutta. Such an institute on the one hand will render important service to the numerous industries which centre in Calcutta and its neighbourhood, and, on the other hand, will fit young men of Bengal to take a larger share in the conduct of those industries than has hitherto fallen to their lot." So it appears that this Committee, the Committee which has been appointed by the Government of Bengal, stated that no time should be lost in the establishment of a polytechnic institute in Calcutta. This is the recommendation which had been submitted to the Government by the Indian National Congress from time to time. This is the recommendation which had been submitted by the Calcutta University Commission as well as by the Indian Industrial Commission. We find that the cost of such a scheme is not a prohibitive one because it appears from page 60 of their report that the capital expenditure, exclusive of the cost of building, is Rs. 10,20,000 only and the recurring cost—the gross cost—is only Rs. 5,46,000; or rather the net cost after amalgamation of the Civil Engineering College will be Rs. 2,93,000. So, it will appear that the capital expenditure is Rs. 10,00,000 and the annual recurring expenditure is Rs. 3,00,000. Assuming for argument's sake that the capital expenditure is Rs. 15,00,000 or Rs. 20,00,000, or that the annual expenditure is Rs. 5,00,000, I think the Government is quite justified in taking up this institute as early as possible. It further appears from the proceedings of a Conference which was held at Belvedere a few months ago that the Government is going to abandon this scheme altogether. It proposes to establish a technical school in Calcutta instead of a technical college as suggested before. The Government, or rather the Conference, is of opinion that this is rather an ambitious scheme. However, we must thank the Government for having taken the initiative at least to start a technical school in Calcutta. We find that the Government has already acquired a big plot of land in the centre of Calcutta and is going to construct a building, but I am sorry that no provision appears in the Budget for the construction of that building and therefore no time should be lost in the construction of that building, not for the establishment of the proposed technical school, but for the establishment of a technical college as recommended by the previous Committees and Commissions.

It has been stated that an agricultural college should be established in Calcutta. I am sorry I do not agree on that subject. There is not the slightest doubt that an agricultural college should be established in Bengal, but not in Calcutta or Dacca. It is most regrettable that though there is an agricultural college in Bihar, there is not a single one in Bengal. Therefore, there is not the slightest doubt that an agricultural college should be established in Bengal as early as possible, especially for the reason that 90 per cent. of the population of Bengal depend on agriculture; and to that college should be attached a big farm. Therefore, no time should be lost in establishing such a college in Bengal.

As regards expenditure, I may be allowed to say that if a technological institute is established in Calcutta, and as it is one of the duties of the Calcutta Corporation to provide for technical education, the Calcutta Corporation would be very glad to make a substantial contribution towards the maintenance of such an institute.

Therefore, I strongly support the resolution which has been moved for the establishment of a technological institute in Calcutta and I strongly oppose the amendment to refer the matter again to a Committee.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: I must allow the Government Member to speak. After that, if the closure is moved, I shall consider it.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: The question of the establishment of a technological college in Calcutta has a long history behind it. In addressing a Conference which was held at Government House in November, 1919, His Excellency said: "The archives of the Education Department are choked with correspondence on the subject of a technological institute. Multitudinous recommendations of innumerable bodies and committees on the same subject constitute a forbidding volume of literature, but have failed to generate any action." His Excellency went on to say that he had come to the conclusion that the main reason why nothing had been done was that the schemes contemplated had been on too large and ambitious a scale. He took the view that it was far better to do something practical on a modest scale without delay than to continue playing with visions of an ambitious and resplendent polytechnic.

In accordance with this policy a scheme was put before the Conference for establishing in Calcutta a technical school with the object of training foremen mechanics in conjunction with the local engineering workshops, and, in conjunction with the Bengal Engineering College at Sibpur, a limited number of engineers. It was proposed that the school should deal with apprentices in mechanical and electrical engineering, including motor manufacture and repair and should include a general instruction class.

This proposal commended itself to the Conference, and a resolution to this effect was duly carried.

His Excellency further referred to the advantages of concentrating instruction in different branches of industry in one centre. He explained that there was no reason why when once Government had succeeded in establishing a technical school it should not gradually be expanded into a technological institute by incorporating existing institutions, such as the Weaving Institute at Serampore and the Calcutta Commercial Institute.

To provide for this policy of gradually expanding the technical school into a technological institute, the Conference adopted a second resolution to the effect that in the selection of the site, in the design of the building and in the constitution of the management of the school, allowance should be made for its expansion later into a technological institute.

The Conference then appointed a Committee which, under the chairmanship of Sir Rajendra Nath Mukharji, worked out a scheme for the establishment of a technical school in Calcutta. The admirable report of this Committee was adopted in another meeting of the Conference held in July last and Government are now taking steps to give effect to its recommendations.

Proceedings are going on for the acquisition of a plot of land in Corporation Street, at a cost of about Rs. 8,50,000. It is hoped that possession of this land will be obtained shortly. Building operations will be started at once, and it is hoped that the building will be ready for occupation and the school will begin its work in June, 1922. I may also mention that a school for the training of apprentices is being started at Kanchrapara. For the buildings of the Calcutta Technical School a provision of Rs. 1,00,000 has been made in the Budget for 1921-22.

The scheme is perhaps a modest one, but it is satisfactory to feel that we have made a beginning and I can assure the movers of these resolutions that the question of its gradual expansion into a technological institute will not be lost sight of. Meantime it must not be forgotten that many of the branches to which the Technological Institute would devote its energies are being served, to some extent, by existing institutions, such as the Apprentice Department of the Sibpur College, the Mainamati Survey School, the Ashanulla School of Engineering at Dacca, the Calcutta Commercial Institute and the Serampore Weaving Institute.

Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur suggests that the Technological College should be affiliated to the Calcutta University and should grant degrees. With the modest beginning that we have made, the question of affiliation to the University does not at present arise. Our present object is to provide apprentices in engineering workshops with a proper theoretical training and thereby turn out foremen mechanics and a few engineers. The institution will not turn out men with such a high degree of training as would entitle them to degrees. As the scheme progresses and the school develops into a fully-equipped technological institute, the question of affiliation to the University and the granting of degrees will naturally arise.

Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur asks for the establishment in Calcutta of an agricultural college. In the matter of higher agricultural education, Government can also claim that they have not been idle. At a meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council held on the 12th August 1919, Mauli Fazl-ul Haq moved a resolution, which after discussion and amendment, read as follows:—"That this Council recommends to the Governor-in-Council that a fully-equipped agricultural institute be established at Dacca at an early date."

This resolution was accepted by Government and agreed to by the Council. Active steps are being taken to give effect to it. An area of 300 acres of land has been acquired as the site of the institute and plans and estimates are well on their way towards completion. Beyond lectures on plant breeding, farm accounts and survey, the course will consist almost entirely of practical instruction. The equipment of the institute will include mechanical appliances of various kinds for the cultivation of land, and good workshops, where students will get a sound practical knowledge of engineering, pumping and other implements which are in use. There will also be a dairy, and an extensive irrigation system will be used to demonstrate the importance of irrigation on high lands in assisting the growth of valuable crops and in helping to solve the question of cattle fodder which is so acute a problem in this densely populated province. This institute is in accordance with the proposals of the Calcutta University Commission. Their main proposal was that after a student had taken a Degree of Bachelor of Science, with a curriculum revised so as to equip him for specialisation in Agriculture, he would proceed for a period of training to an agricultural institute of the kind which we are establishing. On the completion of his training there he would receive a diploma, and a student who had taken the Degree of Bachelor of Science, together with the diploma of the institute, would be entitled to the Degree of Bachelor of Agriculture under the University.

Government is committed to the establishment of an institute at Dacca and there is no room at present for another institute or college in Bengal. The Calcutta University Commission particularly insisted on the necessity for caution in the number of students for whom training was provided. As openings for the employment of passed students would for some time to come be comparatively few, they proposed to limit the number of students to 20 a year. The Agricultural Institute at Dacca will have accommodation for 52 students, but for the present it is proposed to admit only 20 annually.

I have explained what the Government are doing to meet the demand for technical and agricultural education. We are establishing an agricultural institute on the lines recommended by the Calcutta University Commission. We are providing a technical school in Calcutta with the express intention of developing it into a technological institute. The process which this development is to follow has still to be considered. I think that, as suggested by Dr. Suhrawardy, the matter should be put into the hands of the Director of Industries and his Advisory Board, and that they should be asked to draw up a definite scheme for the gradual expansion of the technical school into a technological institute. In doing so, they should have regard to the recommendations of the Indian Industrial Commission and the Calcutta University Commission. With these remarks, I accept the amendment proposed by Dr. Suhrawardy.

The Hon'ble the MAHARAJADHIRAJA BAHADUR of BURDWAN: It is perhaps rather extraordinary that a Member of Council should intervene in a discussion regarding which the Minister in charge has replied, but having been in charge of the Education Department for over two years and having always taken an interest in this branch of education, I think it my duty to lay a few facts before the movers of the resolution and the respective amendments as to what the position really is regarding technical education in Bengal. The Hon'ble the Minister has very rightly pointed out all that is being done in Calcutta; also of the activities of Government with regard to agricultural education. He has, however, forgotten to mention a very important scheme in which Government has taken action—a scheme which is ready for going ahead with as soon as funds are available. The question which arose three or four years ago was this: that the training of apprentices at Sibpur to be mechanical engineers—where could it be carried out and was it practical enough? Should not the Apprentice Department be brought into closer relationship with workshops? You must train your mechanical foremen in workshops. It is a thing that has been admitted. Therefore the Governing Body of the Civil Engineering College first examined this question and invited the co-operation of certain railways. The Eastern Bengal Railway were willing to come in. Then the Government had a second Committee, presided over by my esteemed friend Sir Rajendra Nath Mukharji. They worked out a scheme for providing a proper system of hostels and a proper technical school at Kanchrapara and this has been accepted. Arrangements are being made to admit apprentices from Kanchrapara who are particularly promising in view of their undergoing a special course at Sibpur. This Committee also suggested systematising the whole question of apprentices under a Board of Apprentices. This Board will generally co-ordinate the work of the Kanchrapara and Calcutta Technical Schools. I do not for a moment question that there may be room for further expansion in the direction of higher technological training, but if the Council thinks that the industries of the country can progress without proper provision for the training of mechanical engineers near workshops, it is making a great mistake, and what I should like to point out to this Council is, that now that His Excellency has appointed Standing Committees, I think that it would be wiser for this Council instead of simply passing this resolution, because a resolution can easily be passed here, but can only be carried into effect if funds are available, and what I suggest is that instead of passing this resolution it would be wiser for the two Standing Committees that have been appointed for the Departments of Agriculture and of Industries to examine not only the Kanchrapara scheme, the schemes regarding which the Hon'ble Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhuri has spoken, but also the scheme which Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose and others have in contemplation.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I beg to support this resolution. I am fully aware of the fact that the institution at Kanchrapara, which I had the good fortune of visiting several times, is working quite satisfactorily, but I know also that the country is long clamouring for higher training in technology. Our students have got sufficient literary education, and if I may be allowed to say so, exclusive literary education, but they are not fully equipped with that knowledge which would enable them to make two ends meet and carry on the bitter struggle for life. It is, therefore, highly desirable that in this country, as I once brought to the notice of the Council, there should be an expansion of education with regard to Applied Chemistry and Industrial Chemistry, so that the people may be able to undergo the trials of life better. I am also aware of the fact that the University Commission and the Industrial Commission and in fact, committees after committees have reported in favour of the establishment of a college for the higher training of technology, but nothing has been done so far. Is it not, therefore, necessary to take immediate steps for the establishment of such an institution? I think there cannot be two opinions in this matter. At Cawnpore they have thought it necessary to establish a college of this kind and there cannot be any doubt that a college ought to be established in Calcutta where there are more opportunities of its development than anywhere else in the province. My submission to you, therefore, is that the establishment of such a college is urgently necessary.

Reference has been made to the fact that several resolutions had been moved in the Council urging the development of agricultural education in the province. This education is a necessity, and I would ask the Council to consider what steps ought to be taken to attract people to profit by it. This resolution emphasises the fact that there ought to be an agricultural college. The Minister in charge has brought to the notice of the Council that Government have already taken steps in this direction at Dacca. We have no quarrel with it, but we must see how it develops in the future. With these few words I support the resolution.

The resolution of Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur was then put and carried.

The PRESIDENT: The next motion need not, I think, be put, because that is included in the one already passed.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: The Government have been defeated in every motion concerning the good of this country and it is time that they should resign. (Cries of "Order, Order.")

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I rise to a point of order. Is the member entitled to make that observation?

The PRESIDENT: I think the member had no right to make that observation.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: As regards this motion, as the Government have already appointed certain committees, therefore it fails of itself.

The following motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn: "This Council recommends to the Government that three standing committees be appointed by the Government, consisting of elected members of the Council, to advise the three Ministers in the matter of the administration of the subjects under their charge."

India Act: Ministers' salaries.

Mr. AJOY CHUNDER DUTT: "This Council recommends to the Government to take the best legal opinion in England such as that of Sir John Simon or Sir Frederick Pollock, with reference to the interpretation of section 52 (1) and 72D of the Government of India Act, on the following questions:—

- (1) Whether by virtue of the power conferred by section 52 (1) of the Government of India Act the Council may at an ordinary meeting reduce the salary of a Minister, or whether that power may only be properly exercised at a Budget meeting when the proposals of the Government for the appropriation of the revenue are submitted to the vote of the Council in the form of demands for grants (section 72D).
- (2) Whether the power to vote a particular Minister's salary conferred by section 52 (1) of the Government of India Act may be exercised on more than one occasion during the said Minister's tenure of office, and, if so, at what times.
- (3) Whether a Minister's salary is to be regarded as an expenditure included within section 72D (3) (iii) of the Government of India Act by reason of the fact that at an ordinary meeting of the Council, a motion moved under section 52 (1) of the said Act for the reduction of the said salary was lost by a majority of votes.

- (4) Whether all Ministers' salaries must be the same."

I gave notice of this resolution, I believe, on the 11th of March, and on the 14th of March the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler made a statement to the effect that His Excellency had decided to refer this matter for legal opinion to England. This is really all that I want. Under the circumstances I think this resolution is useless. I desire, therefore, to ask your leave to let me withdraw it.

The motion was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The Official Vote.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: "This Council recommends to the Government that in any matter relating to purely transferred subjects, the official Members other than Ministers, be requested not to vote although they may take part in the discussion."

The subject of this resolution is of fundamental importance so far as the working of the new principles of Government embodied in the constitution ushered in by the Government of India Act, 1919, is concerned. Under section 72(b) (41) of that Act all questions in a Governor's Legislative Council shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present other than the person presiding, and so far as statutory provision goes, the official Members are within their legal rights when they vote on matters affecting purely transferred subjects. Legal rights are, however, not always the same thing as constitutional rights. Technically speaking, it may perhaps yet be said that the King of England has the power to veto acts passed by the British Parliament, but constitutionally speaking, in the words of Bagehot, he will have to sign his own death-warrant if Parliament wants this to be done. I think that it is not inopportune for me to bring this matter for discussion in this Council.

Before going into detailed discussion, I must point out that the Legislative Department has so changed the wording of this resolution which was sent to them, that the import of the resolution has changed considerably. The original resolution I sent in was as follows:—

“Whereas it is the intention of the Parliament and of His Majesty the King that in the administration of transferred subjects, the responsibility of the Ministers and of the elected representatives of the people should be made clear—

The PRESIDENT: If you sent in a resolution to this effect and it was disallowed, you cannot refer to it.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I only say that the original resolution was mutilated.

The PRESIDENT: You must move the resolution in the form in which it now stands. The resolution in the form in which you sent it, was objectionable under the rules, and you cannot discuss that point here.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: I simply say that this was the original resolution, but I am moving the resolution as it now stands.

It was the intention that this Council should issue executive mandates to the official Members to refrain from voting. I have not much faith in mere executive mandates; on the other hand, it is my intention, whether we, the non-official members of this Council as well as the official Members, should not by our own actions (and without direction from above) practise the maxim contained in the instructions issued by His Majesty the King-Emperor to His Excellency the Governor of this Presidency, the instructions which are morally binding not only upon His Excellency, but upon all other officials in this Presidency, and if I may say so, upon us, the non-official members also. This is what His Majesty said : “You shall further the purposes of the said Act to the end that the institution and methods of Government therein provided shall be laid upon the best and surest foundations, that the people of the said Presidency shall acquire such habits of political action and respect, such conventions as will best and soonest fit them for self-government."

In paragraph 233 of the Report on Indian Constitutional Reforms it is laid down:—

We wish to see the convention established, though we propose to lay down no rule on the point, that on the subjects transferred to the control of Ministers, the official members of the Legislative Council would abstain from voting and leave the decision of the question to the non-official members of the Council.

The principles upon which are based the present system of Government are in the words of the Joint Select Committee of Parliament as follows:—

It (the Bill) partitions the domain of Provincial Governments into two fields, one of which is made over to Ministers chosen from the elected members of the provincial legislature, while the other remains under the administration of the Governor in Council. . . . It is this distinction which justifies the method by which the Bill imposes responsibility, both on Ministers to the Legislative Council and on the members of the Legislative Council to their constituents for the result of that part of the administration which is transferred to their charge. . . . While the Committee anticipate much advantage from amicable and, as far as possible, spontaneous associations for purposes of deliberation, they would not allow it to confuse the duties or obscure the separate responsibility which will rest on the two parts of the administration.

The instruments of instructions to His Excellency the Governor also lay down as follows:—

In as much as certain matters have been reserved for the administration according to law of the Governor-in-Council in respect of which the authority of our Governor-General in Council shall remain unimpaired while certain other matters have been transferred to the administration of the Governor acting with a Minister, it will be for you so to regulate the business of the Government of the Presidency, that so far as may be possible the responsibility for each of these respective classes of matters may be kept clear and distinct.

You cannot have this separate responsibility for the administration of the transferred subjects if the official Members continue to vote on all matters pertaining thereto. Apart, however, from the question of separate responsibility, it is an administrative and political anomaly that the official Members should continue to vote on matters appertaining to the transferred subjects. In the present Council the Surgeon-General with the Government of Bengal, along with the Director of Public Instruction and the Secretary to the Government of Bengal in the Education and Medical Departments, are members. Now, suppose, that on a question of medical education—I take an hypothetical case—the Minister in charge adopts a policy contrary to the opinion expressed by his three advisers, but in consonance with the view which he believes to be that of the majority of this Council. The matter is brought to a vote. What would be the result? Under the new regime all official members of the Legislative Council, except the Members of the Executive Council are free to speak and vote as they choose and, if they are true to themselves they are to vote according to their own conscience. You thus find three subordinate officers voting publicly against their official head, which is next day made known to the hierarchy of subordinate officials under them, yet forsooth they are forced to carry out that policy as they must do. You cannot have administrative efficiency in that case. Suppose another kind of case. The Minister in charge accepts the advice given to him by his three official advisers and acts against the wishes of the majority of the Council. The matter is brought to a vote and the Minister gets the support of his official subordinates, but is defeated by a majority of votes of this Council. In fact, the Minister loses the confidence of the Council and you get new men as Ministers who would try to carry out the policy of the Council. The new Minister now comes in public and open conflict with his official advisers, but he would have to carry out that policy all the same. Possibly the next time we may find these official Members voting against the new Ministers and trying to undermine their powers. So long as the Executive Government does not depend on the votes of a legislative body for their existence, you can allow subordinate officials who are members of that body to vote freely. When, however, the executive have to change when they lose the confidence of the Council, while the subordinate officials must, as a matter of course, vote in support of the views of their officials superiors or must not vote at all, you cannot afford to expect them to vote freely and according to their own conscience. And as it is unthinkable that whoever be the Minister, the official Members should, like the King's friend, by their vote either maintain them in power or turn them out against the wishes of the elected representatives of the people, the only alternative left is that they should not vote in matters affecting the transferred subjects. This question may be dealt with from another point of view. We are on our trial. On the ability of the elected representatives of the people to conduct the administration of the transferred subjects satisfactorily, depends, in the words of the Joint Select Committee of Parliament, the question of full responsible government to us. How we have done will be judged by the Statutory Commission and we cannot afford to have our responsibilities obscured or marred by the votes of the official Members of the Council. The Joint Committee recognise that we are liable to commit mistakes and most probably we shall do. But we cannot afford to have judgment passed against us later, that we did not commit mistakes as we were kept straight by the official Members. In this view of the case I am supported by the European Association, for I quote the following from its annual report of 1920:

As you are aware the present Reform experiment is for a stated period at the end of which time a Royal Commission will sit to decide what measure of success has been attained and whether the Indian people are to be entrusted with still further powers. Let us not be under any misapprehension. If the Indians can satisfy the people of England that they are capable of self-government, additional power will be granted and India will sooner or later become a self-governing part of the British Empire. Let us watch carefully lest the Indian politician claim and receives credit for ability in self-government which is not his but that of the British officials who are guiding his early steps in Parliamentary practice and procedure. On points of this description the British public will require constant enlightenment.

This matter does not deal with a question of administrative detail, and I hope so far as the official legislative Members will take part in the discussion they should discuss it freely from their own point of view and not as Members of Government. In our discussion during the last two months I have not seen a single instance in which one official Member has voted on the side other than that on which the majority of the official Members has voted, and this would lead one to suppose that they have not as yet availed themselves of the right to free speech and free vote now conferred upon them by the Select Committee of Parliament. This also shows that the officials of the Government of Bengal have not yet been able to shake off their old habits of thinking. But if, and I think I am correct in saying that, every one present here wishes to work the Reforms in the proper spirit, I hope members will discuss and vote on the present question freely.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I am afraid I cannot accord my support to the resolution which has been moved by my hon'ble friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray. It is, in my opinion, too premature. Ours is a new constitution in the making, and I for one feel that we cannot be too cautious or circumspect in marking out or determining the lines of its future development. Can we say that we have had sufficient experience already of the new constitution to be in a position to lay down with confidence a hard and fast rule like the one which we are now invited to adopt? I recognise that the resolution has behind it the high authority and sanction of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report. But, if I am not mistaken, the authors of that report in dealing with this matter, refer to it as a convention, and if it is a convention, I ask, is a resolution of this Council, before the Council is barely three months old, the right method of bringing the convention into existence? A convention like this, as I understand it, ought to be left to grow spontaneously in due course of time without the application of any artificial stimulus. Sir, on abstract a priori ground it may be, as doubtless it is, a counsel of perfection, that in transferred subjects, the official Members shall have no vote but only a right of discussion, but it seems to me that this is a convention which presupposes and is based upon other conventions which have not yet grown up in our system. We cannot say, for example, that we have had a party system amongst us or that we have got a ministerial party with all that it implies, though we hope that before long, we shall have such a party. I ask, therefore, will it be fair in the present circumstances to deprive the Ministers of the support of their official colleagues in matters relating to their special departments. Then, there is another difficulty, a most serious difficulty, to my mind, in our way of accepting this resolution. The official Members under the Government of India Act have got the same rights and privileges as the non-official members have, and I fail to see how we can, by means of a resolution, ask that official Members should, on certain occasions, suspend the exercise of one of their rights. What would my honourable friend think, if an official Member were to move a resolution suggesting that in certain circumstances the non-official Members should not exercise some of their rights. I can well imagine the indignant language in which my hon'ble friend and others would dismiss such a resolution. I submit, therefore, that it would be unwise on our part to accept this resolution. Let us not force the pace of the Council; let it pursue its normal course of development, and instead of being anxious to keep out the official Members from voting on transferred subjects, let us all work in harmony and co-operation for the day when we shall have the officials not merely voting on these questions, but voting on our side.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: It would not be amiss if I place before the House an opinion on the subject extracted from a letter written to Babu Bhupendra Nath Basu by Mr. Curtis, the chief apostle of this dyarchical form of government. He says: "The first step I would suggest is to get rid of the official vote. What real good is done by this cumbrous expedient (which deceives no one), of ordering intelligent officials to vote irrespective of their personal judgment. This practice operates to prostitute the principles of free and conscientious judgment by individuals, upon which alone responsible government can rest. The effect is to create artificial parties, one Indian and one British. The constant pressure of the official vote operates to check the development of real Indian parties, and it is only in so far as you develop such parties, that you will achieve self-government. I have said, 'get rid of official votes,'—that you can do without getting rid of official speakers. If any Council is to pronounce an opinion it must have the matter in question explained to it by those in actual charge of the business. Let Members of the Government sit in the Council and speak, but let voting be confined to members who are not officials."

The above lines written by a great political thinker, cannot but command the greatest respect of the House.

With regard to the transferred subjects, where Ministers are substantially responsible to us, the official votes have no purpose to serve. In paragraph 233 of the Montagu-Chelmsford Report, to which reference has already been made, it was thought desirable by the illustrious authors that convention would be established that official Members would abstain from voting on transferred subjects. In paragraph 90 of the Government of India despatch, dated the 5th March, 1919, this subject has been examined in the light of the opinions received from the Provincial Governments and in the conclusions arrived therein, we find the Government of India admitting "that the existing conventions by which official Members invariably support their Government have been too rigidly followed." "Our own view is," continues the Government of India despatch, "that as regards transferred subjects, it is undesirable to set up a convention which may have the effect of emphasising the cleavage between official and non-official members." They finally recommended that with certain reservations the official Members of the legislature should have freedom of speech and voting. The parliamentary Joint Select Committee accepted the recommendation and said: "All other official Members of the Legislative Councils should be free in their speech and vote as they choose." But the Committee made one exception in the case of the Members of the Executive Council and Ministers. They said that the Member of the Executive Council and Ministers should not oppose one another by speech or vote. The Committee further laid down that they should not be required to support either by speech or vote, any of their colleague's proposals which they do not approve. The difficulty of giving effect in practice to this sort of freedom of speech is very clearly set forth in letter No. 2304, dated the 15th October 1918, written to the Government of India by the Government of Bengal. Here, the Government says: "Ordinarily in regard to matters coming before the Legislative Council, the local Government take a line which they consider correct, and to which they attach importance. To allow official Members freedom of speech and vote in such cases would result in presenting to the Council and the public the highly undesirable spectacle of the officers of Government in open disagreement with the authority which they serve, since there would obviously be no point in allowing freedom of speech and vote, except in cases where those affected were not in agreement with the Government. The desirability of a united front in the local Government itself is recognised in the Report, and it seems no less desirable that the officers of the Government should be of one voice in the Council except in the comparatively rare cases in which the Government is content to leave its own attitude an open question." And, Sir, the lesson we have from the experience of the past few weeks is that, in spite, of the admitted freedom of speech and vote of officials, they apparently act on this dictum of the Bengal Government. They invariably, and I might say, quite gracefully vote blindly and solidly for the Government—

The PRESIDENT: Order! Order! Members of Government vote and are now allowed to vote as they choose and it is improper for you to say they vote blindly.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: I submit to your ruling; but that is what the practice has been. However, I shall not be wrong if I say that the convention in this matter has already been set up among the officials. Such being the case we urge that instead of perpetuating this unconventional convention, we ought to tackle the question manfully. We do not mind, for the time being if the officials vote with the Government on questions dealing with the reserved subjects, but, with regard to the transferred subjects, we demand that the officials do abstain from voting. I say without fear of contradiction that a popular Minister should not look for support to their salaried Secretaries. Our support ought to be quite enough for him. The Minister who, in support of his policy, fails to secure a sufficient elected majority, has no right to sit for a moment in his Ministerial chair. Realisation of this fact is essential in a responsible form of Government, for otherwise the responsibility comes to naught. This fact alone can ensure the selection of a Minister who can command the confidence of the elected majority.

The House, I think, will remember what Lord Sinha said in the House of Lords during the third reading of the Bill. I might repeat it again. "As regards transferred subjects," said His Lordship, "legislation for them will be governed by the wishes of the elected majority." Mark the word "elected majority."

This resolution wants nothing more than this, and I heartily support it and appeal to the House for its support as well.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: My friend, Babu S. N. Ray, has raised a very important constitutional question, and I do not know whether he has been wise in his attempt to introduce a debate on a subject of such vital importance at the fag-end of the session. However, when the question has been raised, and it is to be debated, I think it is necessary to consider the matter very seriously and fully. First of all, there is no question that clause (8), section 72D of the Government of India Act, gives the fullest freedom of speech to members, but with regard to voting and other matters, the Act itself is not so explicit. I do not agree with my friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose, when he says that if this resolution is carried, it would be interfering with the free right of the official Members. My submission is that this is not so. What are the rights of the official Members? Of course they have the free right of debate and discussion, they have the free right to vote on the reserved subjects. All that the resolution moved by Babu S. N. Ray wants, is that the official members are requested to abstain from voting on "transferred" subjects. Now, this distinction of "transferred" and "reserved subjects" is surely to introduce some confusion and, in order to avoid that confusion, opinions have been expressed from time to time in this Council and other places. Now, with regard to the position of the Ministers, it has often struck me that it is an anomalous one. What is exactly the position of the Ministers? Of course, we talk so much of responsible government. Now, it is quite true, as has been said by the previous speaker as well as by Babu S. N. Ray, that whenever any question arose in which official Members voted one way, the ordinary elected members voted the other way, the Ministers always voted with the official Members. This may be due to their anxiety to avoid friction, but the position is quite anomalous. If the Ministers are our Ministers, if they are responsible to their constituencies and to the elected member of this Council, I do not know how they can vote against us. Mr. Ghos has said that this will come in time; that will depend on convention, but this is an anomalous position; and the spectacle of Ministers always voting with the officials have created an opinion outside the Council that the Reforms are a farce. What are the Ministers? The Ministers are quite as good as the officials themselves and they vote with the officials in every matter. I do not say that the officials are wrong, but at any rate the spirit is there, that is to say, they have to vote often against the opinion of the majority of the non-official members. This is an anomalous position, and this anomaly can be very easily and smoothly removed by the convention suggested in the resolution that is to say, the officials, though they may take part in the discussion and put the official view before the Council, though they may supply the Council with any information which may modify the opinions of most of the members, having the fullest right of free discussion and freedom of speech, they should abstain from voting on "transferred" subjects. Of course, this convention would not be extended to reserved subjects. That will show that in regard to "transferred" subjects, the Council and the Ministers are quite independent. Otherwise, on transferred subjects, if the Ministers voted one way and the majority voted the other way, their position would simply become ridiculous and anomalous. Under these circumstances, I think the suggestion in the resolution may be adopted as leading to the growth of a convention, though the word "convention" does not occur in the resolution itself. But I think it is a very salutary provision and will remove many difficulties in the future. There is no question of depriving the official Members of any rights or privileges; they are free to make their speeches and to take part in the discussions, and their opinions are quite welcome. We, coming from the outside, do not know every detail of administration and we are liable to commit blunders; we are liable to take distorted views of matters and often our errors are to be rectified by the official Members; but, in order to secure full freedom in the matter of voting, when, after a full debate or discussion, a question is put to the Council, I think full responsibility and freedom can only be secured if the official Members abstain from voting. I beg to support Babu S. N. Ray's resolution whole-heartedly.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I beg to support the resolution moved by Babu Surendra Nath Ray. It is a very inoffensive resolution. What does it say? It says that official Members be requested not to vote. There is no compulsion on them; it is a simple request not to vote and a very reasonable request it is. The Government have granted us some sort of self-government through the elected members and the Government have transferred certain subjects to the charge of Ministers. I do not see why Government should intervene in a matter in which the Ministers differ from the elected members of the Council. If they do intervene, there is no self-government whatsoever of any kind. Therefore, it is only reasonable and proper that they should not intervene. There is another matter. If the Ministers know that they will not have the support of the Government party, they will not venture to go against the wishes of the elected members, as they have been doing the whole of this session. That is not a position very much to be desired. I do not object to the Government having Ministers who have no following, who may not be able to do their work and who may only read the reports written by their Secretaries. But what I object to is this—that they should not go against the wishes of the elected members. I therefore submit that this resolution is a very proper one.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I have the highest respect for the opinions of our esteemed friends, Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur and Babu Surendra Nath Ray but I am extremely sorry that I strongly differ from them in this particular respect. I admit the force of their arguments and, I entirely agree with them that they are quite correct in the principle which they are going to lay down. But I beg to submit that while it appears to be theoretically correct, there are practical difficulties which stand in the way. They suggest that this Council should request the official Members not to vote. The request of this Council should be regarded as a mandate, and I understand the official Members of this Council will be placed in a false position. Then they suggest that these official Members may take part in the discussion but at the same time they suggest that they should not vote. It appears to be inconsistent. I am speaking for myself—if I am called upon to express my opinion on a particular subject, I must study the question thoroughly, and if I am not allowed to vote, I doubt whether I would take the same responsibility. Therefore it will be most regrettable if the official Members do not take part in the deliberations of this Council, though on transferred subjects, without any responsibility whatever. I am really sorry to find that under certain circumstances the official Members shall be under the painful necessity of retiring from this Council. I find some practical difficulty also. Suppose, for argument's sake, this resolution is accepted, then on item No. 8, which relates to a transferred subject, I understand that the official Members are not to vote; also on item No. 10, I do understand that they are to keep themselves aloof when it is under discussion. Whereas if item No. 13 or any other item which relates to a reserved subject is under discussion, they are to take part. I am a co-operator myself and I want to co-operate with the official Members of this Council. I know that most of them have the greatest experience of the administration of the Bengal Government, especially on transferred subjects; and I want to hear their views and to give weight to their expressions of opinions. I do not mean to say that I would accept their opinion as a mandate, but I must give it my best consideration. That is the reason why I beg to submit that the official Members of this Council should be allowed to take part not only in the deliberations of this Council but should also be allowed to vote.

It must not be presumed that they are to follow the Government, as it appears to me that the Government of India have just laid down a rule, under which they can express their independent opinion and vote according to their conscience, irrespective of the orders of the Government. Under these circumstances, I do not think that I would be justified in supporting the resolution moved by my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I heartily support the resolution moved by my friend, Babu Surendra Nath Ray. I am glad that an opportunity has been given to discuss the relative position of the official and non-official members in respect to transferred subjects. To my mind if the official Members can control the deliberations and the decisions on transferred subjects, I do not know what is the force of the subjects being called "transferred." Under section 46 of the Government of India Act the presidencies of Fort William in Bengal, Bombay, and Fort St. George, and Bihar and Orissa shall each be governed in relation to reserved subjects by a Governor in Council, and in relation to transferred subjects by the Governor acting with Ministers appointed under this Act. A distinction is made there as to how the reserved subjects should be dealt with and as to how the transferred subjects should be dealt with. Under section 49, rules are to be made by the Governor for the convenient transaction of business in his Executive Council, and with his Ministers, and every order so made shall be binding, I ask if the Ministers have got any vote or any voice in the deliberations of all the subjects brought before the Governor's Council. I believe that the Ministers have got no controlling voice. Under section 50, if any difference of opinion arises on any question brought before a meeting of the Governor's Executive Council, the Governor in Council shall be bound by the opinion and decision of the majority of those present, and if they are equally divided, the Governor or other person presiding shall have a second or casting vote. From this section it appears to me that over the reserved subjects the Ministers have got no voice in the Executive Council. I think, therefore, that in considering the transferred subjects the official Members should have no voice or should have no control. Though they may take part in the deliberations and express their opinion on the subject, in coming to a decision they cannot be allowed to vote. If they are allowed to vote, then they can control the decision one way or the other. If they can go against the wishes of the representatives of the people, so far as the transferred subjects are concerned, I see no utility of the subjects being called "transferred." If the Council be outvoted by the vote of the official Members it would to my mind be inconsistent with the principle of the arrangement as between transferred and reserved subjects. I am not sure, however, what rule prevails in the deliberations of the matters in a full Council of the Governor—I mean the Governor and his Executive Councillors and Ministers. But if I am right in my conjecture that the Ministers have got no controlling voice there, that they cannot outvote the Governor, I believe similarly by analogy the official Members should have no voice in the deliberations of the transferred subjects. So I think that no anomaly would arise; and I do not agree with my friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose or Mr. Addy. It is but proper and reasonable that the transferred subjects should be allowed to be dealt with by the representatives of the people and not by the official Members. With these few words, I whole-heartedly support the resolution.

Sir ASHUTOSH CHAUDHURI: I look upon this resolution in this way—it is simply a request and nothing more. We are not going to deprive anybody of any rights. The question before the Council, as the mover put it, is not that we are going to deprive anybody of any rights. There is no question of that. I cannot understand why it has been thought so, because the resolution is very clear on the point. It is said that we have not much experience of these matters. What is the experience we have to acquire in these matters and what is the meaning of such experience? The officials may vote or may not vote; they may vote on a particular transferred subject and if they vote against the majority, it will not be of any value. What we undoubtedly want is their advice in these matters. When a subject is being discussed, we want information from them and the way they think about it. No restriction is intended to be put upon their freedom of speech; in fact, we cordially invite their advice in all matters. Then the question is that if official members vote on a resolution of this character, it is liable to be misinterpreted that is to say, the attitude of Government may be misunderstood. I want that in these matters the voting should be independent of such a factor, that is to say, the people who are going to vote may not be influenced in any way because the Government view may or may not be considered in favour of or against the particular resolution. I think that the voting ought to be entirely independent of that factor and I therefore support this resolution. I express a hope that it should be possible for us in discussions of this character, when we are moving resolutions or supporting them, not to speak equivocally, as we sometimes do, and always to try not to be offensive to anybody. I certainly think that ought to be the rule in this Council. If we want to attack any one, if he deserves to be attacked, we should do it openly, but ambiguous reflections which are very difficult to get hold of should not be indulged in. I think we have no right to attack any one in this way, and I hope that it will be borne in mind when we take part in these discussions.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: This resolution is of a kind which, I think, the Council will do well to regard with some caution; as if it means anything—in some respects its meaning is not altogether clear—it practically indicates an attempt on the part of one section of the Council to deprive another section of what has been given to it as a statutory right inherent in its presence as members of the Council. Underlying the resolution there is also a theory of the tyranny of the majority.

which might conceivably be pushed, in other circumstances, to very undesirable results.

I have found some difficulty in appreciating the arguments which have been advanced, not, I am glad to say, with unanimity in the Council, but, practically they seem to amount to three. In the first place, we had a reference to paragraph 233 of the Joint Report of the Secretary of State and the Viceroy, which did, quite truly, refer to the possibility of a convention by which the transferred subjects would be left to the discretion of non-official members alone. But it appears to have been overlooked that that pronouncement preceded the final form which the Reforms Scheme took, and for the authoritative interpretation of the intention of the Reforms Scheme we must look to the report of the Joint Committee of Parliament and to the Act itself. Moreover, incidentally, that pronouncement was challenged at the time by the Government of India, who thought that it might merely intensify to an undesirable degree the cleavage between official and non-official members, whereas it was their desire that the Council, composed of these two elements, should work together as one. As a set-off to this argument we have had from Kumar Shib Shekharewar Ray a reference to a pronouncement made by Mr. Curtis—a pronouncement made I know not on what date and under what circumstances. Now it is true that Mr. Curtis interested himself greatly in the constitutional problems of this country, and helped materially in arriving at certain subsequent conclusions, but Mr. Curtis is a sufficiently experienced student of constitutional practice to be the last person to argue that a dictum of his own should override the decision of Parliament, which, in a matter of this kind, is the final authority. Then, thirdly, we have, practically, the argument that, in the opinion of some members, it would better further the aims and objects of the Reforms Scheme if the official Members stood aside in the way they wish. We have had comments on the manner in which official members have voted so far in the course of the present session, but while these comments are clearly meant to be condemnatory, it seems to have been overlooked that this line really leads to the conclusion that it is not really that the speakers object to officials voting; they really object to officials members voting against them. If all official members voted with Babu Surendra Nath Ray and Kumar Shib Shekharewar Ray they would doubtless be the first to applaud so excellent a practice. I put it to the Council that we can best clear our minds of the so-called constitutional argument if we go back to the Act itself and to the report of the Joint Committee, since this Council is constituted under an Act of Parliament and can only act within the limits therein laid down. It is perfectly clear, and nobody has denied it this afternoon, that the Government of India Act gives official members the status of full members of this Council. The Council was deliberately constituted with a majority of non-officials and a minority of officials—a very marked minority, rendering somewhat ineffective the comments we have heard as to the malign influence which official members can exercise over the decisions of the Council. The Act, therefore, constituted a Council, composed jointly of official and non-official members, giving each and all of them the full status of members. There is no differentiation in the Act between the relative status of these two parts; and, further, the Joint Committee specifically dealt with the question of voting. They specifically gave to the ordinary official member a free right of voting on all subjects; to the Members of the Executive Council they specifically gave a right of voting on all subjects, provided only that on transferred subjects, in the case of disagreement with Ministers, they should not vote. These are the clear conditions relating to the exercise of our privileges laid down by the Act and by the report of the Joint Committee, and I put it to the Council that it would be an attempt unreasonably to interfere with these privileges were this resolution to be passed. Underlying it is a theory which, as I have already said, might lead us far in very undesirable directions. From voting it is an easy stride to speaking, and in fact we have already heard from Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur that he would like officials not even to speak. But if the will of the majority is to prevail over the minority of officials to-day, what is to prevent its prevailing over other minorities of non-officials to-morrow? This Council, sooner or later, is sure to have before it agrarian legislation. Suppose the zamindars are in the majority; are they to decide that the tenant party should sit silent and not exercise their right of vote? Suppose—an almost inconceivable hypothesis—that the “poor litigant” was in the majority and the lawyer element in the minority, and we had a resolution before us like one we had recently about the Paper-Book Department; is the majority to rise up and decide that the pleaders should stand aside? Again, if a question affecting the University, which only returns one member, should arise; are we to decline to hear the restrained eloquence of Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur? The thing is unthinkable. A proposition of this kind would not stand five minutes’ scrutiny and discussion by any Council working on sound constitutional lines. I can understand a deliberative assembly taking action to alter its constitution: for instance, Mr. Gladstone’s first Home Rule Bill proposed to exclude the Irish Members from Parliament altogether; but I cannot understand a deliberative assembly, after admitting various members to full membership, subsequently seeking by resolution to deprive a section of them of the exercise of their rights. The only precedent that suggests itself is, I believe, Soviet Russia, where, if the reports are to be trusted, there is a rigid discipline exercised by those in power over the manner in which others admitted to the assembly vote. But even there, again judging by the reports, they do not prevent others from voting. They at least preserve the outward decencies, but if some members vote as they should not, they probably get shot when returning home. I do not advise the Council to adopt that alternative, which is indeed less desirable than the resolution, but I do put it to the Council that the resolution, as it stands, is open to very serious misconstruction as to the wishes of the majority.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: I thank Babu Surendra Nath Ray for the resolution that he has brought before the Council and I am in full accord with the spirit of the resolution, but I am sorry that I have to oppose the resolution on other grounds. As far as I see it is never the wish of the Muhammadan members here to make themselves subject to the decision of the majority for the present. Their experience also of a time before the Reforms and even their experience at the present day does not make them hopeful and quite willing to submit to such a proposition. If I were to cite any case in point after the Reforms, I may say that, if you consider the question of nomination to the Calcutta Corporation, you will find that while formerly there used to be seven or eight Muhammadan members in the Calcutta Corporation at the present moment, when we have got at the head of affairs a venerable gentleman who was taken to be the champion of Muhammadan rights and liberties, we find the number much reduced—and you will also find that along with him there are other bright luminaries of our country who could have set matters right, but that is not done. These are matters which make us ponder, and I ask our Hindu friends not to go so rapidly, but a bit slowly. Without meaning any offence to any of them—and among them I have persons for whom I have the greatest regard—I have said that the Muhammadans in a body do not like such a measure at the present moment. It may be said that when such depredations are made on the rights of Muhammadans—even the officials are parties to it. They used to be parties to it before and they are parties to it even at present—it is the duty not only of us, the Muhammadan members here, but also of the Hindu members, of the members of the Anglo-Indian community and others who are here to see that justice is done in every case. There is another thing to which, if my Hindu friend would look, they would find that there does not seem to be any necessity for the resolution. During the short time we are here, our Hindu friends must have noticed that we, the Muhammadan members, did not hesitate to side with them in every matter in which we were in the right and there is no reason for them to think that we shall on any occasion go against them when questions which will be brought forward before the Council will be in the interests of our country. There is no reason why they should be in a hurry now. I should ask them to wait for a better time. And to my mind the time is not very far off when both the Members and Ministers will always think that the interests of the minority is a matter which requires the greatest consideration, and particularly of minorities who are very much less in number, for instance, the Anglo-Indians, the Namasudras and others, and I wish to ask the members to wait for that time.

The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has told us that there are many matters which come before the Council, for instance, the question of landlords and tenants. If the officials were left out of account, if their valuable opinion were not considered, it is quite likely that either the zamindars will get the sack or it is quite likely that the tenants will be nowhere. Under these circumstances, I am sorry I have to oppose the resolution.

Mr. H. A. STARK: I think we ought to remember that State administration is as much a science as it is an art. Some of us may have some theoretical knowledge of Government as a science, but very few of us have had an opportunity of learning anything of it as an art. It seems that under these circumstances the wisest course is not to rid ourselves of the help of those who have knowledge of Government both in theory and in practice. It was said by one of the speakers that in a certain quarter the advice had been given that the members of Council should act on their own initiative and responsibility as soon as possible, so that at the end of ten years they may be able to prove what rapid progress has been made in the direction of self-government. I feel that the advice given is not particularly sound. If at the end of ten years we are going to give a good account of ourselves, it will be largely due to our having been put on the right lines by those who are in a position to guide us while we are still in the earlier stages of legislative experiment. We are in a transitional stage. Nobody changes horses in midstream. We want to feel the ground beneath our feet before we attempt to carry a load. The load of Government consists not merely in giving directions, but also in reflecting whether our directions can be carried out. The latter consideration will assist us largely in taking our line of action. Emphasis has been laid on the fact that what is being proposed is not that official Members should be forbidden to exercise their vote, but that they should be requested not to use their vote—to abstain from voting. But is it human for any one to glow enthusiastic in discussion when he knows that at the end of it he will have no voice in the settlement of the question; that he will have to look at the scales without being able to put the weight of his vote into either pan; that he will have to stand passively by and witness an improper, a mischievous and a disastrous decision being arrived at without being allowed to save the situation, though he knows he could do so, by exercising his vote? I do feel we have no right whatever to impose such a request on anybody; and it is wise to make a request when we have not the power to compel its being acceded to and acted upon? I do feel most strongly that we want the official Members to help us. They have special knowledge and they have special experience, and we do not doubt their honesty of purpose. We can trust them to help us, and I for one most earnestly desire that we should take advantage of their presence as ordinary members of this Legislative Council. We want their experience. We want their support. We want their guidance. We want their vote.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: The real objection on the part of Mr. Curtis and others to the official vote was this, that the official classes were bound vote as they are told and not as they pleased. That is the real question before us. This question was first of all discussed by a great many of us here before Mr. Montagu came out to India. The report was then made by Mr. Montagu and Lord Chelmsford. It was again discussed by Lord Southborough's Committee and it was again discussed by the Government of India. Then the Joint Committee of the House of Lords and the House of Commons sat in London and they heard witnesses from all over India. This matter was fully discussed and gone into. Their objection was to the blind voting on behalf of Civilians and they have said, in their report, that so far as the Members and Ministers are concerned, they should not vote against one another, but so far as the officials are concerned they should be free to vote as they please. When any particular Bill or matter is brought forward by a Minister, we hope that the officials, if they really believe that the matter which is being brought forward by the Minister is right and is for the good of the country, will vote for it according to their conscience, and if it is not for the good of the country, we hope that they will vote against it. That I believe is the real criterion of their voting for the last few weeks in this Council. They have been voting so far as their conscience is concerned, that is, they have voted according to their will and we hope they will continue to do so.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: I am sorry that I have to vote to oppose this resolution. My first point is that we may consider the official Members of this Council as ballast of the ship of Council, because there are various interests represented in this Council—some have got their majority and some are in the minority. As pointed out by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler in deciding these matters, the official Members will be very useful members and their opinion will be one of an interested nature and without any prejudice in any direction. In the next place, the adoption of this resolution would mean the exclusion of experience and professional knowledge. Take, for instance, the matter of public health. In this province matters are quite new. There are some official Members coming from England and some other European countries who may give some important and experienced opinion on these matters. So it would not be right to exclude these gentlemen from voting in deciding these matters. There are various communities who would like to have the greatest amount of money for primary education. There are some classes who would want greater amount of money for University education. In these matters we also gain much from the official Members who give their opinion based on experience and according to the interests of this country. So I oppose this resolution.

The motion was then put and lost.

Medical Training Schools.

Mr. D. C. GHOSE: "This Council recommends to the Government that early measures be taken for the establishment of medical schools for the training of village doctors."

The resolution merely reiterates a demand which has often been made by our countrymen. Some years ago, in 1916 I think, Dr. M. N. Banerjee moved a resolution in the Imperial Legislative Council urging the establishment of schools in different parts of the country for the purpose of imparting medical education in the vernacular. And in the last Bengal Legislative Council, some of its distinguished members, namely, Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter, Sir Nilratan Sircar and others pleaded on several occasions, the urgency and importance of providing means for the training of doctors adequate enough in number for the needs and requirements of the rural areas. Besides, the press has repeatedly brought to the notice of Government, that the number of doctors in Bengal is so deplorably small that it is impossible to have any medical relief in many parts of the rural area in the province. In the last Council, some figures were placed before the members by Mr. Mitter, which demonstrate the absolute lack of doctors in the rural areas in Bengal. Let me give those figures to the Council. There are altogether 3,000 registered medical practitioners in Bengal. Of this number about 2,000 practise in municipal areas and the rest in rural areas, where 42 millions of our population live. So that there is one doctor in the rural areas for about 42,000 inhabitants. These figures tell their own tale. It is useless to comment on them. But I may, by way of contrast to these figures, mention the fact that whereas in Bengal in the rural areas there is one doctor for about 42,000 inhabitants, in England there is a qualified medical practitioner for 1,200 or a little more of the population. Then, Sir, the vital statistics of the province disclose the depressing fact that the number of deaths exceed the number of births. In answer to unstarred question No. 64, Government, in course of their reply, gave certain figures on the 14th March last, which show that in 24 out of 26 districts in Bengal the population is diminishing on account of the excess of deaths over births. This is a very alarming state of affairs. One of the causes of excess of deaths over births undoubtedly is, that people are unable to get any medical relief when they are ill. Many cases of illness prove fatal on account of want of medical assistance. Sir, the want of medical relief in the rural areas was brought home to me most vividly during my electioneering campaign in the Diamond Harbour subdivision of 24-Parganas. There are villages where it is impossible to get even a quack. Here and there one comes across a kaviraj or a homœopathist but generally, in the villages, I found it was impossible to get any medical assistance. Now, Sir, I am bound to say that the response of Government so far to our demand for doctors for rural areas has been very disappointing indeed. It is true that in the Imperial Legislative Council Dr. M. N. Banerjee's resolution was accepted by Government. But as yet it appears that nothing has been done to give effect to that resolution. As I have said, the question of providing more doctors for the villages was also raised in the last Bengal Legislative Council, and in answer to the demand made by several non-official members, Sir Henry Wheeler used very guarded language and said that although Government were in sympathy with the desirability of affording additional facilities for medical education, it was not wise to be carried away by the appreciation of the medical needs of the country. Sir, I quite appreciate the necessity of using careful and guarded language by a Member of Government, but I confess that reading Sir Henry Wheeler's speech in the last Council on the 13th March, 1919, I felt that there was a limit even to caution on the part of Government. Sir, in the face of the staggering facts that I have placed before the Council regarding the high rate of mortality in the province and the absolute lack of medical men in the villages, is it wise, is it humane, is it even prudent on the part of any Government to refuse to accede to the demand of the people for doctors adequate enough for the requirements of rural areas? What I complain most is that Government have no definite medical policy. I venture to think that Government should seriously consider the advisability of adopting a medical policy which will aim on the one hand at producing a comparatively limited number of highly trained doctors for Calcutta and other big towns in Bengal, where they will be able not only to pick up a lucrative practice, but also to investigate into the causes and remedies of diseases that are yet baffling medical science, and, on the other hand, training large numbers of medical practitioners intended for the rural areas. Such medical practitioners will have as their training the ordinary course of medical education and a special knowledge of treatment of diseases which are prevalent in the villages, namely, malaria, kala-azar, cholera, dysentery and small-pox.

That, in short, is the medical policy that I urge Government to adopt. I leave it to Government to decide whether the training that they will give to men who, it is intended, will practise in the rural areas, should be in English or in the vernacular, as was suggested by Dr. M. N. Banerjee. That is a question upon which I should not like to dogmatise. It must, of course, be decided by expert opinion. But I submit I am entitled to ask that the Government should without delay adopt a policy which will meet the pressing medical needs of our villages and pursue such policy with great vigour and resolution. Sir, I feel so keenly on this question, that if I had the Archangel's trumpet, the blast of which could startle the living of all nations, I would sound it in the ears of Members of Government and say: "Doctors, more doctors, and ever more doctors for the villages in Bengal."

SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: I propose that the words "medical practitioners" be substituted for the word "doctors."

Mr. D. C. GHOSE: I have no objection to accept the member's amendment.

The PRESIDENT: The debate will now proceed on the resolution as amended.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I am very glad to be able to support the resolution moved by my friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose. Times out of number it has been fully demonstrated before this Council that if there is anything needful, needful for our very existence and the continuity of the people, that is medical assistance. The facts and figures which have been quoted by my friend and the answers obtained by questions from Government will go to show that the figure is not 22,000 but 44,000 per one qualified doctor.

Mr. D. C. GHOSE: That is what I said.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I beg your pardon.

When Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur moved his first resolution about having one or two doctors in every thana, there was a full discussion about this matter and the Government reply was that there was such a paucity of medical practitioners that even if Government could finance the proposal and the District Board or Municipality were to share in the financing, still from the very fact that there were not sufficient number of doctors, this laudable proposal of the Rai Bahadur could not really be realised in practice. I for myself could not imagine that the material progress of the country was so much neglected for so many years under such an enlightened Government that at this day we find there are no qualified medical practitioners there being only one for about half a lakh of persons in India, while there is one for 1,200 persons in England. That being so, the first thing that is needful is to establish medical institutions. We are not very much ambitious to have colleges, but would be content with institutions like the Campbell Medical School in different places which might supply us with a sufficient number of qualified medical practitioners.

I am very sorry to refer to one thing. When I referred to this matter in my Budget speech, the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea wanted to know whether we had sufficient local patriotism so that Government might come forward for the purpose of helping in starting medical schools. I for myself could not really understand the morality of that sort of statement. Is local patriotism to be interpreted by the amount of money that could be put in by way of contributions from the locality? If it is intended that only those places which are rich enough to raise a certain amount of money will have Government help,

I should draw the attention of the members of the Council that this should not be so. The poorer a place is, the less they can assist or help themselves, and I believe the Government should more readily come forward to give more assistance to those people. That is my plea for establishing such schools in distant places like Chittagong, Rajshahi, and other similar localities. Burdwan has got its Government medical institution, though Burdwan has got its big zamindars, Rajas and Maharajas, and Burdwan is within one hour's journey by train from Calcutta. In any serious case occurs, one can manage to come down to Calcutta and can get the best possible medical aid. What about those places from where people cannot come to Calcutta within 48 hours? Is Government so very oblivious that they really forget that those places, because the distance is great, are not within their regime? That being so, I heartily support this resolution of Mr. D. C. Ghose who, with his usual youthful energy and liberality of heart, has really understood the position and wants to have equal treatment meted out throughout the province and wants to have such schools throughout all places.

Babu RISHINDRA NATH SARKAR: I rise to give my hearty support to this resolution. As a representative of one of the poorest and most backward districts of Bengal, the district of Bankura, I want to mention to this House that there are vast tracts in the district where there is absolutely no doctor, not even a compounder, to render medical help to the poor people. There are other fortunate parts of the district where there is some kind of medical help available and the doctors there are qualified in this way. Some of them work as compounders in some dispensaries or some quacks for only a few months and then come back and practise as doctors and command extensive practice. There are other tracts of the country which are more fortunate in getting homoeopathic practitioners whose mode of treatment is peculiar. They do not know English. They find advertisements in the vernacular papers that for a few rupees they can get a box of homoeopathic medicine and also directions for their use. They send for these boxes, and when the boxes come, they find that the names of the medicines are not written in the vernacular, but in English. When they want to administer the medicines, what they do is this. They open their box, shut their eyes, take the name of God, put their fingers into the box and take out the medicine that comes first and administer it to their patients. They know that no harm would be done to the poor patients by taking the medicines. That is the way they treat and these are the various kinds of medical help which the majority of our people get. Therefore, the demand for medical help, particularly in the district of Bankura, is very great. With these words, I ask this Council to see that the resolution is carried.

Rai LALIT MOHAN SINGH ROY Bahadur: I rise to oppose the motion. The proposal before the House is a titanic one. With few funds and without practical training, the attempt to realise the colossal result would be futile, especially in these days, when we feel the dearth of proper medical practitioners. I want that the House will survey the proposal with the eye of a critic, as on the very surface of it, it is a very interesting one, as on the very face of it we are likely to be convinced that it is a very useful proposal. I oppose the motion not because that I do not appreciate the benevolent merit of the motion, but I oppose it on the ground of its impracticability. Bengal is a province of villages, the number of which is a very large one. To provide all the village medical practitioners with medical schools, we have to start a large number of schools, and these again need to be manned by proper medical instructors. Supposing for the moment that we are financially able to launch so large a scheme, but will it be practicable for us to procure so many instructors at once? Again we have to look to the other side of the matter—who will be the village doctors? To learn medicine a certain amount of literacy is needed, a certain amount of general attainment must be the sure mark to qualify one to study medicine. The general standard of literacy cannot be raised in a day. People cannot be taught to qualify in medicine easily. My friend, Syed Emdadul Haq, perhaps recognised this fact and that is why he wants to substitute “practitioners” for “doctors.” We have already a large number of village practitioners, but I am sorry to say that most of them are quacks, innocent of the art of medicine and healing, whose votaries they profess themselves to be. These men administer medicine without any responsibility and they generally kill more patients than they cure. The ordinary standard of acquirements of village practitioners is already very low and their knowledge of medicine is generally nil. But we feel the necessity, I should not deny. We cannot undertake the proposal at once in these days of financial stringency, when we are always anxious of saving our national treasury from a financial crisis. I therefore think that if the motion be carried, it will lead us to further financial embarrassment, which we could have afforded to bear with, had there been a fine prospect; but when the prospect is doubtful and the measure itself seems to be impracticable, at least in these days, I think, it will be difficult and dangerous for us to commit further expenses for an impracticable scheme. I suggest that the existing circumstances be best improved if the Medical Board be asked to hold a proper examination for the existing village practitioners, or rather quacks, and grant licenses to the successful candidates with authority to practise. Some of the medical practitioners will be further empowered to keep pupils like the native kavirajs, who, after undergoing a certain practical and theoretical training at the hands of their instructors, will be allowed to appear at the examination of the Board and to qualify themselves for independent practice. This arrangement I think will increase the number of efficient practitioners without heavily taxing the national treasury. This is feasible, as the custom is already a native one.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: I wish to support this resolution whole-heartedly. In the distant villages people are dying away in large numbers without medical aid, and any movement that is started for giving relief and medical aid to the villagers cannot but evoke whole-hearted support from all of us. But the thing is this. The mover has not suggested any practical means by which this end should be attained.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: That is the business of Government.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: He says that is the business of Government, and I hope that the Government will find means of establishing schools wherever necessary. With these words, I beg to support this resolution.

Mr. S. M. BOSE: I whole-heartedly support this resolution. I think that there should be at least one medical school in each district of Bengal. For example, I think a medical school should be immediately started in, Mymensingh. There is a first class hospital, and a scheme for this school has been approved of by Government. So, there is no reason why there should be any further delay at all. There can be no question that in Bengal the number of doctors available is absolutely insufficient, so that during epidemics, like cholera and influenza, village people die without any medical aid. I think that money spent on this will be well spent and will result in untold benefit. Further, this money will be amply repaid in the increase of health, happiness and wealth of the people. With these few words, I support the resolution.

Khan Bahadur Maulvi WASIMUDDIN AHMED: It is an admitted fact that the number of qualified doctors in the mufassal is very limited. It is also a fact that a number of people who practise medicine have no knowledge of the nature of the disease and do not know what medicine they should use, but I think that by supplementing their knowledge in medicine they can do a great deal of good to the country. Even now we find it very difficult to get qualified doctors to man the dispensaries. Recently the District Board of Pabna decided to appoint four subsidised doctors with an additional allowance to act as epidemic doctor, but I am sorry that up to date no more than two doctors have been found. In the mufassal there are many doctors who have got some knowledge of Bengali literature and, if properly trained, they can be of very great use in treating simple cases as for instance, malaria and other similar diseases. Of course, in the case of a complicated disease, people will have recourse to highly-qualified doctors, but in simple cases, which form by far the majority of cases, these village doctors will serve useful purposes. So if a committee be formed for examining the people who are already practising, and if they are found really qualified to understand the art of medicine, they can be trained up in suitable centres; in that way these people will be of great use to the men in the mufassal. So I heartily support this resolution.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I am glad that for once at least I am able to support my young friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose. I am very glad to find that member after member has risen in his seat and supported the first resolution in this Council which was passed, namely the provision of doctors in the mufassal. Indeed this resolution of Mr. D. C. Ghose is a corollary to the first resolution which this Council, I must say to its glory, passed as its very first act. You must give employment to doctors and this resolution, if carried out, will give employment to many doctors, and when there is a demand there will be a supply by the proposed medical schools. These medical schools should teach a two years' course, as was the case previously in the Campbell and Dacca Medical Schools. The entrance qualification should not be higher than what it was before in the Campbell Medical School, and the cost should be proportionately less. In this way we can have cheap doctors and not otherwise. We cannot have doctors trained for six years in a medical college to go to the mufassal and work on a subsidy of Rs. 30 or Rs. 40 a month. They won't go. They have got big ideas and large expectations. That will not do. We must have doctors who are able to treat malaria, cholera, and give saline injections and the like. We do not want highly qualified doctors, but such doctors as will be able to give relief in cases of cholera, influenza and other such diseases, and to attend to ordinary surgical cases. We know that there are hundreds of cases where poor women die in labour without any medical help, and they do require such medical help. I do hope that the time will come when poor men and women will get some medical help in this country. If we cannot grant this help, I say that we shall be failing in our duty. I therefore support this resolution.

Maharaja Bahadur KSHAUNISH CHANDRA ROY: I beg to support this resolution whole-heartedly. This resolution hardly requires any speech. Every one of us spontaneously feels the necessity of qualified doctors in the mufassal. All that we can and do get at present in the mufassal is better known as haturias and hakims, and they should be taught how to impart medicine properly. It is for this that my friend Mr. D. C. Ghose, has brought this resolution before this Council. He has not, however, given us any idea as to the practical way of carrying the resolution into practice, but, with your permission, I should like to suggest that a Committee be appointed to go through this and to suggest how this resolution can be brought into effect. With these few words I support the resolution.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: On behalf of the Government, I desire to express my whole-hearted sympathy with the resolution which has been moved and also, with one exception, with the various speeches to which we have listened this evening. This very question, somewhat on different lines, was discussed in the Imperial Legislative Council in March, 1916. To that discussion my hon'ble friend the mover referred in the course of his opening remarks. That discussion proceeded upon a resolution moved by Dr. M. N. Banerjee, now the respected Principal of the Belgachia School of Medicine. The resolution was accepted by the Government of India, subject to certain limitations, to which I need not refer, and it was sent down to the Government of Bengal for action. The Government of Bengal consulted their advisers and they came to the conclusion that they could not give effect to the resolution as it stood. I think in justice to the Government of Bengal, I ought to state that they consulted the Bengal State Medical Faculty, and the Bengal State Medical Faculty unanimously suggested that instead of medical education proceeding on vernacular lines, as recommended by the resolution of the Legislative Council of India, the medical education which would be helpful to Bengal should proceed upon the lines of the education imparted in the Campbell Medical School and the Dacca Medical School. The same view was expressed with a little less emphasis by the Bengal Council of Medical Registration and, what is even more important a more emphatic expression of the same view came from the Calcutta University Commission. The Commission said—I am quoting from their report—"We cannot endorse the view that a fresh scheme of vernacular medical education should be started." My hon'ble friend's motion steers clear of these difficulties. He does not suggest that the scheme of medical education which he recommends the Government to accept should proceed upon vernacular lines. It is altogether an open question with him. His complaint is that the Government has not a medical policy, and that expert opinion should be invited in order to formulate such a policy. Well, I am quite willing to invite expert opinion upon the lines of medical education that we have to follow in respect of the different districts, but I cannot plead guilty to the charge that Government has not formulated its policy. It has a medical policy, a wise, beneficent, merciful, and if I may be permitted to say so, an all-comprehensive medical policy, but the basis of that policy is money. 'We want medical schools. My friend said that if he had the blast of the Archangel he would blow it into the ear of the Minister and tell him: "Medical schools, more medical schools and medical schools for ever."

But if you are to have more medical schools grant us the money, and it is for this Council to vote us the money. If the Council will place us in possession of funds, I undertake to say, on behalf of the Government, that nothing will be wanting so far as persistency and completeness of organisation are concerned, to complete the scheme. This is the message which the members of this Council should communicate to their constituents, but it is for you to vote us funds. You hold the purse-strings of the nation. You have complete command over the funds at the disposal of the Ministers, and unless you give us funds, how can we proceed in the matter of medical relief to which you have invited our attention. I propose therefore to accept this resolution and to appoint a committee to formulate such measures as may be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the policy to which Government is committed.

Complaints have been made about medical institutions not being established here, there, and elsewhere. Well, the Burdwan Medical School will be opened in the course of this year. As regards Mymensingh—my friend has referred to this matter—negotiations are going on for the establishment of a medical school; at Jalpaiguri the case is similar.

I am afraid I am unable to give the same satisfactory answer as regards Chittagong, and my friend, Babu Annada Charan Dutta, seems to think that the claims of Chittagong are neglected by the Government. I will say, on behalf of Government, that we do not neglect the claims of any districts; we are prepared to treat them all on the same terms, of perfect equality, if there is local help forthcoming for the purpose of establishing these institutions. What is the state of things in England? We have borrowed the ideas of our free institutions from that great country; it is the local bodies who supply the snaws of war, and Parliament comes to their assistance when local bodies are no longer able to supply them. That is the English system; that is the system which has built up the great medical institutions of the United Kingdom. I am afraid you must make up your mind to follow that system. I must ask Babu Annada Charan Dutta to use his persuasive eloquence to move the people of Chittagong in order to come forward and loosen their purse-strings in aid of local medical relief, which is so urgently needed.

I do not think I need detain the Council further, except, to say that I have deep sympathy with the resolution, and it will be our constant aim to add to the scope of medical relief consistently with our resources.

That is all I have got to say in connection with the resolution which I accept.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I am glad that my resolution has received support from so many members of this Council, and I am still more glad that the Hon'ble Minister has expressed his whole-hearted sympathy with the object of this resolution. Before I deal with the speech of my friend, the Minister, I would like to refer to the speech of Rai Lalit Mohan Singh Roy Bahadur.

I am sorry that he has thought fit to oppose this resolution. The criticism that he has levelled against it is that I have produced an impracticable scheme. Now, I cannot help thinking that my hon'ble friend did not do me the justice of hearing my remarks, for in my speech in moving the resolution I did not put forward any scheme impracticable or otherwise. I only placed before the Council some facts and figures to show the high rate of mortality in the province and the absolute lack of doctors in the rural areas, and I asked Government to formulate a scheme, because I do think that it is the business of the Government, and not the business of the non-official members of this Council to formulate schemes, and place them before the Council.

Now my friend the Minister has said, that I have been wrong in saying that Government have not got a definite medical policy to suit the requirements of the rural areas. I may have been wrong, but I do think that it is difficult, if not impossible, to find any evidence of the existence of such a policy.

My hon'ble friend has said that he is willing to push forward any scheme that may be necessary to give effect to this resolution, if funds are forthcoming. I am certain, and I think, I can assure my hon'ble friend on behalf of all the non-official members of this Council that, if a suitable scheme for the purpose of giving effect to this resolution is placed before the Council, the non-official members, at any rate, will not hesitate to vote as much money as it is possible to vote for such an object.

The motion in the following amended form was put and agreed to:—
 “This Council recommends to the Government that early measures be taken for the establishment of medical schools for the training of village medical practitioners.”

The Council here adjourned for 15 minutes.

After the adjournment.

Agricultural Schools.

Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: “This Council recommends to the Government that an agricultural school be opened at a suitable centre in each division, half the costs being borne by Government and the other half by District Boards of the division in proportion to their income.”

This subject is so very important that I do not think that any lengthy speech on it is necessary. I have had occasions of drawing the attention of the House to the fact that we require a real enthusiastic set of workers in the agricultural districts—in the remotest corners of the districts—and show by practical results to the actual cultivators the best methods of ploughing and manuring their fields as well as the utility of other improved methods in connection with agriculture. And how can we do this? Unless we establish agricultural schools there is no hope of our getting the agriculturists to know all these; and it is only the schools that, by supplying the actual cultivators with the information they want, can train them in their profession of cultivation. This work, if successful, is sure to be imitated by others. One effect of the establishment of primary schools in the rural districts has been that most of the pupils who are themselves boys of agriculturists have come to neglect their own profession; the primary schools have produced a body of men who have failed to go beyond the primary stages and finding no other suitable means of employment have taken to touting and creating village faction and gulung simple village folk. In order to provide the boys of the cultivators with practical training, it has been the policy of Government to set apart at least $1\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of land attached to the lower primary schools, so that boys may learn the use of implements and tools with which they have to work in later life.

But it is a pity that these boys should be trained by teachers who have no knowledge of practical agriculture. These teachers are trained in guru-training schools where there is no provision for practical education in agriculture. So is it not idle to expect that the boys should be benefited by the instruction as imparted therein?

Should it not be far better to open new agricultural schools at suitable centres of every division in Bengal and send a few peasant gurus from every village to get their practical training there? It will also attract men interested in agriculture and do a lot of good to the country by giving practical training to the boys.

If the teachers are properly trained they may become district agricultural officers, and if the Deputy Directors of Agriculture condescend to help them, I am sure they will be able to cultivate the land which is attached to the schools with advantage not only to themselves, but also will be encouraging the sons of the cultivators to take to agriculture.
In fact, if these methods are taken to, I am sure in every district, in a very short time, we shall have a network of agricultural schools, which though modest, will be sufficient for the purposes of practical training to the villagers who want it most of all.

While on the subject I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the price of food-stuffs has gone up very high. The other day we passed a resolution prohibiting the export of rice to foreign countries. This may be a temporary measure, but I think the House will agree with me when I say that the only way to remedy this evil is to get up better outturns from the yield of fields, and unless agriculturists are regularly trained to the use of implements and encouraged to take up the profession of cultivation, which is hereditary to them, you cannot hope for better yields from their fields. I am sure that if we can provide this lesson of cultivation by means of teachers who take instructions in these schools, then they can select their own seeds, their own manures, without having to depend for external help, and it is only in this way that the outturn of crops will be greater and improved. I do not think I need take much longer time to recommend this subject; but with regard to the means also, I would like to suggest that if the Government cannot bear the whole cost, let them bear at least half the cost, and the District Boards in the Division may be called upon to find the other half. Section 100 of the Self-Government Act says that District Boards can spend money on certain measures for the improvement of agriculture, and, if Government will take the initiative, many District

Boards will come forward, if not to give them recurring expenditure, at least to grant a fixed sum of money for scholarships and take an interest in these institutions. With these words I beg to commend the resolution to the acceptance of the Council.

The PRESIDENT: I think it would be convenient now to call upon Babu Amulya Dhone Addy to move the resolution which stands in his name (No. 36).

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: "This Council recommends to the Government that an agricultural school, with an experimental farm attached to it, be established and maintained in every district of Bengal."

Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: May I be permitted to say a word. This cannot be an amendment. It is a motion that stands in his name. It may have the effect of some kind of amendment to my resolution, but it asks for something more than my motion.

The PRESIDENT: It is not an amendment, but an original motion somewhat analogous to yours.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I thank you for your kind permission to move this resolution. We all complain of the high price of food-grains in Bengal, and we are all under the impression—and I must say under a false impression—that heavy quantities of these food-grains are allowed to be exported, and that is the reason for the high price. I beg to submit that this is not a fact, as we have found that the total quantity of food-grains exported from India to foreign countries is not more than 5 per cent. and, even in the case of wheat, it is not more than 20 per cent. of the outturn; but if we exclude Burma in the case of rice, it is not more than 2½ per cent. and, if we exclude the Punjab in the case of wheat, it is not more than 3 per cent. What is then the reason for the high price of food-grains? I find, however, that the outturn of food-grains in Bengal is much lower than that in the other provinces of India and much lower than Japan and other civilised countries of the world. What is the reason? Is it due to the fact, as alleged, that the soil of Bengal is not so fertile as that of the other countries? I beg to submit, it is not a fact. On the contrary, I would say that the soil of Bengal is more fertile than that of any other country in the world, especially Japan and the United States of America.

As regards outturn, I may state that the average yield per acre of wheat in the Bombay Presidency and the United Provinces, as will appear from the report of the Indian Industrial Commission, was 1,250 lbs. in a certain year, but in the United Kingdom in the same year, it was 1,973 lbs. per acre; in Belgium 2,174 lbs. and in Denmark it was 2,526 lbs. per acre. Similarly in the same year in the case of barley, the average yield per acre in the United Provinces was 1,300 lbs. in the United Kingdom 2,105 lbs. and in Belgium it was 2,953 lbs.

Then in the case of rice—the average yield of rice per acre is only one-half of what it is in Japan. What is the reason, though the soil of Bengal is more fertile than that of other countries and though the export of food-grains is not even more than 5 per cent? What is the reason for this nominal outturn of food-grains in Bengal? I beg to submit that it is due to want of agricultural education in Bengal. We find in the administration reports of Japan that there are agricultural schools in every village, or group of villages in Japan. We also find that in every village or group of villages in the United States of America, there is an agricultural school with an experimental farm attached to it. We find this even in Germany and Austria.

But what do we find in Bengal? Practically nothing of the kind. It appears from the official reply which has been given to the question which I asked in this House on the 17th February last, that only in Dacca, in the month of January 1920, an agricultural school had been established, and it was proposed to establish one in Chinsura at an early date. So that, in the course of a few months, we shall have only two agricultural schools in the whole of Bengal. Is that enough? It may be said that there are a number of experimental farms established in Bengal. I admit that, and I thank the Government for them very much, but that is nothing; It is like the play of Hamlet without Hamlet! It is something like the battle of Kurukshetra without Sri Krishna!

Unless an agricultural school be established along with an experimental farm, we cannot fully utilise these experimental farms. I beg to submit that an agricultural school should not only be established in every division, but in every district of Bengal, and, in the course of time, in every group of villages there should be an agricultural school with an experimental farm. With these remarks I beg to submit my resolution before the Council. I do not mean that these schools should be established in the current year, but that they should be started as early as possible.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: I am fully alive to the importance of agricultural education in this province. Government have already announced that it is their policy to aim at gradually establishing an agricultural farm in every district. They have opened an Agricultural Vernacular School at Dacca and a similar school has just been opened at Chinsura. We have agricultural farms in six districts and two others are being constructed. I am therefore prepared to accept the resolution moved by Babu Amulya Dhone Addy as expressing the policy which Government will follow, but I would suggest to him that he should bring it within the range of practical politics by recommending that Government should establish an agricultural farm in every district of Bengal and an agricultural school in every division.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: I accept the amendment suggested by the Hon'ble the Minister.

The Hon'ble the Nawab SAIYID NAWAB ALI CHAUDHURI, Khan Bahadur: Progress must necessarily be slow. In the first place, a suitable type of schools has still to be evolved. The schools at Dacca and Chinsura are in the nature of an experiment, and modifications in their working may be shown by experience to be necessary. Secondly, the rate of progress must depend on the financial condition of the province.

I regret that I cannot accept the resolution moved by Maulvi Emaduddin Ahmed. From what I have said he will see that I have every sympathy with his desire to see an extension of agricultural education in the province. But I cannot accept that part of his resolution relating to District Boards. Government are anxious to secure the co-operation of local bodies in these matters. But it is not in a position to lay down that each District Board in a division must bear a share in the cost proportionate to its income. To do so would be an infringement of the principles of local self-government. I would refer the mover to the important resolution on local self-government issued by the Government of India in 1918. Therein it is laid down that the practice of requiring local bodies to devote fixed portions of their revenue to particular objects of expenditure should be done away with as unduly limiting their freedom of action. It would be a retrograde step if Government were to attempt to force on District Boards the contribution of fixed sums for the establishment and maintenance of these schools. I do not think that it would be possible to secure unanimity among all the District Boards of a division, and in practice Government would have to put pressure on them to secure the contributions. On this ground I must oppose the resolution as it stands. If, however, Maulvi Emaduddin Ahmed will omit the last portion of his resolution from the words "half the costs being borne by Government" down to the end, then I am prepared to accept his resolution as amended.

Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: I accept the modification suggested by the Hon'ble Minister and I would omit the words "half the costs . . . income."

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: So far as my resolution is concerned I have already said I accept the amendment suggested by the Hon'ble the Minister and I am thankful to him for his kind consideration.

The PRESIDENT: The resolution which has been moved by Babu Amulya Dhone Addy may be taken as an amendment to the resolution moved by Maulvi Emaduddin Ahmed. I would put first the resolution moved by Maulvi Emaduddin Ahmed with the modification suggested by the Hon'ble the Minister and accepted by the mover. I do not know, however, that those who wanted to speak still desire to speak now that the resolution has been accepted by the Hon'ble the Minister with some modification.

Mr. TARIT BHUSAN ROY: The resolution which has been moved by my friend, Babu Amulya Dhone Addy, before its acceptance by the Hon'ble the Minister, appeared to me to be very modest; and my regret was that it did not go far enough. Now that the Hon'ble the Minister has been pleased to accept it with substantial modifications I do not propose to inflict a speech upon this Council. With these words I support the resolution as it now stands in a modified form.

Colonel A. J. PUGH: I beg to move that the question be now put.

The motion that the question be now put was put and agreed to.

The resolution was then put in the following modified form and agreed to:—"This Council recommends to the Government that an agricultural school be opened at a suitable centre in each division and that experimental farms be established and maintained in every district."

Religious preachers for jails.

Khan Bahadur KHWAJA MOHAMED AZAM: "This Council recommends to the Government that religious preachers, Hindu and Mussalman, be appointed in every jail in Bengal, to preach to the convicts at regular intervals, as is the case in the Presidency Jail in Calcutta."

The resolution which stands against my name in to-day's agenda does not need many words to support it.

The object of imprisonment should not merely be to punish the offender, but also to prevent him from treading the path of temptation in future. This end can best be achieved by impressing on his mind the heinousness of his offence from the moral and religious points of view.

I understand that the system of organizing Id Prayer for Muhammadan convicts was first introduced in the Alipor Jail in the year 1918, and has since been a popular annual ceremony. Some three or four months ago, Friday prayers were introduced and immediately became popular. About two months ago, daily prayers at the prescribed hours were introduced and the Mussalman convicts took to them rather keenly. Preachers have also been invited from time to time to deliver sermons for the benefit of Muhammadan convicts at the Alipor Jail. From inquiries I have made, I am glad to learn that the system has worked well and has in no way interfered with their work.

Nothing has yet been done for the benefit of Hindu convicts; there were difficulties in the way perhaps, but when the system has been found to be such a success among Muhammadan prisoners, I do not see why it is not possible to do something for their Hindu brethren with equal success. The Alipur experiment deserves a trial at other jails in Bengal, and I hope that this Council will agree with me in this matter. With these few words, I beg to commend the resolution to the acceptance of the Council.

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: I am glad to be able to accept this resolution in principle. As a matter of fact, the Indian Jails Committee have made a recommendation similar to the proposal made by the Khan Bahadur. As the members of this Council may know, it is under the consideration of Government how best to introduce, as far as possible, the reformatory principle in the Jail administration; and every endeavour will undoubtedly be made to give effect to this principle. It has been recognised for a long time that it does help in reforming the prisoners if religious instructions are given to them. Hitherto, the Government has been eager to avail themselves of the services of such gentlemen as have volunteered to give religious instructions for the benefit of the prisoners; but, unfortunately, not many men have come forward to render such services. But we have been able to get a good man for the Presidency Jail. As regards some of the other jails, such men have not been forthcoming. But the question is one of considerable importance; it is under the consideration of the Government of India and of this Government; and I can assure the mover of this resolution that the object he has in view has every sympathy of the Government and that every effort will be made to give the matter the most favourable consideration possible. As the Jails Committee's report is being considered by the Government of India as well as by this Government, I do not think that the Council will expect me at present to say anything further on the subject. As I have already said, I accept the principle underlying this resolution.

Khan Bahadur KHWAJA MOHAMED AZAM: As the Hon'ble Member in charge has accepted my resolution in principle, I beg leave to withdraw it.

The resolution was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

Municipal Dairy Farms, etc.

Babu AMULYA DHONE ADDY: "This Council recommends to the Government that section 14 of the Calcutta Municipal Act be amended, so that the Corporation of Calcutta may be authorised to provide for—

- (a) the establishment of municipal dairy farms and milk depôts, the leasing of lands acquired by the Corporation under this Act, for the purpose of establishing private dairies, whether in or outside Calcutta, and the transport of milk to Calcutta from any municipal or private dairy farm or milk depôt;

- (b) the purchase and maintenance of stud-bulls, and such other measures as may appear to the Corporation to be desirable with a view to improve the local breed of cattle; and
- (c) the establishment of municipal grazing-grounds and the subsidisation, by such means as may appear desirable to the Corporation, of privately-owned grazing-grounds, whether in or outside Calcutta."

I admit that this has already been embodied in section 14 of the Calcutta Municipal Bill, and I also admit that this Bill is going to be introduced in this Council next session. I beg to submit that this part of legislation is the most urgent one and that no time should be lost in authorising the Calcutta Corporation to provide for pasture-grounds. In connection with the milk-supply of Calcutta, we all know how dear it is, and that is the reason why the Calcutta Corporation appointed a special Committee with a view to increase the supply of cows' milk, not to speak of pure milk in Calcutta. That committee made an inquiry into the present state of things, appointed an expert officer, Lieutenant-Colonel Matson, and accepted the report of that expert. The expert recommended to the Corporation to have a pasture-ground at a short distance from Calcutta; but I am sorry to state that although the Corporation have accepted that report, the Solicitor to the Corporation has expressed the opinion that, under the law as it stands, the Calcutta Corporation cannot incur any expenditure; and that is the reason why the Calcutta Corporation has unanimously recommended that Government should take up this as a special and urgent legislation. With these words I commend this resolution, and I hope and trust that Government will be pleased to take it up as an emergency legislation, so that the Corporation of Calcutta may be authorised to incur the expenditure required for providing a pasture-ground.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: The amendments embodied in this resolution find a place, as the mover has pointed out, in the Emergency Bill, which the Calcutta Corporation has submitted for the acceptance of Government. We have considered that Bill very carefully, and we have decided to include it in the larger amendment of the Calcutta Municipal Act. It will be my duty to move the introduction of that Bill as early as I can. I was in hopes of introducing the Bill in July next, but I am afraid that that expectation may not be realised. In any case, it will be my earnest endeavour to introduce the Calcutta Municipal Bill as early as I can; and these provisions will find a place in that Bill; and the Council will have the opportunity of discussing them. We all recognise the importance of the supply of pure milk; we also recognise the importance of the provisions which the Calcutta Corporation seeks to insert in the interests of pure food and of pure milk. But, as I have said, we have decided that this Bill—the emergent Bill—should form part of the larger Bill—the Calcutta Municipal Bill; and therefore I accept the resolution, subject to one small modification. The mover recommends that these provisions should form part of section 14 of the Calcutta Municipal Bill; but of course, as the sections will be renumbered in the larger Bill, the section in question may not be number “14;” and that part of the resolution will have to be omitted. With this modification, I accept the resolution.

The PRESIDENT: The resolution in the modified form runs as follows:—“This Council recommends to the Government that the Calcutta Municipal Act be amended so that the Corporation of Calcutta may be authorised to provide for—

- (a) the establishment of municipal dairy farms and milk depôts, the leasing of lands acquired by the Corporation under this Act, for the purpose of establishing private dairies, whether in or outside Calcutta, and the transport of milk to Calcutta from any municipal or private dairy farm or milk depôt,
- (b) the purchase and maintenance of stud-bulls, and such other measures as may appear to the Corporation to be desirable with a view to improve the local breed of cattle; and
- (c) the establishment of municipal grazing-grounds and the subsidisation, by such means as may appear desirable to the Corporation, of privately-owned grazing-grounds, whether in or outside Calcutta.”

The above motion was put and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: I may inform the Council that in pursuance of a statement I made in the beginning of this session, I have constituted a committee to consider the allotment of seats in the Council Chamber. The committee consists of myself as the President, the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, Mr. Walsh, Babu Surendra Nath Ray, Mr. Watson-Smyth, Khan Bahadur Nawabzada K. M. Afzal, Mr. S. M. Bose, Babu Annada Charan Dutta, Maulvi A. H. M. Wazir Ali and Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. The first meeting of the committee will be held at 11 o'clock on Wednesday, the 6th April.

Adjournment.

The Council was adjourned to 3 o'clock on Tuesday, the 5th April, 1921, at the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Judicial and executive functions.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: "This Council recommends to the Government that early steps be taken for the total separation of the judicial from the executive functions in the administration of this Presidency."

At the outset I may be permitted to refer to the proceedings of the Imperial Council. Recently Mr. Bhugri, I believe, brought up the matter before the Council of State, and Sir William Vincent, on behalf of Government, stated that the matter was now a provincial one. This is what he is reported to have said: "The Government will meet the Hon'ble Member as far as possible, and I hope that the following undertaking will satisfy him. The matter is a provincial one, but if any local Government decide to take this question of separating the judicial from the executive functions, the matter is one for them, the Government of India would raise no objection and will proceed to make such legislative changes as may be necessary to give effect to the proposal of the local Government. We are not, however, prepared at this juncture to interfere in any way with the discretion of the local Government in a matter which is one of purely provincial administration." In the debate Sir William Vincent referred to the question as debated in the Madras Legislative Council. He said that it was rejected and he read a telegram to that effect. I see, however, in a local paper, the Citizen of the 24th February last, that the amendment was rejected and the main resolution was carried by 45 against 33. Probably this is a mistake, because Sir William Vincent referred to a telegram to that effect that the motion was defeated by 45 to 33. However Mr. Shastri pointed out that in Madras the question was somewhat different, because there the question between Brahmins and non-Brahmins was very great and the two communities were not pulling well. Therefore, that should not be the guide for other provinces; and as far as I have been able to gather, this question was also raised in the United Provinces Council, and a Committee has been appointed there to consider the matter. The Government reply given in the Council of State was therefore favourable and assured that, if any local Government wishes to introduce the matter, any legal help that might be necessary by amending the law would be given.

The question, I may be permitted to say, is not a new one. It has been discussed at some length on various platforms, in Legislative Councils, on Congress platforms and in Government replies given at the time of the debate. It has also been discussed in several reports and in several pamphlets on the subject. I may, however, be permitted to give a short history of the question, and I am indebted for that history to the excellent treatise on the subject published by the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter. The East India Company began by taking the grant of Dewan from the Emperor of Delhi in 1765, and the administration of criminal justice was left in the hands of the officers of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal. The two functions were combined, I believe, in 1887. Sir John Shore remarked that the people were accustomed to a despotic authority, and naturally they looked to one master, and upon that view he thought that there should be a "one-man rule" introduced. Lord Cornwallis, however, very soon after taking up the Governorship, thought that the two functions should not be confined to the same hand. He thought that the result of the combination would be a sacrifice of the interests of the administration of justice to the physical interests of the Government, and he was able to pass Regulation II of 1793 and, as a result, the Collector was deprived of judicial power. This state of things continued for nearly 30 years and again the union of the two functions was effected gradually by the year 1821-22. Lord Auckland, with the consent of the Court of Directors, again effected a separation. But in 1859 both these functions were again united as a temporary measure only. The Police Commission, composed of men of ripe experience regarding Police administration, stated in their report in 1860 that, as a rule, there should be a complete severance of the executive police from the judicial authority and that the official who might be in any way connected with the prosecution of any offence or the collection of evidence should never sit in judgment, not even with a view to committal for trial before a higher tribunal. When Act V of 1861 was enacted it was distinctly stated in the course of the debate that the combination of the two functions should be a temporary measure only. Unfortunately, when the Criminal Procedure Code was enacted in 1872, the fate of the controversy was sealed under the guidance of Sir James Fitz James Stephen, I believe, and the evils of the reactionary measures are being perpetuated even now, though many attempts have been made to remedy the evils. In the Imperial Gazetteer I see it stated that the people are accustomed to "one-man-rule" from a very great antiquity. There it is stated that the unit of British Indian administration is the district, and the chief executive officer is the Collector-Magistrate or the Deputy Commissioner. In his executive capacity this officer is charged with the collection of various branches of revenue and at the same time he is the chief local Magistrate. It is also remarked that the union is one to which the people of India are well accustomed, for it has existed from time immemorial in the east, and separation of the two functions is the rule only in the most advanced western communities. Sir, I have got with me the Manu Sanghita, and the Muhammadian Jurisprudence edited by the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim. Criminal administration is dealt with in Manu in Chapter VII, and in Chapter VIII the judicial works have been described. It is stated there that the two are quite separate. For judicial administration the Brahmins were appointed and, with their advice, the judiciary was managed, but for the executive work they were not entrusted with any part of the duty—there were other persons for it. I need not take much time of the Council on this subject, but I can safely assert that it is a mistake to say that in ancient India there was "one-man rule" in vogue. In Chapter VIII of the Manu Sanghita it will be seen how the thieves are to be dealt with in the judiciary under the management of the Brahmins and Chapter VII describes how thefts are to be investigated by a different organisation. I may refer to another book. Dr. Pramotho Nath Banerji, in his book on the public administration in ancient India, says that the administration of justice was kept separate from the executive function of the State, and no interference with the judicial business by the executive was permitted. According to Muhammadan law again, the judiciary was managed by the kazis, according to the teachings of the Koran, and "the administration of Justice must be above the suspicion of subservience to the executive"—to quote from page 27 of Sir Abd-ur-Rahim's book on Muhammadan jurisprudence. I have already shown that Sir John Shore thought—on what authority I do not know—that the Indians were accustomed from a long antiquity to look to "one-man rule." To my mind this "one-man rule" is certainly based upon prestige theory, it being ultimately enacted by the Criminal Procedure of 1872. Sir, it did, as it was bound to, create serious dissatisfaction throughout India. The late Mr. R. C. Dutt published in 1893 an excellent pamphlet on the subject showing how the separation of the two functions could be easily effected. The question also arose in the House of Lords in the year 1893; and Lord Kimberley, the then Secretary of State for India, and Lord Cross expressed in clear terms their approval of the separation of the two functions. Lord Dufferin, referring to the resolution of the Indian National Congress on the subject, characterised it as a "counsel of perfection." In 1896, the late

Mr. Manmohan Ghose brought out a pamphlet in which he collected some 20 typical cases demonstrating the evils of the present system. By the exertions of the two Indian gentlemen the matter was kept before the public both here and in England. At last a memorial was submitted to the Secretary of State on July 1st, 1899, by some noble-minded Englishmen. That memorial has been published in Mr. P. C. Mitter's book. It is signed by several eminent gentlemen having ripe experience of the nature of administration of justice in India. Those gentlemen were Sir Richard Garth, Sir Charles Hobhouse, Sir John Budd Phear, John Scott, Sir William Wedderburn, Herbert J. Reynolds and others. In 1905, the late Mr. Gokhale supported the movement in the Supreme Council. He said that there was, for instance, "the separation of judicial and executive functions to be effected, a reform demanded by eminent Anglo-Indians as well as Indians, which Lord Dufferin described as a 'counsel of perfection' and which he said could not be carried out then for want of funds." Well, the Government now have funds to carry out the reform many times over and I respectfully submit, it ought no longer to be delayed, as the sense of oppression and discontent to which it gives rise is infinitely more serious than any administrative convenience which may result from it. In 1907, the late Sir Rash Behari Ghose also supported it in the Supreme Council. He wanted to point out "one more serious blot in the administration of justice, viz., the placing of the judicial and executive functions in the same public servant." Then in 1908 Sir Harvey Adamson sketched out a rough scheme in the Supreme Legislative Council. He said that the Government of India had decided to advance cautiously and tentatively towards the separation of judicial and executive functions, and in those parts of India where local conditions rendered that change possible and appropriate an experiment might be made. It might be a costly one, but the object was a worthy one. It had been consistently pressed upon them by public opinion in India. He had discussed the question with Indian gentlemen like the Maharaja of Darbhanga and Mr. Gokhale, and they were of opinion, which coincided with his own, that the advance should be tentative and that a commencement should be made in Bengal, especially in Eastern Bengal, because it was in Bengal that the cry of separation first began and that the cry of separation between the police and magistracy was most pressing.

Sir, whatever may be the case in other provinces, I am certain that I can base my demand upon this assertion that in Bengal the reform should be introduced without delay.

In 1912, Sir Sankaran Nair, His Excellency Lord Sinha, the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter, the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee and several others deposed before the Public Services Commission and they all submitted that this reform was an urgent one and should be introduced without delay. If I am permitted, I would like to refer to the statement made in the dissentient note of the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim in the Report of the Public Services Commission. He says: "It most frequently happens in criminal matters that the native—"

[Here the member reached the time limit and he was allowed two minutes more to finish his remarks.]

"There is another case that has materially contributed to the unsatisfactory state of administration of justice in criminal matters, namely, the combination of judicial and executive functions in the present organisation of the Civil Service." He dealt with the matter in detail and supported the movement, saying that it should be separated as early as possible. The Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter, in his excellent treatise on the subject, has also supported the movement and he has submitted a scheme in it which shows that the matter need not be very costly; if the separation is to take place it can be very easily done by dividing the executive branch into two portions—one to be under the executive Government and another under the direction of the High Court and the District Judges. Some of the Deputy Magistrates may be specially engaged in doing judicial work only.

The angle of vision has changed and a beginning of responsible government has been introduced. The state of things which existed at the time of Sir John Shore does no longer exist. We have got the Lord Chief Justice of England as our Viceroy and the Public Services Commission, which included His Excellency Lord Ronaldshay, also in a manner supported the movement and, though they avoided saying anything special, they were not against the introduction of the reform. Under these circumstances I think my demand is a very reasonable one and no time should be lost in giving effect to this much-needed reform.

The PRESIDENT: Items 14 and 15 are identical and they need not be moved separately. I now call upon Mr. Ajoy Chunder Dutt to move his amendment.

Mr. AJAY CHUNDER DUTT: I beg to move, by way of amendment, that the following be added at the end, viz :—

"That the said separation be effected in consonance with the following principles :—

- (1) officers appointed to perform executive duties in no case to perform judicial duties and vice versa;
- (2) officers appointed to perform judicial duties to be in no way subordinate to executive officers;
- (3) the entire control and management of criminal judicial service, including the powers of promotion, transfer and punishment of judicial officers, be vested in the High Court."

At the outset let me say that I think it is a pity that this resolution should have been moved to-day. It involves a matter of such great importance that it should have been postponed to the following session. We have been fairly hard-worked and we shall be glad to have a holiday. We have hardly had time to give this matter the consideration it deserves and most people feel that such an intricate and important subject deserves greater attention than we can give it to-day. The matter is just as important to-day as it was when first broached, and I feel that a mere resolution asking Government to take early steps to give effect to the desired separation is not very useful. I should have thought that some of the members of the Council would have proposed a concrete scheme of separation. There are a number of schemes before us; the first scheme is that of the late Mr. R. C. Dutt, which was published as early as 1893; then there is a skeleton scheme which was put forward by Sir Harvey Adamson in 1908, and lastly, there is the scheme that was conceived by the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter in 1913. These schemes possess very valuable materials for help, but I do not know that any of these schemes can be applied to-day by reason of circumstances having changed. Therefore, it would have been very much better if, instead of moving the resolution to-day, we had taken three or four months' time to construct a new scheme and put forward that scheme for the acceptance of Government. Anyhow, since the hon'ble mover thought fit to move this resolution I had no other option but to put in an amendment and include in it a number of important principles. I desire to deal with these principles one by one. But, before doing so, let me shortly state what the evils of the present system are. The District Magistrate, as everyone knows, wields very large powers. He is the head of the police, he is also the head revenue officer and he does a considerable amount of judicial work. Now, as head of the police, he has got to suppress crime. Supposing a dacoity takes place, it is possible that he may have to go to the spot, hold a local enquiry, possibly record a confession or two, and then get the police to commence an investigation. They send him diaries day after day to inform him how the investigation is proceeding, and in other words the Magistrate sees to the building up of the case. The District Magistrate thereafter sends the case for trial to one of his subordinates, say a Deputy Magistrate. Now if it so happens that the District Magistrate takes more than an official interest in the case, the fact that he is keen upon a conviction is quickly noised about and the Deputy Magistrate who has to try the case immediately comes to know of it. There is a firm impression in the minds of Deputy Magistrates, right or wrong I do not know, that their prospects in the service depend upon the good-will of the District Magistrate; so that in a case in which the Magistrate takes a keen interest, the Deputy Magistrate is generally not in a position to exercise free judgment. A trial is held and a conviction is recorded. Now this state of things has got to be removed by a scheme of separation. The vious suggestion is to divide up the Deputy Magistrates into two groups, that is to say a judicial group and an executive group. That is what I have suggested. Let the judicial group only deal with judicial matters and be placed directly under the District Judge. Let it be subordinate to the District Magistrate. The executive group, of course, will remain subordinate to the District Magistrate. A mere separation of functions will not be sufficient to remedy these evils. A separation of the services is essential. A scheme of separation of functions may be conceived which does not involve a separation of the services. Thus in a small district a Deputy Magistrate may have to perform both judicial and executive work. When doing judicial work he will be under the District Judge and when doing executive work he will be under the Magistrate. But I beg to submit that such a separation, which is only a separation of the functions, is not useful, because so long as an individual remains under the influence of the District Magistrate, even in judicial matters he will not be able to exercise free judgment. Therefore a separation, not only of functions but also of the services, is necessary, and a scheme providing for such separation has to be framed.

The last suggestion I make in my amendment is that the entire control and management of the criminal judicial service, including the powers of promotion, transfer and punishment of judicial officers, be vested in the High Court. If my suggestion is accepted, and a separation is effected in the services; in other words if the present subordinate service is divided up into judicial and executive groups and the judicial group is placed under the District Judge, it follows as a corollary that the control of that department should rest with the High Court and not with the executive. This is absolutely necessary. The High Court besides is in a much better position to judge of the comparative merits of individuals, because the High Court does a great deal of criminal work whereas the Chief Secretary has got to rely entirely upon the reports sent by District Magistrates as to the capacity and ability of subordinate officers. Therefore I say that the judicial officers should be placed exactly on the same footing as Munsifs. We know as a matter of fact that Munsifs generally are reputed to be very independent, and I think that judicial officers doing criminal work, if they are placed under the High Court, will attain that independence.

Lastly, if you desire to remove the executive influence, it is absolutely essential that matters like the transfer, leave, promotion and punishment of subordinate officers should be left with the High Court. The impression to-day exists amongst these officers that if they want to get on in their service they must act according to the wishes of the District Magistrate, and I think that impression will still continue in spite of any separation that may be effected unless these men in the judicial service are placed under the High Court.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government that the separation of the judicial and the executive functions in the administration should be carried out without any delay, if possible by dividing the members of the provincial service into two classes of Deputy Magistrates and Deputy Collectors, the former exercising only judicial powers in criminal cases and the appellate powers of the Magistrate being exercised by senior Deputy Magistrates from whom Assistant Sessions Judges and Sessions Judges should be partly recruited."

I only beg to add the words "Joint Magistrates and Senior Deputy Magistrates." The evils of the present system have been described by my two predecessors and I need not dilate on them. They are admitted by everybody, but there is an element of doubt and suspicion in it which must be mentioned. It is said that the separation would entail large increase in expenditure. I do not believe it. The proposals that I make in my resolution which are identical with the original resolution make it clear that there will be no additional expenditure, but the real question is not expenditure—the real question is the prestige of the District Officer. I fully appreciate that the District Magistrate should have great prestige to enable him to keep the disorderly elements of his district in order. It is therefore necessary that he should have certain powers for dealing with cases under sections 107 and 145 and certain other penal powers in criminal cases. I am not willing to derogate in the least from the prestige of the District Magistrate. That is the most serious question in this matter, that the prestige and powers of the District Magistrate should not be diminished, but consistently with that this division can yet be made. What I propose is this. There are many districts now in which the District Magistrates should remain the head of the district, but their powers for dealing with cases under sections 107 and 145 should be vested in either a European Joint Magistrate or a Senior Deputy Magistrate. In most cases there will be a European Joint Magistrate, but in many districts the Senior Deputy Magistrate will exercise these powers. Even now, if the District Magistrate can be an Indian, there can be no objection to the Senior Deputy Magistrate exercising these powers. Therefore, I say that the division should be so made that the powers of the District Magistrate and of the Government should in no way be impaired, and I believe that it can be so divided that the powers of District Magistrates and of the executive Government would not be impaired. The British Government here have established a system of judiciary for ministering justice in a form of purity which was not known to India before, and I say that that purity of justice should be kept intact. The great glory of England is its administration of pure and impartial justice, and that should be maintained. People have got a suspicion that the District Magistrate exercises a power over his subordinates which does not lead to purity of justice. Therefore, it is the duty of Government to disabuse the public mind of that prejudice or of that apprehension. I beg to submit that every effort should be made by Government to separate these two functions consistently, so far as possible, with the prestige of the Magistrate and of good government in this country.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: This reform which is demanded by all the resolutions under discussion is overdue. To say so is to say the least about a demand which is now more than a century and a quarter old. It was brought upon a poor, helpless—I do not know whether I shall say a conquered—people by certain aggressive rules who preferred financial security to administration of justice. After the transfer of the Dewani to the English in 1765, Sir John Shore made some sort of report to the Board of Directors that we, Hindus and Muhammadans of Bengal, were lovers of the despotic rule, and in this country, unless that despotic rule was made permanent by combining the executive and judicial functions in the same person, certainly we, Hindus and Muhammadans of that time of Bengal—lovers of such despotic authority—would be rather very worse off, and, out of kindness to us the gentleman made the said report. Such a good Governor as Lord Cornwallis had to bring the despatches some time in the year 1781 and inculcated upon us this insidious poison which has eaten out our vitals for a century and a quarter. Even at the end of Lord Cornwallis' own rule he himself was of opinion that the system was not good and should be abolished. Since then high officials, Judges, including several Chief Justices of the Calcutta High Court, and, lastly, Lord Hobhouse, all of them have been pleading that this system should be done away with. But unfortunately thought it appears that this system never existed in India, whether you refer to the Hindu system of jurisprudence and polity, or refer to Shukraniti, or if you refer to the system of administration of justice that obtained during the Mussalman period (there might have been individual cases of scandalous miscarriage of justice here and there), it was thrust upon us at the time. And why? Because we were powerless and because revenue was preferred to the proper administration of justice. We have all along been demanding its reform unanimously—and it is not question of one party asking and the other party not doing so—without any distinction of caste or creed, religion or race, but still it is not being granted. And why, because we are a subject people—I regret to use the words “subject people.” After the introduction of the reform regime we have been told that we are being given some sort of equal status, but I for myself have not been able to forget that there are instances in which almost every moment we are reminded that we belong to a subject race, and it is impossible for us to forget it so long as there are provisions in the Criminal Procedure Code for the preferential treatment in respect of trials of the ruling race. The system of combination of judicial and executive functions in the same man has not only sacrificed the pure administration of justice but has been a prime factor in creating slave mentality, in us. I am very sorry that I have been speaking rather in a strain which may not be palatable to certain gentlemen, but, if I have given any cause for offence, I beg pardon. But I would ask them in all seriousness to consider in their minds what if our position was theirs, their feeling would be. If they in their own country had been demanding a reform for a century and a quarter and they would not get it, what would their feelings be? I am sure that they will perfectly appreciate my sentiments.

But why has the much-needed reform not yet been carried out? First comes the question of prestige. To prestige is really due a number of scandalous cases, two of which are to be found in that excellent collection of Mr. Monmohan Ghose—the Fenua and Lal Chand Cases. These are only the types of several—almost innumerable—cases which occur almost every day in the administration of criminal justice in this country. I am not quite sure whether I am right in formulating such a proposition in Calcutta, where the High Court is close by, but I can assure you, Sir, that there is no place in the country where some such thing does not occur almost every day. It is perhaps one in a thousand such cases that you read in newspapers, and even in these cases they have got to be backed by men of the mental calibre of the stamp of Mr. Monmohan Ghose and the like. Otherwise, these people suffer in silence. This miscarriage of justice has so demoralised the people that they have really come to think of it as a necessary incidence of life in India. If that is so, I appeal to you to say whether time has not come when we should not only enter our emphatic protest against this sort of unholy combination of the two functions and take the earliest opportunity of separating them on the principles which have been very well laid down by Mr. A. C. Dutt, the worthy son of a worthy father, who perhaps devoted some of the best years of his life for carrying out this reform. Now coming to the point. I have already told you that it is the prestige that has been keeping up the system. As against this, I point out one fact, viz., the demoralisation not only of the English Judges and Magistrates, but also following their earthly masters, a worse demoralisation of my own countrymen—the Indian Deputy Magistrates. To speak from experience when the English Assistant Magistrate come from home, there is a great deal to admire in them, but after taking a few lessons perhaps at the feet of some pukka bureaucrat and after diving deep into the knowledge of the powers which are vested in them, say after a couple of years, they turn out different beings. We were told by our late professor, Mr. N. N. Ghose, that one of the best traits in the English character was to enjoy power without exercising it. In the combination of the two functions, judicial and executive, in India the converse proposition is rendered true so far at least as those gentlemen are concerned. When these English gentlemen are demoralised in such a way this system should not be continued any further even for their interest and good name. Many Indian Magistrates are worse sinners. Sometimes the English Magistrates are bearable; they are sometimes open to conviction, but when the Indian Magistrates sit in Courts, how often a whisper of a police officer or a significant word of a Court Inspector has been sufficient to carry the day!

In my long experience before several courts in the province on different occasions I have had frequent opportunities of noticing and feeling the evils of the combination and with no powers to remedy them. Sometimes I was bound to put up with it in silence on account of various reasons and on other occasions had even to give up my brief as hopeless. In the provisions of Law regulating exercise of judicial functions there are such things as summary trials, which give a good cloak to many of the vagaries performed under the executive influences. However, I shall not dilate upon it. My point is this. This demoralisation not only of the English Judges, but also of the Indian Magistrates is a factor which should carry weight, and it should be put a stop to. Then comes the question of expenses. Is it a fact that money is not available for it? Scheme after scheme has been propounded where an extra expenditure is necessary or where really the expenditure would be appreciable. Money has always been found for the same. But for over a century not to get money for this necessary reform is really something which one should be loath to believe. So these two grounds really do not hold good. Therefore the reform ought to have been given effect to long, long ago, and if you do not give it to us even now, well, the only thing we can say is that you can afford to do so as we are helpless, and with this stamp of our helplessness some of our non-co-operator friends outside will certainly say that the Reformed Council is but a show. As to my amendment I have asked for omission of a portion from the resolution of Rai Jogendra Chunder Ghose Bahadur to bring it in line with the underlying demand and the policy of all the resolutions on this subject of the separation of judicial and executive functions. I object to the portion, which I ask to omit, on the grounds which I have tried to explain before this Council. The practice of making Sessions and Assistant Sessions Judges by promotion from the Senior Deputy Magistrates is not a desirable affair under the present circumstances. Barring a few exceptions, for whom I have the greatest regard, others are like old fossils, who have been brought up in the undesirable atmosphere, and who make us often feel as if they belong to a separate species of human beings. Even we, who cried ourselves hoarse for over 30 years for the increment of these gentlemen's pay for giving them equal position with those of the superior service, are now noticing how they are behaving themselves. There should not, therefore, be any hard and fast rule that Sessions Judges should be appointed from these gentlemen. Even now, under section 407, Criminal Procedure Code, in almost all the important districts Senior Deputy Magistrates have been empowered to try appeals. Therefore, there is no necessity of having that portion too, in the resolution. As to appointments, Government should have an open field in order to get the best possible recruits to those higher posts. I am very sorry to observe here that the experiment of promoting some of the Subordinate Judges to be Session Judges is not quite satisfactory. Much depends upon the proper selection of deserving persons. With these words, I beg to urge my amendment on the Council.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: The question of the separation of executive and judicial functions is so old, it has been discussed so often, and so often has Government proclaimed its acceptance of the principle, that it is an irony of fate that it should be at all necessary for any one at this time of the day to be still pressing this matter upon the attention of the Government. But the fact remains, and it is a humiliating confession to have to make, that Government so far have done little to redeem their solemn pledge and remove this blot on the administration of criminal justice in this country. The existing system has been condemned so often and so strongly, that I do not think that anything I can say can possibly add to the force and volume of such condemnation. I may, however, mention that the condemnation has proceeded not merely from persons who may be dubbed as agitators, but it has come also from officials of the highest rank and eminence and of ripe judgment and experience. There is voluminous literature on this subject and members in this Council are perhaps aware that the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter has made a notable contribution to the output of information on this question. Government has always pleaded the question of cost as a bar to carrying out of this measure of administrative reform. I do not profess to speak with authority on this aspect of the question, but I am certain that now that the purse-strings are held by the representatives of the people in this Council, the supply of money will be forthcoming if a well-considered scheme is placed before the Council and is approved by it. It is repugnant to commonsense and to our ordinary notions of fairness and justice that the prosecutor and the judge should be rolled into one and that the man who catches the thief has got also to try him. We have waited long, too long for this crying measure of reform. Pray do not let us wait till the Greek Kalends.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I gave notice of this resolution suggesting that steps be taken for the separation of judicial, and executive functions not so much to discuss the defects of the present system, as to suggest to Government that it is a pledge which was given several years ago and which ought to be redeemed and that this is a measure which ought to have been undertaken long ago, but has been unfortunately deferred so long and should no longer be deferred. I could not particularly understand the speeches of members who have tried to dilate on the defects of the present system, because I feel that so far as these defects are concerned there is no room for controversy. Even officials have never claimed that the present system of administration of justice in this country is anything like a counsel of perfection. In 1908, the Hon'ble Sir Harvey Adamson made a speech in the Imperial Legislative Council which puts very briefly and cogently the defects of this system and far more lucidly and plainly than I can ever attempt to do. This is what Sir Harvey Adamson said, on the 28th of March 1908, from his place in the Viceregal Legislative Council:—"The inevitable result of the present system is that criminal trials affecting the general peace of the district are not always conducted in that atmosphere of cool impartiality which should pervade a court of justice; nor does this completely define the evil which lies not so much in what is done as in what may be suspected to be done, for it is not enough that the administration of justice should be pure. It can never be the bed-rock of our rule unless it is also above suspicion." But this is not all. Long before Sir Harvey Adamson spoke in the Legislative Council, eminent men, past administrators like Sir Frederick Halliday, Sir John Peter Grant, Sir Bartle Frere, Sir Cecil Beadon and Sir Barnes Peacock, all joined in condemning this system. Again, in 1899, a memorial was presented to the Secretary of State for India urging the separation of the two functions and signed by such eminent jurists as Lord Hobhouse, Sir Richard Couch, Sir Richard Garth, Sir John Phear and Sir William Markby and many others equally distinguished. It is therefore a perfect waste of time for anybody to go into details and to convince anyone in this Council that there is much room for reform. Nobody disputes that proposition, and if any one were to discuss the defects of the present system he would only be trying to preach to the converted. The whole point is this: granting that there is room for improvement, what are the practical steps which ought to be taken in order to give effect to this much-needed reform. It is true that two schemes have been put forward, one by the late Mr. R. C. Dutt, as late as 1893, and another which was recently put forward by the Hon'ble Mr. P. C. Mitter. Now, as I understand the situation, it seems to me that both these systems require to be examined and perhaps also revised in certain respects before they can be accepted as a sort of reform of the system of administration of justice in this country. I will make my point clear by going a little into the details in this respect. It was one of the two arguments in favour of the separation of judicial and executive functions when we used to say that the District Magistrate, as the head of the police, used in some mysterious way to influence the judgments of the Deputy Magistrate. Now, every one knows that the District Magistrates at the present moment have got very little to do with the police. The Police service is now a close service, and from the Inspector-General of Police downwards to the very constable they are a complete set of public officers who have practically nothing to do with the District Magistrates. It is true that in former times even appeals from orders passed by the Superintendents of Police had to go up to the District Magistrates and through the District Magistrates to the Commissioners of Divisions. But to argue at the present moment that the District Magistrates influence the decision of Deputy Magistrates is an argument which will not bear careful scrutiny. Then it is sometimes said that the District Magistrates in some mysterious way influence the decisions of Deputy Magistrates. That is what I have heard, but I can say from personal experience that I have never myself come across a single instance of this character. Secondly, it must be admitted that in carrying out this reform some amount of money will have to be spent. The question of cost comes in. It may be or it may not be very costly. A scheme may be put forward which might represent the minimum of cost, but if there be some schemes or if there is more than one scheme, all the schemes will have to be considered, before one can say that a particular scheme will not only meet the requirements of the situation, but will also entail the minimum cost to the public purse. It therefore seems to me that a sort of committee might be appointed to consider the schemes which have already been put forward or which might be put forward and to see which is the scheme which will bring about the much-needed reform without throwing any great burden on the public purse. At the present moment we are very much pressed for funds, and it would be extremely undesirable to thrust upon the Government a measure of reform, which although very necessary, would cost the public exchequer a sum of money which will be somewhat appalling. I therefore suggest that a committee be appointed—

The PRESIDENT: There is no such matter before the Council. There is no resolution or amendment to cover it.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: My resolution says that steps be taken, and I submit that in recommending steps that should be taken it is quite open to me to suggest the form the steps should take. I am suggesting that in taking the steps for the separation of judicial and executive functions, Government might, as a first step, appoint a committee to consider what scheme would be suitable. It may be a suggestion, which might be considered along with other suggestions that might be put forward. It is true that I have not put forward this as a substantial resolution, but I say this in supporting the resolution. I do not think that I will be justified in taking up the time of the Council by going over the ground which has been covered by the previous speakers. With these few words I commend my resolution to the acceptance of this Council.

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): The subject of these resolutions, as has been mentioned by more than one speaker this afternoon, is one of great antiquity, and upon no subject of Indian administration, perhaps, has more ink been expended and more eloquence displayed. If I rise at this stage of the debate to explain in what light these resolutions are viewed by Government, it is with some hope of curtailing further additions to the mass of literature which already exists in connection with this question. The extent of this written matter will to some degree be realised if I draw the attention of the Council to these two books. These are two bound volumes compiled in 1908, merely comprising the most important papers as regards Bengal, and they date from 1833 downwards. It is worthwhile recalling to the Council that, whereas these judicial and executive functions of the District Officer were joined up till 1836, they were actually separated shortly after that year, until the year 1859, when they were again united, separation having then once been tried, though ultimately the joint system was preferred.

In mentioning this ancient history the Council will no doubt be glad to hear that I do not intend to go back to the days of Hindu antiquity or even to the early days of the Company, and if I briefly mention the modern history of the subject it is in order that the Council may appreciate the general trend of the views expressed from time to time, and the circumstances in which this question has been held in abeyance. The Government has been so long in arriving at a decision upon it. The modern history, so to speak, of this question may be said to date from 1899, when a very influential memorial, signed among others by Lord Hobhouse and Mr. Wedderburn, was presented to the Secretary of State and sent out for enquiry to this country. That memorial was based very largely on the writings of an eminent Bengali, Mr. Monmoha Ghose, and it was supported among others by the able pen of Mr. R. C. Dutt. It was exhaustively examined by the Bengal Government among others, and as an impression has been sought to be given this afternoon that there is absolutely nothing to be said on the other side, it is worth while mentioning that the local Government came to the conclusion that "in the interests of good government, i.e., of general administrative expediency, the union of executive and judicial functions in district and subdivisional officers was at the present day essential." That was their opinion. I do not say whether it was right or wrong, but it was the opinion of many experienced administrators at that time. That was in 1901. The matter went up before the Government of India, no doubt along with voluminous reports from other provinces, and I think that it was Lord Curzon, who, on one occasion, referred to the literature on the subject as filling a fair sized room and as having taxed even his great energies to grapple with it. The matter passed in discussion and the variety of views was great.

The next landmark was Sir Harvey Adamson's speech of 1908, when he said that the Government of India were prepared to make a cautious and tentative advance in the direction of separation, but one aspect of that pronouncement is not without its relevancy to our discussion to-day, as it emphasises the possible danger of committing ourselves to a line of policy and then enquiring afterwards what it entails in carrying it out. After Sir Harvey Adamson made this announcement references were again made to local Governments. In Bengal at that time Sir Andrew Fraser was Lieutenant-Governor, and he frankly recommended that the whole scheme be dropped. Sir Edward Baker, who succeeded him, was on the other hand in favour of Sir Harvey Adamson's scheme in the framing of which, as a Member of the Government of India, I think it is a fairly open secret that he had had a considerable hand. But while he was in favour of the scheme, he proposed that it should be deferred in view of the political situation at the moment. Those were the days when the province of Bengal was divided, and in Eastern Bengal Sir Lancelot Hare, while complying with the request of the Government of India to work out an estimate of cost, stated definitely that he did not agree that there were adequate grounds for making the change. All these replies went up about the year 1908-09, and the ensued correspondence between the Government of India and the Secretary of State, leading to further enquiry of local Government, in 1911-12 as to certain details of the scheme. That was replied to in the same year, and the matter again came before the Government of India. But at that time, however, other opinions were making themselves felt, and there were considerable differences as to the merits of Sir Harvey Adamson's proposals. In fact they had by that time been subjected to the examination which from some points of view had better have preceded the definite pronouncement, and the case again went home to the Secretary of State, after which the war broke out and the whole thing was held in abeyance. Up till then the question had been regarded as an all-India one, but subsequent to the creation of the Reformed Councils, as members are aware, it was raised at Delhi the other day, when Sir William Vincent expressed the opinion that it need no longer be treated on uniform lines throughout India, but that each province might consider it for itself, while the Government of India would be prepared to examine and consider any recommendation submitted to them. That being, in brief, the modern history, it is not surprising that the question should be ventilated now in this Council, though I share the opinion of Mr. A. C. Dutt in regretting that this debate has come at the fag-end of a somewhat protracted session.

What are the arguments in a nutshell on either side? In favour of separation we have those who assert that in so far as the District Magistrate and Collector is, in the last resort, the head of the police, in so far as he supervises the work of the subordinate magistracy and hears appeals from those of the second and third class, in so far as he possesses the power of himself hearing cases while responsible for the peace of the district, and in so far as the enforcement of what are known as the preventive sections of the Criminal Procedure Code is subject to his control, to all that extent the course of justice is liable to be deflected by the subordinate magistracy. The theory is singularly uncomplimentary to the subordinate magistracy, but it is that, looking to the position of the District Magistrate, they are liable to be influenced in the direction of conviction. It is for some reason always supposed that the District Magistrate is a tiger for conviction, and that owing to his influence, many innocent men, to adopt the classical phrase, "now rot in jail." The figures, of course, do not entirely bear this out, when we realise that the percentage of convictions before the magistracy is roughly in the neighbourhood of 50 per cent. only. If it is a fact that more than 50 per cent. of the people put up before the magistrates are innocent, the amusement of bringing false cases against one's neighbours must prevail in this country to an extent which I hesitate to believe to be true.

However, that is the argument, in brief, for separation.

On the other side, opinions have been held by many experienced administrators—distinguished names can be claimed on either side—that, in fact, the course of justice is not impeded; that whatever scandals may be adduced might equally be adduced under any system, and that looking to the conditions of Indian administration in the mufassal, it does make for better administration and for better peace and order in the districts that there should be one officer in whom ultimate control of the two sides of administration is centralised, he being responsible for the peace of the district. That, in brief, is the argument of those who deprecate change; while they urge the further objection that to make the change would entail a dislocation of the present system, the results of which it is somewhat difficult to foresee, as also expenditure on a very considerable scale.

These are the arguments very shortly, on either side, and I do not now pronounce upon them. The essential theory underlying the request for the separation of judicial and executive functions is that magisterial authority should not be subject to interference and control by executive authority, and that theory is one, which, I may say at once, the local Government frankly and freely admit. It is obviously a correct theory; but while admitting that much, the issue which I would like to place before the Council this afternoon, is what are the practical steps that this Council would propose to take in order to give effect to that theory, and what will they cost?

We have had various schemes of separation, the leading ones of which have been mentioned to-day, though not much detail has been given of the various respects in which they differ conspicuously amongst themselves. We have the scheme of 1893 of Mr. Romesh Chunder Dutt, which certainly purported to be, and I think was described by him as, very simple. He argued that "Here is the Collector and District Magistrate; under him are certain deputies and sub-deputies performing magisterial and executive functions respectively. Perfectly simple; cut them in half; put the magisterial under the Judge, and the executive under the Collector, and you have separation at practically no additional cost." That was his simple scheme, but when it came to be examined by the local Government in 1901, it was found to overlook many essential details, and was estimated to cost something like Rs. 15 lakhs recurring, plus 4 lakhs initial.

Then we came to the scheme of Sir Harvey Adamson in 1908. His scheme was an improvement on Mr. Dutt's. He said, in brief, "Let us have in each district an executive officer or district officer, and entrust him with all executive functions. Alongside of him let us have a senior magisterial officer, to be known, possibly, as the chief magistrate, who will supervise magisterial work and take over the judicial functions of the district magistrate other than the preventive sections of the Criminal Procedure Code"—rather an important exception. In subdivisions Sir Harvey Adamson outlined a very complicated plan for having separate boundaries for judicial and executive subdivisions, the idea being that the ordinary subdivisional revenue work would not be sufficient for a full-time executive officer who would have to be given a larger charge than his magisterial counterpart. That was the skeleton of this plan, and it will be observed that it is very different from Mr. Dutt's. But when it came to be examined as to cost, some rather startling figures emerged. Sir Edward Baker had an estimate framed as regards the introduction of this system in the districts of the 24-Parganas, Nadia, Murshidabad, Hooghly and Howrah, and I would draw the attention of the Council to the fact that, except the 24-Parganas none of these districts are equal in size to the larger districts in Bengal. But it was estimated that in buildings alone in these five districts, the cost would be about Rs. 1,80,000. On his own showing nearly Rs. 1,90,000 was recurring and Rs. 1,80,000 non-recurring. There is a tendency to insinuate that Government exaggerates the cost of any scheme in order to put off the execution of what they do not like, and it is worth remembering that these estimates were given by Sir Edward Baker, who was a strong advocate of separation and at the same time an experienced financier. For the districts of Dacca and Pabna in Eastern Bengal, which Sir Lancelot Hare suggested for the experiment there was a capital of Rs. 2,92,000 and Rs. 2,08,000 initial, while he added that he put the capital cost to the province at Rs. 23 lakhs and recurring cost Rs. 15 lakhs. A warning was added that these figures might, in practice, be found to be lower than the actuals.

The third scheme is that of Mr. Mitter, which again differs materially from either of its predecessors. It is comprised in this small book which members have doubtless seen. Mr. Mitter's scheme was in some way of a more far-reaching character. He wanted to put the magistracy under the Judge, but the distinctive part of his plan was the creation of a specially-recruited judicial service which was to undertake both civil and criminal work, and he was prepared to entrust the preventive sections of the Criminal Procedure Code even, if necessary, to a subordinate judge. Like Mr. Dutt, he claimed that his scheme could be introduced without extra cost, but although his scheme was never examined in the same detail as that of Mr. Dutt, I cannot but fear that if it had been subjected to the same process the opinions as to the expenditure involved would have been equally unfavourable.

That then being the position, that we have a long series of arguments on either side fairly evenly balanced; that we have had various schemes differing materially among themselves in their nature, and, more important, in their cost, what would be the prudent course for this Council to take to-day? I submit that the proper course is not to commit ourselves to a hurried vote for the immediate separation of judicial and executive functions, either accompanied or unaccompanied by the details which are mentioned in some of the amendments put forward, but to initiate such enquiries as will enable the matter to be considered hereafter in the light of something more definite, more authoritative, in the nature of a scheme than anything which has yet been laid before the public. That is the course which I commend to the Council, and if it commends itself to the Council, it is the course which Government would be prepared to take. We have no wish to start another inquiry as to everybody's views on the theoretical merits. The literature on that subject is already more than ample. No doubt these opinions will have to be considered, and sooner or later judged, but almost all that can be said on that aspect of the subject has been said. What we want to get at is more definite. To what extent is there, in fact, an actual combination of functions at the present time, and by what means could separation be effected, and at what cost? In other words, we want an authoritative pronouncement of experienced men as to how separation could be carried out, assuming it to be decided upon. How would they propose to ensure the adequate supervision of magisterial work, the proper training of the magistracy and the efficient disposal of business on both sides? What will it all mean in officers, buildings and establishment? Given that information we should be in a position to deal with the matter far more satisfactorily than is the case at present.

That, Sir, is the line of action that I propose. The sort of committee that I should like to see is one of weight and experience. I should like to see it presided over by a High Court Judge; I should like to see on it an executive officer of experience, a representative of the Bar and a representative of the general public. I believe if such a committee were appointed it would put an end to much of the uncertainty that at present surrounds the discussions of this subject, and they could tell us what, if separation is desired, the province must be prepared to undertake and finance. The suggestion is closely akin to that of Mr. A. C. Dutt and Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq, and I put it to the Council that they would be wise to accept it.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: After the exhaustive manner in which the Hon'ble Member has put the history of the case, I do not think it is necessary to go into details, but I should like to point out one thing.

The resolution that has been moved by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri discussed mainly the principles of the separation of the two services. If that principle is accepted by Government, then the question of working out the details may very easily be taken up by any committee, the nature of which has been suggested by Sir Henry Wheeler. What we want this Council to do is to decide that this principle of the separation of the executive and judicial functions must be accepted by Government, and that, without delay. The details may be worked out by any committee.

My friend, Mr. D. C. Ghose, has said that this question has been discussed by agitators and experienced administrators for years without number. I do not know what he means by the word agitators; if he means all who are not experienced administrators, I may tell him that I am proud to belong to that band of agitators who have been agitating for this reform. The question of prestige has also been raised. Prestige is a very good thing, but there is a limit beyond which prestige ought not to be pushed. We have noticed that in the administration of the country, the cry of prestige has been raised in several matters, which have gone to the detriment of the country. It is all very well to talk of prestige in every case, but it goes against the sense of the country to make a fetish of prestige. Let us do away with that fetish.

Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq has quoted from the speech of Sir Harvey Adamson. I would like to quote one more sentence from that speech, which shows that an experienced administrator like him has also found the defects of the present system in the administration of justice. He has said: "there is the unconscious bias in favour of a conviction entertained by the Magistrate who is responsible for the peace of his district or by the Magistrate who is subordinate to that District Magistrate." Even this bias towards conviction is unjust and is detrimental to the best interests of the country.

We know, Sir, that the District Magistrate has to send in a confidential report about the work of the Deputy Magistrates; is it any wonder, knowing about these confidential reports, that these Deputy Magistrates, when they sit in judgment in cases where the police or the Magistrate takes some interest, are afraid not to convict, when these confidential reports on their work are hanging like the sword of Damocles over their heads, and they cannot, therefore, with the best intentions, do justice to justice.

Sir Henry Wheeler has given statistical records showing how very few convictions have been made by Deputy Magistrates. It is not a question of statistics; if there is one case of injustice, if there is a feeling in the country that the Magistrate is capable, by the powers given to him, of doing an act of injustice, that act of injustice, or a suspicion of his capability of doing an act of injustice, strikes the whispering multitudes of the country, who naturally lose all feeling of love and respect for the Government, which allows that sort of injustice to be done.

It has been said, Sir, times without number, that a new era has come before the country. His Excellency, the new Governor General, said in his memorable reply to the Bombay Municipality in words which ought to be written in letters of gold:—"Justice and sympathy never failed to evoke responsive chords in the hearts of men of whatever race, creed or class. They are the two brightest gems in any diadem. Without them, there is no lustre in a crown. With them, there is a radiance which never fails to attach loyalty and affection." Above all these, are his words: "Justice must be regardless of distinctions and rigorously impartial." Then he continues: "I am convinced that all who are associated in the Government and administration of Indian affairs will strive their utmost to maintain this reputation at its highest standard."

After these words, can any member of the Government refuse to accept this proposition which will not only secure pure justice, but, to insure that justice, like Caesar's wife, may be above suspicion. With these words, I support the motion.

Rai PYARI LAL DOSS Bahadur: The question of the separation of judicial and executive functions has been agitating the public mind since a very long time; its origin dates far back into the early part of the last century, when the strange union of the two functions, the thief-catcher and Judge was severely criticised. It attracted considerable public attention when the dangers resulting from the combination of the two functions were brought to light, by the late Mr. Monmohan Ghose, a renowned Barrister of the Calcutta Bar, whose name, as a genuine patriot, and a true benefactor, has become a household word in Bengal. The extent and gravity of the mischief have been well illustrated in a series of sensational cases wherein Mr. Ghose appeared as counsel for the defence in which the hand of the police in guiding the Magistrate, sitting in judgment, was exposed in its nakedness. This was in the 'eighties of the last century. Later on, on 1st July, 1899, a memorial was submitted to the Secretary of State for India, by the Right Hon'ble Lord Hobhouse, K.C.S.I., Right Hon'ble Sir Richard Garth, Q.C., Right Hon'ble Sir Richard Couch, Sir Charles Sargent, Sir William Markby, K.C.I.E., Sir John Budd Phear, Sir John Scott, K.C.M.G., Sir W. Wedderburn, BART., M.P., Sir Roland K. Wilson, BART., and Mr. Herbert J. Reynolds, C.S.I., for preparation of a scheme for complete separation of judicial and executive functions and for report upon this urgently pressing question, at an early date. The Secretary of State forwarded this memorial to the Government of India, but no scheme prepared by the Government of India has seen the light of day.

This is ancient history. In the modern history, we find that in 1908, the Hon'ble Sir Harvey Adamson, the then Finance Member of the Viceroy's Council, while replying on the Budget debate, admitted the principle of separation and said: "that on these grounds, the Government of India have decided to advance cautiously and tentatively towards the separation of judicial and executive functions, in those parts of India, where the local conditions render that change possible and appropriate."

The question was again discussed in March, 1913, in the Viceroy's Council. Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea (then Mr. Banerjea), from his seat in the Viceroy's Council, moved a resolution for grant to the local Government for carrying out the scheme for separation of judicial and executive functions. The motion was lost, all Indian members voting for, and the European members against, it. A very sad exhibition of co-operation between the two communities!

Lastly, the question was discussed in the Council of State at Delhi, only the other day, when the Hon'ble Mr. Bhugri, moved the resolution, namely, that early steps be taken to accomplish the severance of judicial from executive functions almost immediately. There was a full dress debate, when the Hon'ble Home Member, Sir William Vincent, said, towards the close of his speech, that the matter was a provincial one, and assured the House that if any local Government decided to take up the question of separating the judicial from the executive functions, the matter was one for them and the Government of India would raise no objection. This is, in short, the history of the question; but it is strange—surpassingly strange—that after a century's agitation and cogitation, it is in the same embryonic condition in which it was at the time of the earliest agitation.

The question has been discussed threadbare, in the press and in public meetings, and every year at the sittings of the Indian National Congress and the Provincial Conferences, and the Indian public mind is unanimous upon the point that the combination of judicial with executive duties in the same officer, violates the first principles of equity and that the existing system produces actual miscarriages of justice, and creates opportunities of suspicions, distrust and discontent, which are greatly to be deplored. It may be, Sir, that additional expenditure may be required to be borne for introducing this reform; but I may say, in the words of Sir Harvey Adamson, "that the experiment may be a costly one, but we think, the object is a worthy one." I go further and say that no expenditure is too large for the introduction of a reform of such vital importance to the public. The present Reforms have been condemned by a section of the public as "disappointing," and to disprove it, it is the imperative duty of us all to pass the present resolution and give a notable proof that the Reforms are not mere shams, but give large powers to the people, in the administration of the country.

Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY: I beg to move that the question be now put.

On the motion that the question be now put, being put, Dr. Jatindra Nath Maitra asked for a division.

Mr. H. S. SUHRAWARDY: I beg to withdraw the motion that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: You cannot do it now.

A division was then taken.

The Ayes being 38 and the Noes 52, the motion was lost.

The PRESIDENT: The discussion will now continue, and I call upon Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta to speak.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: To speak on a resolution after a motion for closure has been put, is rather inopportune, because the motion for closure shows that a section of this Council was for stopping further debate. However, considering the importance of the matter, I think it my duty to take part in the discussion. I have been a close student of this question for about 30 years; and apart from the study of the mass of literature on the subject—I think I have a good deal of experience of magistrates' courts in the mufassal—to contribute something to that voluminous literature; but I have always been under the impression that the question has now only a sort of academic interest, because the principle has in a manner been accepted by the high and the low, by the Government and the people; and the demand for the actual separation has been insistent and persistent. Nevertheless, on some plea or some pretext or other, the actual separation or the carrying out of the reform has up till now been postponed. Now, I think the time is quite ripe for taking up the question in right earnest. It did strike me that an important resolution like this should not have been brought at the fag-end of the session; and my idea was that the Government should have been informally approached and in the meantime, a practical scheme adapted to the circumstances of the province and also adapted to the times, because all the old schemes referred to decades gone by, should have been submitted in order to induce the Government to give immediate effect to such a scheme. I would then have asked some of my friends to withdraw the resolutions and to bring up the question at the next session. However, that has not been done and the question has now been put before the Council. It seems to me—of course I take, some pride in having been a close student of this question—that the question of cost should not be brushed aside as some eminent men did in the past; and I find that the question of cost did not strike me to be so very frightful as to scare us all away from the reform altogether. Coming to the lowest unit of administration, we go to the subdivision; there is some difficulty in the subdivision, as in some of the subdivisions there is one Subdivisional Officer, who exercises magisterial powers and also certain executive powers, and there is no other Magistrate, though there may be an honorary bench or some Sub-Deputy Magistrates. Supposing that there be a separation of the functions in these subdivisions—and I put it very briefly—it will be necessary to place a full-fledged Deputy Magistrate with first class powers to dispose of the criminal cases, if the Subdivisional Officer is to be relieved of his magisterial functions. So, that would involve some cost. Then, again, there are certain districts where we have not got Additional Magistrates. It is said that in some of the districts, the District Officers have now been relieved of their judicial duties, because there are Additional Magistrates who perform the judicial functions. Now, as a matter of fact, every district has not got an Additional Magistrate. Supposing a separation is to be effected now, it will then be necessary to have an Additional Magistrate or an officer corresponding in status, to such a Magistrate in every district and that would indeed involve some cost. There is no question that to give effect to the principle of separation, some additional cost shall have to be incurred. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has given us figures collected by some of the administrators in the past. Their estimates may or may not be correct; and we cannot go upon these estimates for this reason, that in many cases we have increased the staff of officers or in others we might have shortened the staff of officers. So the whole question has to be gone into, anew.

The proposal of Sir Henry Wheeler with regard to the formation of a committee to consider the question of costs, seems to me to be very reasonable and very practical, provided, of course, like other committees its formation be not put off till Doomsday and the consideration of the report is not put off till the Greek Kalends. Under these circumstances, I think it would be proper if I take it that the principle in a manner has been accepted by the Government, and if the principle is accepted, that a committee be formed to consider a practical scheme of separation. The committee may inform us about the financial aspect of the question, which is a most important aspect now, in view of our financial position. We have been throughout the session debating the Budget and we have been pressing for retrenchments; we have refused many grants and our deficits are very great; and it is quite on the cards, that in the next session we may be called upon to devise ways and means for making up the deficit either by fresh taxation or by fresh loans or by other means. In such circumstances the formation of a committee to go into the question of cost—that is to say, at what minimum cost this much desired and long-deferred reform can be effected—is very desirable, and I think the Council should accept the suggestion thrown out by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler.

Mr. SYED NASIM ALI: I rise to support the resolution moved by Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri. I have heard very carefully the suggestions of the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, but unfortunately I could not understand what his suggestions really amounted to. Does the Hon'ble Member suggest that the resolution as it stands in the name of Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri is accepted by the Government, or does he suggest that this matter should altogether be dropped out for the present? If the suggestion amounts to this, that in view of the fact that there are well-balanced arguments—to quote the language of Sir Henry Wheeler—on both sides and that it would involve a great amount of cost, the question need not be discussed now and the resolution need not be passed, certainly, I, for my part, am not quite in a position to accept the suggestion. Sir Henry Wheeler had to admit that the principle must be theoretically accepted; and though Sir Henry Wheeler said that the arguments on both sides were evenly balanced, I think it would not be out of place if I state before the Council one or two facts which would at once convince the members of this Council that the arguments are entirely one-sided and not evenly balanced. The arguments that are generally advanced in favour of the present system of the administration of criminal justice are that if there be a separation of judicial and executive functions, then the prestige of the District Officers will be reduced, and that as the sense that society suffers from failure of punishment of the offenders has not been yet completely developed in oriental countries, it is essentially desirable that there should not be any diminution in the prestige of the District Officers. It has been said that the prestige of the District Magistrate consists in the fact that the people in the district know that the person who is the head of the executive has also the power to punish the offenders, and the prestige of the District Officer consists in his power to punish the offenders. Now, for myself, I am unable to follow this argument, for the reason that if the prestige of a particular officer depends upon his power to inflict punishment, then I think our Viceroy must be taken as to have no prestige at all, because we all know that the Viceroy has not got any power to inflict any punishment. No doubt the Sessions Judge has got the power to sentence a man to death, to commit a person to transportation for life, but certainly the Viceroy has not got that power, and that does not mean that the prestige of the Sessions Judge is greater than that of the Viceroy. Therefore, there is absolutely no force in the argument that unless there be this corresponding power in the District Magistrate to inflict punishment upon the offenders, he would not have the corresponding prestige in the district.

Then, the other argument that is always advanced in favour of the present system of administration is that in Bengal, or at least in India, it is sometimes said that the people are not so anxious to bring the offenders to justice and that the moral ideas of the people of the country are not yet so advanced that they would help in the punishment of the offenders; and therefore the people of the province are in such a backward condition that there must be a corresponding concentration of power in the District Magistrate, in one and the same person; that is the argument which is advanced. Now, we all know that the Reforms Act has been passed on the assumption that the people are now fit, at least to a certain extent, to help in the administration of their own country; and that also assumes that we are not so backward as some people would call us in their speeches. If that is so, that argument has at present no force.

Then comes the question of costs, with regard to which Sir Henry Wheeler has given us certain figures. He has said that certain estimates have been prepared to give effect to the separation of judicial and executive, but he has not said whether, in view of the importance of this particular measure, such expenditure is justified or not. We have not heard from Sir Henry Wheeler whether the Council would not be in a position at the present stage to supply money or at least to suggest means for finding out the money, if really it is a measure which must be given effect to at once. As Mr. D. C. Ghose has pointed out, if the Council passes the resolution that early steps should be taken for the separation of the judicial from the executive, it is the look-out of the Council to find out money and as to how the scheme is to be given effect to. When the mover brought this resolution before the Council, he knew that there would be some difficulty in procuring the money, but at the same time he knew that it was for the Council to decide and for the Council to find out whether they could provide money for the particular purpose. We have been able to provide money for urgent and important measures, and if it is once conceded that it is a measure which is long overdue and which must be accepted at once, I think no pains would be spared to find out money for giving effect to this particular scheme at once.

It has been suggested that a committee must be formed to formulate a scheme, to elaborate a scheme as to how this separation of judicial and executive can be effected. Certainly that will be one of the means of effecting the partition, but that would not, and that ought not to, prevent us from passing this resolution, because the language of the resolution is quite wide enough to include such things. The resolution says: "This Council recommends to the Government that early steps be taken for the total separation of the judicial from the executive functions in the administration of this Presidency." This early step may be the formation of a committee; that may be the initial step; and what is desired is that not only one step, but all the steps should be taken and taken early. If we simply say, and if we simply remain satisfied with this, that a scheme should be elaborated or that early steps should be taken to elaborate a scheme, certainly we restrict our resolution simply to the theoretical portion, namely, to the framing out of a scheme, but nothing is said in the resolution about giving effect to that pious wish. Therefore to me it seems that the suggestion of Sir Henry Wheeler is included in this resolution, and the resolution goes further than the suggestion of Sir Henry Wheeler. In that view what I would submit is that, as on principle nothing can be said against it, the resolution, as it is, ought to be accepted. As regards the amendments, different members have suggested different schemes. And, as the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler stated, the question is a difficult and intricate one and it is desirable that a committee should be appointed to sift all these things and to arrive at a practical solution of the question, I think the suggestion of the Hon'ble Member in charge should be accepted, and in that view, so far as the principal resolution is concerned, it also should be accepted, as the principle is accepted, and that effect should be given to it at once.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I do not think there would have been any difficulty about our accepting the suggestion of the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, if he had been pleased to accept the principle of the motion and then to suggest that there should be a committee for working out a scheme. As he is not prepared to do that let this resolution be accepted now; but, so far as the details are concerned, we cannot discuss them here as to whether a Deputy Magistrate should be placed under a Judge or that half of the Deputy Magistrates should be placed under the Collector and the other half under the Judge. That should certainly have to be decided by a committee. That is the right position and I would bow to such a decision, but instead of that, I find that the Government is not prepared to accept the situation and therefore it is our bounden duty to carry this resolution first and then to try to have a committee afterwards presided over by a High Court Judge, say, the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Greaves or some such other Judge. If that is not going to be accepted, then it would be our bounden duty to pass this resolution. Otherwise, if a committee is allowed to sit now for discussing this question, it would take years and years, probably 30 or 40 years more, to arrive at a decision; for this much is certain that the Government of Bengal is opposed to the very idea of separation. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has traced the history of the matter from 1836 onwards. That alone shows what regard is paid to public opinion in this country. It declares in most eloquent terms what a scant regard is paid by the Government to a long and consistent flow of public opinion. Then, it has been said by Sir Henry Wheeler that so far as the modern history of the movement is concerned, in 1901, Lord Hobhouse, Sir William Wedderburn and others, and big Judges like Sir Richard Couch and Sir Richard Garth reported in favour of the abolition of the system, and we find that the Government tersely said at that time that the "united system was at present essential." That had a bureaucratic twang about it. Whatever you choose to say, whether you are Judges of the High Court or the Chief Justice of the High Court, or other eminent persons, we, the people of the Civil Service, are determined to continue this united system for ever. That is the whole story. That is the long and short of it. And I think that if we only resolve to have a committee, as suggested by Sir Henry Wheeler, and nothing more, then it would go on for years and years to no useful purpose. That will be mere shelving of the question, and, as such, that will not do. If we have the power we must pass this resolution at once. We must insist upon the Government effecting a separation. If we have to go to the Government of India for it, we should do so. The Lord Chief Justice of England has now come as our Viceroy, and if ever there was a time when we should insist upon the question of a separation between the executive and the judicial being taken up, it is now, when the Lord Chief Justice of England has come out as Viceroy. We are sure to have a sympathetic solution of the question from him. But if we unfortunately find in him a person who is not willing to lend a sympathetic ear to our prayer, then we shall know that the air of the Red Sea has changed his character. Therefore, as I say, this is the time to pass the resolution, and if we fail here, we should go to the Government of India. And if the Viceroy does not do anything, we should take further steps, though I do not at present know what further steps we should take.

Then as regards the merits of the question. I think it is an insult to the intelligence of the House to say anything on the merits of this question now. Mere civilisation wants this—civilization demands that there should be a separation between the executive and the judicial. It is but right to say that this system is a part of the bureaucratic Government who fear that there should be no izzat for the District Officer if a separation is effected. As some District Officer told me they must have control over everything, i.e., they must be the lords of all they survey. That is why Sir Henry Wheeler wanted to support the existing system. And the arguments which he put forward had nothing new in them.

There is another aspect of the question on which I want to say something, as it has not been pressed before this House. A very great reason—perhaps the strongest reason for effecting a change—is that you would make your police honest by making your magistracy independent of the police. There are very few Civilians who do understand this. I have passed years dealing with cases about the police and the magistracy, and I can assure this House that, if the people once know that there is a trying Magistrate who is an insaf karna walla and who is going to do justice, irrespective of whatever the police might say, then the dishonest element in the police will not be there at all. The Deputy Magistrate trembles at the frowns of the Superintendent of Police. What is he to do? The Superintendent and the District Magistrate are practically one and the same, so far as their interests are concerned. Everybody knows that. But nobody repeats it.

Every endeavour is made to shut it out. The whole country knows this and it is useless to try to disguise it. The fact is, that if you want to make the police honest, you must effect this radical change. An addition of Rs. 50 or Rs. 100 to the pay of the darogas will not make them honest. I can assure my hon'ble friends that a daroga of a big thana like Canning Town earns, sometimes, about Rs. 2,000 a month. I say this from my position here and I take the fullest responsibility for saying this. I am prepared to prove everything up to the hilt, and I challenge contradiction. Why is it so? Because people verily believe that as the judgment of the Magistrate is most likely to uphold the police view, they had better invest a good amount in securing the police on their side. Money is not cheap. People do not pay the police for nothing. They pay because they know that in the long run it would be to their advantage to pay to the police. That is the whole situation, and therefore if you want to make the police less corrupt, I will ask the higher servants of the Government here to see that the magistracy is relieved from police control. Remove the root-cause and the result will melt away. That is absolutely certain. Do not lay the flattering unction to your soul, that by an addition of pay you will make the police honest, when it is an open secret that many of them often earn Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 2,000 a month. Therefore, in your persistency for preserving your prestige, you are in a manner perpetuating this corruption in the police by keeping the magistracy under the control of the police. I was perfectly surprised to read in this morning's newspaper that the Chief Presidency Magistrate on an application for reducing the amount of bail said something to this effect: "I cannot do anything unless I consult so and so in charge of that police case." If you cannot do anything without first consulting that police officer, then why are you there at all? Why should an application be made before you? That shows how unhealthy the system is. It has run on in such a vicious line that even the Chief Presidency Magistrate sitting in a place like Calcutta hesitates to pass an order without first—not hearing but—consulting the police. Therefore, if you want to make the police less corrupt, then by all means introduce this change; if you want to make them less corrupt, you must strike at the very foundation of the mischief. No amount of tinkering will do. No amount of residential houses for the police will do. Do not shut your eyes to it. If you do shut your eyes you will simply encourage them.

The PRESIDENT: You are not to address the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, but you are to address the chair.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I was addressing the President and not Sir Henry Wheeler, and the Secretary is not the President here.

The PRESIDENT: You have no business to inquire what the Secretary was doing. He was only doing his duty.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: Your word is law here, Sir, I know.

One thing more and I am done. We have nothing to do in these days with the views of Sir John Shore. We need not quote ancient history. We need only the administration to justify itself. Has Sir Henry Wheeler been able to cite one single fact or to give one single reason to justify the present situation as to why this should be continued? In spite of the repeated opinions of congresses, conferences, meetings here and meetings in England of most respectable, educated and cultured men with special knowledge in this line, nothing has been done. What is the clear position now? Why? It is this, that the Government must perpetuate this evil because this evil helps them in their policy of the repression of the children of the soil. That is the whole underlying idea. We know it. Whatever may be said on the other side we are not prepared to accept it. All the arguments that have been put forward by Sir Henry Wheeler were bombarded long ago,—not by an humble man like myself—but by men in the position of Lord Hobhouse, Sir Richard Couch, Sir Richard Garth and other eminent persons like the late Mr Monmohan Ghose and Mr. R. C. Dutt who, in those days as things go, could have risen to the position of the Viceroy of India. All those theories have been bombarded and those arguments are nowhere now. And what is the argument for persisting on in this line? It is nothing but zid and prestige and nothing more. Sir, the time has come when the Government must change their methods,—the country is getting alive every day to the situation around. People are realising their position every day and we, the children of the soil, are realising every day that we have got at no distant date to be a self-respecting nation. The policy inaugurated by Sir John Shore, 150 years ago, and the opinion that the people of this country like to be governed by an autocrat—all these things are things of the past. They are hopeless anachronisms which are insults to our present-day ideals. If you do not treat us as we now want, you cannot expect this form of Government to last. And now as the Lord Chief Justice of England has come here as the Viceroy and now that the Reforms have been introduced, I ask the House to carry this resolution, as this is an eminently suitable opportunity. We can no longer believe on pledges that have been made nor rely on promises that were made to the ear and broken to the heart. We must support the motion now before us. We must work out our own salvation. We must do all that we can in this line. We must leave no stone unturned. Do not for one moment look to the bureaucratic Government for support, for their policy is such that they are bound to oppose it.

Kumar SHIB SHEKHARESWAR RAY: After what has fallen from previous speakers and a sort of assurance which Sir Henry Wheeler has given to us, I think I need not speak at length on the subject. What I want is that let the Member in charge accept the resolution in so many words. What he assures is surely covered by the resolution, and I do not understand what objection there can be in accepting it. Sir, let us resolve upon a speedy introduction of this reform. After we have once made up our minds sincerely, there would be schemes enough to select from and adopt and I am confident that ways and means would be found to give effect to the selected scheme.

The House knows very well how keen the demand is in the country for the separation of judicial and executive functions. As a member of the zamindar community, I can further add that the demand is keener from this community. Zamindars have to come in frequent contact with officials vested with both executive and judicial powers and the zamindars are perhaps the worst sufferers under the present system. We are so much at the mercy of the District Officers, simply because of the union of these two functions, that we have actually got to refrain from all movements which may have the remotest possibility of displeasing any of the executive officers. And, Sir, this is one of the reasons why the zamindars as a class have been brought down so low in public estimation. Whenever there is any public movement, if rightly or wrongly we do not join it, we are openly held up as cowards, and taunting remarks are made, "Oh, he is a zamindar, how can he do otherwise."

I beg of the House to realise our humiliating position and to help us to get out of this position and make us free men by introducing the much-needed reform as early as possible.

Maulvi RAFI UDDIN AHMED: I beg to support the resolution. The matter has already been dealt with at some length and there is very little left for me to speak on the subject. There never has been so popular a cry as this separation of the judicial from the executive functions of this administration of justice.

The PRESIDENT: Will you speak louder? I cannot hear you. You can come nearer if you like.

Maulvi RAFI UDDIN AHMED: Two things have been mentioned against this—one is prestige and the other is money. As to money, I beg to say that we have been asked during the Budget discussion to spend more than 11 crores of rupees on many matters, but in a matter like the separation of the judicial from the executive functions the money could not be found. When this is a necessity, money must be found out for this purpose. As to prestige, I would, like to say that it reminds me of a story of the frogs and the boys that, while it was play to the boys, it was death to the frogs. The question of prestige has nothing to do with this here. It may be the prestige to Government officers, but it is a life and death question*to us. So the question of prestige should not be allowed to prevail in this matter. Besides in the resolution and in Mr. Dutt's amendment, it is suggested that the Deputy Magistrate should be somewhat of a Munsif who would have to decide criminal cases. From our experience we find that the promotion of police officers more or less depends on convictions, and whenever police officers send up cases they take more personal interest in the cases than the complainants. They want conviction somehow or other. I know from my personal experience that these police officers are more or less bazar-sircars to the Magistrates, though this practice is now going to be given up. In case of an acquittal the investigating police officer has to submit an explanation to the higher officers, and is thus put to shame and humiliation. So they somehow or other want to please the Magistrate to secure conviction and the trying Magistrates pass convictions in many cases for fear of incurring the displeasure of the District Magistrate. Besides there is the magic wand in the hands of the Magistrates, i.e., summary procedure. It requires only three minutes to put a man into three months' imprisonment without recording any evidence. So if these powers are to be given to the Magistrates, lives will not be very safe. That is why it has been suggested that there should be a separation between executive and judicial functions. I have heard that British people are always very keen about justice and I know that they are dispensing that justice; and now I think it is high time that they should begin to do so more completely here than they have hitherto done. With the advent of our popular Viceroy, who was the Lord Chief Justice of England—

The PRESIDENT: That has been said several times and you need not repeat it.

Maulvi RAFI UDDIN AHMED: In Bengal, the premier province of India, this separation should begin at once, so that we may have even-handed justice.

Mr. F. A. LARMOUR: I am afraid that after the eloquence of previous speakers I feel rather like a lost soul struggling under the weight of adverse opinion for some way in which to put my thoughts into words. We have had authors and literature on India quoted to us. We have had Mr. R. C. Dutt and many of his sayings quoted. We have been told that he would have been fit to be Viceroy of India if he had been alive to-day. Sir, I had the honour of Mr. Dutt's acquaintance and I treasure the memory of much that took place between him and myself, but I must say that the opinions of Mr. Dutt varied on different occasions—it depended whether he spoke as District Officer, or afterwards as platform orator. In one case (on page 86 of his work, "Peasantry of Bengal"), speaking of the zamindars, he was particularly severe on them. Kumar Shib Shekhareswar Ray spoke of the good opinion that he earned from officers and people alike. Mr. Dutt speaking of the Bengal raiyat, wrote: "Poor Bengal raiyat! Hope for relief from a handful of alien rulers of the country, but from thine own countrymen don't." In many other ways Mr. Dutt supported the present system of Government. Those who have read two of his books, viz., "Peasantry of Bengal," and "Famines and Land Assessment in India," know that in speaking of the system of the executive and judicial functions Mr. Dutt said: "We do not know how far the employment of barristers and vakils by private parties in the superior courts served the purpose of justice." Speaking of the mufassal criminal courts he said that "there the procedure was very simple and, except perhaps in a few serious cases, the parties need not be represented at all."

I feel at the same time after all that I have heard that still I would like to say what I had all along intended to say on this question. I look at it first as a commercial man and view it from that standpoint. Two questions occur to me first, what is the cost, and second, is it necessary? In my notes I have dealt with the cost first, and therefore, I proceed on those lines. Almost every speaker who has spoken on any subject which has reference to our Budget expenditure has taken exception to certain items. We have been reminded that this is an adversity Budget; we have been told that expenses on the preservation of law and order must be cut down and that the crying needs of the country are sanitation, pure drinking water, a fight with malaria and the like; yet in the resolution now before the Council—a momentous question—we have no statistics of any kind to guide us. We are asked to support a scheme which so long ago as 1908 was estimated to cost as much as fifteen lakhs of rupees a year in Bengal alone. I shudder to think what the annual cost would be at the present time. I believe we may safely put it down at double that figure. Several speakers have warned the Government of any increase in taxation and my friend, Rai Radha Charan Pal Bahadur, sounded a note of warning in one of his many eloquent speeches in this Council by saying "he would be a bold man indeed who attempted to impose any increase in the taxation of the people." Here I see eye to eye with him, yet this question of the separation of the judicial and executive functions will certainly enormously increase the cost of Government. Increase of taxation provokes discontent, the country is constantly crying out against increase in taxation and one is naturally prompted to ask why add to the existing cost of Government by introducing changes, the benefit of which is more than doubtful, whilst the increase in cost is alone absolutely certain. We have no scheme before us to criticise. I shall therefore only make some observations in the proposed change of system, as in my opinion the results of the change would be to weaken the executive. A strong executive is vital to the interests of the commercial community a section of which I represent in this Council. It is said that the faults of the present system are manifested in the ordinary appellate divisional work of the higher judicial tribunals but, if in the face of an educated public, expert in law, and prone to litigation, the instances in which such faults have been brought into the courts are so few as to be practically negligible, it cannot be said that the system has failed. It has been argued that the people are quick ready to assert their rights against Government or its servants, that they seldom do so must be taken to show that these rights are not infringed under the present administration.

The objections to the present system are merely theoretical, and their applicability to it is extremely attenuated. Moreover, the law furnishes abundant safeguards to correct any miscarriage of justice that may occur. Any miscarriage is promptly brought to light. An illegal act done by an officer subjects him to liability to be sued for damages. Such safeguards are furnished by codes which have been repeatedly amended where actual experience has shown amendment to be necessary. To change the system and introduce a new one would be to establish a need for fresh experience and to wipe out a large amount of the experience gained through years of patient work and observation.

So far as my experience goes—and those whom I have consulted who are engaged in the commerce of this country agree with me—there is no demand among the people at large for any such change. It must not be forgotten that even in Bengal the educated class is vastly outnumbered by the illiterate; St. Nihal Singh in an article in the London magazine of April 1921, received here by last mail, puts it down at 9 to 1, and it has yet to be proved that the aspirations of the lawyer and student classes are shared by the people. On the other hand the present system is both effective and economical. It has stood the test of criticism and has not been damaged; this is because the system is popular. It must be remembered that it is not English, but racy of the soil; it is the ma bap system and has its roots deep down in the Oriental need of a personal rule. This may be primitive, but no convincing argument has been brought to show that it is inapplicable to even present-day conditions.

The last few years—in fact even the present time—have brought into strong relief the injury done by the repercussion of political ferment upon trade and industry. As a representative of commercial interests in the country I feel strongly that the best guarantee for the maintenance of law and order is a strong magistracy. It is essential that the powers and prestige of the District Magistrate should be preserved intact. I cannot but feel that the proposed change would lower his prestige and undermine his power. It is admitted that the District Magistrate actually disposes of only a few important cases, but it is in my opinion eminently desirable that they should remain vested with judicial authority in order that they may be free to deal judicially with any case arising in the district. Surely a District Magistrate may be trusted to deal impartially with the sort of case which arises in the mufassal.

A District Officer travelling through villages in his district is enabled to get in direct touch and intimate knowledge of the people, their wants and grievances. His business is to do justice amongst the people, protect them, and look to their welfare as a judge posted to the headquarters of a district could not possibly do. The introduction of purely English ideas without reference to their suitability is bound to prove disastrous. It is better to let any necessary reforms be developments of the existing system than to start a new system, simply for theoretical reasons based on English views and systems which have been developed under an entirely alien set of circumstances. The concentration of power works well in Indian States, where it is in vogue. The suggested change is advocated by persons who are not responsible for the maintenance of peace, and the present, to my thinking, is not the time for inaugurating changes of this character. The peace enjoyed in the Indian States is due to strong executives. Cow-killing riots such as have been experienced in Bombay, Calcutta and other parts of British India are not known in the States. Take Hyderabad for instance. Whatever may be the case in the other presidencies, in Bengal at least, where we have the permanent settlement, the revenue work is relatively unimportant. The police under the present system have a responsible officer at their head, and if the District Officer is merely to dispose of miscellaneous work it is useless to dispute that he will not stand out, as he now does, the representative of Government in the district. This would be no gain, but a decided loss. I would quote S. M. Mitra's admirable book, "Indian Problems," pages 229 to 258, where the arguments in favour of the present system are fully marshalled.

There may have been, in the past, a few cases of miscarriage of justice owing to the combination of the two functions in the same officer, but one has hardly ever heard of any such cases in recent years in Bengal, because new conditions have rendered its occurrence difficult, if not impossible. The fierce light of public opinion, the right of interpellation in the enlarged Council and the scathing criticism in the press have put an end to this. This costly scheme should not, therefore, be sanctioned for mere sentimental reasons.

Mr. D. C. CHOSE: I move that the question be now put.

The motion that the question be now put was put and agreed to.

The amendment (item No. 16 in the list of business) was then put.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I ask for a division.

At this stage the Council adjourned for 15 minutes.

The Council re-assembled at 6-25 P.M.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I ask what is the position which is now before the Council. •

The PRESIDENT: Mr. A. C. Dutt's amendment (item No. 16 in the list of business) was put and a division was asked for, and that the point on which the Council will now divide.

The result of the division was as follows:—

The Ayes being 14 and the Noes 59, the motion was lost.

Babu Kishori Mohan Chaudhuri's original motion was then put and agreed to.

Rai JOGENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: I beg leave to withdraw my motion (item No. 17 in the list of business), as I think it is no longer necessary.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I also beg leave to withdraw my amendment.

The motions withdrawn were as follows:—

Rai JOCENDRA CHUNDER CHOSE Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government that the separation of the judicial and the executive functions in the administration should be carried out without any delay, if possible, by dividing the members of the provincial service into two classes of Deputy Magistrates and Deputy Collectors, the former exercising only judicial powers in criminal cases and the appellate powers of the Magistrate being exercised by senior Deputy Magistrates from whom Assistant Sessions Judges and Sessions Judges should be partly recruited."

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA to move, by way of amendment to motion No. 17, "that the words 'and the appellate powers of the Magistrates being exercised by senior Deputy Magistrates from whom Assistant Sessions Judges and Sessions Judges should be partly recruited,' be omitted."

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: I beg to withdraw my motion with permission to bring it up in the next session in July.

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: The same prayer.

The motions were then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn with permission to bring it up in the next session in July. They were as follows:—

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: "This Council recommends to the Government that immediate steps be taken to give effect to the resolution carried in the Bengal Legislative Council on the 7th April, 1915, for the establishment of a City Civil Court in Calcutta."

Babu SURENDRA NATH RAY: "This Council recommends to the Government that early steps be taken to give effect to the resolution passed at a meeting of this Council for the establishment of a City Civil Court for Calcutta for the trial of suits up to Rs. 10,000 in value."

Non-official Chairmen.

Babu FANINDRALAL DE: "This Council recommends to the Government that they be pleased to direct that no official member of Local Boards in Bengal should stand for election as Chairman thereof."

Local self-government as a conscious process of administrative devolution and political evolution dates, outside Presidency towns, from the financial reforms of Lord Mayo's Government. Legislature affecting the province began primarily under Lord Ripon, and, after his monumental work, when district and sub-district boards were formed, a series of Acts were passed to grant financial independence to, and effect a reduction of, official control over these boards; to-day these stand nearly on equal footing with similar institutions in the civilised countries of East and West. The object of this resolution, this afternoon, is to remove one of the few shortcomings still existing.

An official President, even an elected one, in the local board is rather anomalous in the light of recent developments and contradictory to the spirit of the Reforms. Most of the district boards have got the non-official Chairmen and the few still left will have the privilege very soon. His Excellency the Governor said in the District Board Conference year before last: "The decision of Government to empower district boards to elect their own Chairman constituted the greatest advance in local self-government since the time when district boards came into existence under the administration of Lord Ripon." On the other side, under the Village Self-Government Act: "Every union board shall be presided over by a President, who shall be elected by the members of the union from among their own number." Here, also, a non-official President is an established fact. It is certainly inconsistent now that local boards, the connecting links between the two extremes, will have officials still at its head. If by local self-government we mean "the system of government under which the greatest number of minds, knowing the most and having the fullest opportunities of knowing about the special matter in hand and having the greatest interests in its well-working, have the management of it or control over it," and if the authorities accept the spirit of the various recommendations of the responsible bodies, formed from time to time to report on this vital matter, there is no other alternative than to have non-official elected Chairmen in all the rural boards. In the recommendations of the Committee appointed by Lord Chelmsford, in 1916, we find that "it should be followed by an extension of the system of elected Chairmen. It is hoped that the election of Chairmen will be the general rule in future." Again, "in case of rural boards and local boards Government will be urged to appoint non-official and perfectly elected Chairmen."

Coming to the practical side of the question, we find that the arguments in favour of a non-official elected Chairman in the district boards, hold equally strong here. An official, when he so desires, is in almost all cases, elected Chairman of a local board and, when once elected, controls it, in fact. This is just what is not wanted in the proper development of local self-government. In the original resolutions, in 1881, in the despatch of Lord Ripon we find that "there appears to him to be great force in the argument that so long as the Chief Executive Officers are Chairmen of District Committees, there is little chance of these Committees affording any effective training to their members in the management of local affairs. The non-official members must feel that real power is placed in their hands and that they have real responsibilities. The Governor-General in Council, therefore, would wish to see non-official persons acting, whenever practical, as Chairmen of local boards." Again, in the Montagu-Chelmsford report we find that, "If our proposals for changes in higher levels are to be a success, there must be no hesitation of faltering about changes in local boards. Responsible institutions will not be stably rooted, until they become broad-based, and farsighted Indian politicians will find no better field in which their energy can be more profitably thrown than in developing the boroughs and communes of the country."

Numerous utterances, both official and non-official, can be quoted, and a host of arguments, exhaustively discussed in the press and public, can be brought forward to show the desirability of having non-official Chairmen in local boards, and so I do not like to tax the patience of the House any more. Government cannot justly recede back and refuse the local boards the privileges which they have granted to the district and union boards.

With these few words, Sir, I earnestly commend the resolution to the acceptance of the House.

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea): I think I shall best consult the convenience of the House and simplify matters of I say at once that I accept the resolution of my hon'ble friend. The district boards having been given the right of electing their non-official Chairmen, a similar concession to the local boards could not be resisted with anything like consistency, logic or common-sense, for the powers and responsibilities of district boards are far larger and far more onerous than those of the local boards. The question might therefore be asked—how it was that this concession had so long been deferred in the case of the local boards? I think I have a simple answer to give and I trust it will be accepted as satisfactory by this Council. I think the difficulty so far as I can understand, which arose in the mind of Government in this connection was that perhaps in the small areas with these small responsibilities it would be difficult to find suitable men. I fear it was the apprehension that the proper kind of men, duly qualified, would not be forthcoming to discharge the responsibilities of Chairmen of the local boards that lay at the bottom of the hesitation which Government showed in this connection. But communities grow, ideals grow, Governments also grow, and we feel that occasions and opportunities create men, and that if we accord to the local boards the opportunities which they desire in this connection and which have been so eloquently set forth by my hon'ble friend, the suitable kind of men would be forthcoming. It is in this hope and in this confidence that Government desires to make this concession to the local boards. Let me remind the members of this Council and members of the district boards who are here that a right always connotes an obligation, and I hope and trust on behalf of the Government and I may also add on behalf of the House, that the local boards and the representatives of the local boards will recognise the concession which has been made, will rise to the height of their civic duties, justify the trust reposed in them, and qualify themselves for these higher duties which, under the new readjustment of our local institutions, await them in the near future. For let it not be forgotten that the system of local self-government is but a part and parcel of the broader system of responsible government; that it is the basic foundation upon which this great and majestic fabric rests. I desire to remind the House of the recommendation contained in the Montagu-Chelmsford Scheme, which says, that so far as may be, popular control shall be accorded to the local bodies. Let me say this, on behalf of the Government, that it will be its earnest endeavour to give effect to this recommendation, to make the system of local self-government co-ordinate with that of responsible government which has brought us into existence and which I am perfectly confident has a great and brilliant future before it. With these words I beg to accept this resolution.

The resolution was then put and agreed to.

Telegraphic communications with the Island of Sandwip.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: "This Council recommends to the Government that immediate steps be taken to open telegraphic communications between the mainland and the island of Sandwip in the Chittagong Division."

At the outset I should thank the Government for the sympathetic treatment which has been accorded to me in this connection. I have already received a letter on the 2nd instant from the Secretary to Government saying that some correspondence is going on with regard to the opening of this telegraphic communication. Sandwip is an island which is at the mouth of the Megna and really commands the western coast of Chittagong, the coast of Noakhali and Shahabazpur in Barisal. It has also got some strategic value. It is an important island. It has got a Munsif's court, a Sub-Deputy Collector's Court, a police-station, some six or seven post offices and more than a lakh of inhabitants. The Rivers Steam and India General Navigation Companies have got their steamer stations. During the rains, it becomes almost impossible for country boats to ply between Noakhali and Sandwip. It sometimes happens that for three or four days, when ordinary postal communications are cut off, the people there are entirely isolated, having no other means of communication. Sandwip can claim special consideration at the hands of Government, because it supplied a large number of recruits during the war and a large number of its people are still in the labour force in Bogra and other places. So I hope and trust that Government will kindly accept this resolution.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): This resolution asks us to take immediate steps to open telegraphic communication with the island of Sandwip. The local (Government have of course no power to establish telegraphic communication anywhere; they can only ask or recommend the Telegraph Department, which is an Imperial Department, to establish such communication, and one of the rules under which the Telegraph Department works is that where it is doubtful whether a telegraph line will pay its expenses a guarantee against loss on working and maintaining it must be provided. I am afraid there is no doubt that this communication with Sandwip would not pay, and whoever supplies the guarantee would have to be prepared to lose a considerable sum per annum. This question, I find, was examined in 1919 when certain local bodies made representations to His Excellency the Governor on the subject. We then ascertained that the guarantee which would be required for this line would amount to Rs. 16,006 per annum. That seems to be a somewhat high figure, and I have asked the Postmaster-General whether he adheres to that figure at the present day. The Postmaster-General has kindly promised to have a revised estimate drawn up, but he warns us that the guarantee is bound to be considerable because it would be necessary to lay a cable to connect Sandwip with the existing telegraphic line on the main land, and cables are one of those things which, after the war, are very expensive. However, when I get the Postmaster-General's revised estimate, I shall be glad to communicate it to the mover and to any other members who are interested in this question. Meanwhile we may take it that we cannot get this telegraphic communication established unless we are prepared to put up a guarantee of several thousand rupees a year. Government are not prepared to pay any large sum by way of guarantee, because the administrative advantages of a telegraphic connection with Sandwip are not sufficient to justify any considerable expenditure. It would no doubt be convenient to have a telegraph station at Sandwip, but there are many other matters of greater urgency to which we should give preference if we had money available at this time of financial stringency. I fear, therefore, that there is no prospect of getting this line established unless the local people are prepared to put up the guarantee. I am very sorry to have to be unsympathetic to a place like Sandwip, whose inhabitants are deserving of great consideration owing to their loyal services during the war, but at the present time I do not feel justified on behalf of Government in accepting the resolution. I can only say that when we get the revised estimate from the Postmaster-General we shall be glad to discuss this matter further with the mover of the resolution.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: In view of what has been said by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr and of the assurance given by him that he will allow me to discuss the question further with him later on when he hears from the Postmaster-General, I beg leave to withdraw the resolution.

The resolution was then, by leave of the Council, withdrawn.

The following amendment was also withdrawn:—

SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ to move, by way of amendment to motion No. 22, “that for the words ‘the mainland’ the word ‘Noakhali’ be substituted.”

Adjournment.

The Council was then adjourned to 3 p.m. on the following day (the 6th April, 1921), at the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council assembled at 3 P.M. on Wednesday, the 6th April, 1921, in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 93 nominated and elected members.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda):

The following telegram was sent by me to His Excellency the Viceroy on Monday last at the request of the Council:—

“Bengal Legislative Council in meeting assembled offer respectful welcome to Your Excellency on assumption of high office of Viceroy of India.”

I have received the following telegram from His Excellency's private Secretary in reply:—

“His Excellency desires me to thank you and the Bengal Legislative Council very warmly for your kind telegram of welcome on his assumption of the high office of Viceroy.”

Starred Question

Muhammadans for Bengal Judicial Service.

XXVI. Mr. SYED ERFAN ALI: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department be pleased to state what is the present number of candidates enrolled for appointment in the Bengal Judicial Service?

(b) How many Muhammadans were enrolled candidates and were refused appointments during the last ten years in this service?

(c) What is the proportion of the Muhammadans in the service and their grade?

(d) Is it a fact that the proportion of Muhammadans in the Judicial Service is very small?

(e) Are the Government considering the advisability of recommending to the Hon'ble the High Court the desirability of giving precedence to Muhammadan candidates in filling up appointments in the Judicial Service?

MEMBER in charge of JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Abd-ur-Rahim): (a) One hundred and forty-three (of these six are Muhammadans).

Unstarred Questions

(answers to which were laid on the table).

Holding of a Munsifi Court at Bhola late in the evening and inconvenience caused thereby.

154. Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department aware that Babu Pratap Chandra Sen Gupta, a Munsif at Bhola in the district of Bakarganj, usually holds court up till 7 and 7-30 P.M.?

(b) Is the Hon'ble the Member aware that this is in direct violation of the High Court circulars and that it causes inconvenience and trouble to the pleaders and litigant public?

(c) Are the Government considering the desirability of taking any action in the matter?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) and (b) No. Out of 142 working days, from 30th July, 1920, to 19th March, 1921, the Munsif sat on two days up to 7-30 P.M., on three days up to 7 P.M., on five days up to 6-30 P.M., and on two days up to 6-15 P.M. On the remaining days he rose between 5 and 6 P.M. These few sittings were due to unusual pressure of work and cannot be altogether avoided.

(c) No.

Non-observance of the procedure of order-sheet being signed by vakils of the parties in the Munsifs' Courts at Comilla.

155. SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: (a) Is the Hon'ble the Member in charge of the Judicial Department aware—

(i) that the order-sheet in the Munsifs' Courts at Comilla is not daily signed by the Vakils of the parties; and

(ii) that the omission of this procedure causes harassment, as very often postponements are granted when the parties are present and cases are dismissed when the parties are absent?

(b) Will the Hon'ble the Member be pleased to state—

(i) the number of cases dismissed;

(ii) the number of cases reviewed;

(iii) the number of cases allowed; and

(iv) the number of cases appealed against review;

in the courts of Comilla in 1920?

The Hon'ble Sir ABD-UR-RAHIM: (a) (i) It is a fact that order-sheets in all cases dealt with on each day in the Munsifs' Courts at Comilla are not daily signed by the pleaders of the parties. Rule 49, Chapter I, page 17, of the High Court's General Rules and Circular Orders, Civil, however, requires a list of all cases to be posted up at the close of each day in which dates have been fixed for hearing or adjourned hearing in the course of that day. This rule is carried out. The signature of the pleader of the party on the order-sheet is not required by any rule, except where any particular order directs anything to be done by the party (Rule 18, Chapter III, page 87, of the High Court's General Rules and Circular Orders, Civil). This rule is observed.

(ii) Postponements are not granted, except on the applications of the parties and on account of the want of time of the Court.

(b) The following statistics only are available and partially supply the information sought to be elicited:—

(i) Out of a total of 20,809 suits disposed of in 1920, the number of cases dismissed for default (absence of plaintiff in most cases) and for want of prosecution was 2,982.

- (ii) The number of applications for setting aside judgments passed on default was 425.
- (iii) The number of such applications granted was 421. (These figures include applications for setting aside ex-parte judgments also, of which the number preferred was 674. No separate statistics are kept of the number of such applications granted).
- (iv) The number of miscellaneous appeals preferred against orders refusing to set aside judgments passed on default is 19.

Average expense incurred in training Indian nurses and in maintaining the staff.

156. Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: (a) Will the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of the Department of Local Self-Government be pleased to furnish a comparative statement regarding the following points in connection with the training of Indian nurses at different centres in Calcutta, such as the Lady Dufferin Hospital, the Eden Hospital and the Lady Carmichael Nursing School at the Sambhu Nath Pandit Hospital:—

- (i) the average cost of running the establishment of the above-mentioned three hospitals per year;
 - (ii) the average cost of training a nurse for full course;
 - (iii) the average cost of training a nurse per year;
 - (iv) the personnel of the nursing staff, with their qualifications, pay, allowance, house rents, etc.;
 - (v) the maximum number of nurses which can be admitted every year;
 - (vi) the total number of nurses now under training;
 - (vii) the average number of nurses passed out during the last three years?
- (b) Will the Hon'ble the Minister be pleased to state—
- (i) the actual number of the members of the staff, with their designation, accommodated at 3, Lee Road, which has been acquired at a cost of Rs. 90,125 for the Lady Carmichael Nursing Scheme;
 - (ii) on what grounds was the Kalimpong centre of the Lady Carmichael Nursing Scheme found unnecessary and consequently abolished?

MINISTER in charge of DEPARTMENT of LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjee): (a) (i) to (vi) A statement is laid on the table.

(b) (i) One Nursing Superintendent. One Assistant Nursing Superintendent (post vacant).

(ii) The Kalimpong centre of the Lady Carmichael Nursing Scheme has not been abolished.

Resolutions

(under the rules for the discussion of matters of general public interest).

Closing of Government offices and courts on Fridays for the "Juma" prayers.

SHAH SYED EMDADUL HAQ: "This Council recommends to the Government that orders be passed for the suspension of business in all courts and Government offices in this province, for one hour every Friday, from 12-30 to 1-30 P.M., to enable the Muhammadans to say their Juma prayers."

The member spoke in Bengali in support of his motion, addressing the Council for 30 minutes.

Dr. HASSAN SUHRAWARDY : The importance of Juma prayers need hardly be impressed upon the Mussalman members of the Council. But for the benefit of non-Muslim members I desire to point out that in Muslim countries, Friday is recognised as the sabbath day, and on every Friday the Juma prayers are offered with great pomp and ceremony. The king goes to the Juma Musjid with all the pomp and dignity of royalty and attends the prayer. The Juma prayer is the only prayer in the week which is offered in state and in public by the ruling sovereign in the Juma Musjid, and it is only at the Juma prayers that the khutba is read and the proclamation of the assumption of sovereignty by a new king is also publicly announced. The proclamation at the Juma prayers and the association of his name in the khutba is recognised as a sufficient exercise of the right of sovereignty equal to a public accession to the throne. The acceptance of the congregation amounts to a recognition of his sovereignty by all the Faithful, whether present or absent. These facts show the importance of the Juma prayers over the daily prayers. It is during the Juma prayers throughout the Muslim world and throughout the British Empire in India and beyond, benediction is offered for the Commander of the Faithful, whose name as the Caliph of Islam is associated in the khutba. Indeed, do we not find that the Khalifatul-Muslamin himself performs in Constantinople the impressive ceremony of Sclamlık with all the pomp and ceremony of state on Fridays after Juma prayers? I had the privilege of being attached to the staff of His late Majesty Amir Habibulla Khan of Afghanistan during his tour in 1908, and have seen the arrangements made in different places by the Government of India for his performing Juma prayers in public. Here, in this very city of Calcutta, which His Majesty visited as the then capital of the British Indian Empire, special arrangements were made and many of us remember the ceremony with which he attended the Juma prayers in the cathedral mosque in Lower Chitpur Road. I will not forget the scene of enthusiasm which was witnessed at Delhi when the main doors of the Juma Masjid, called the Shahi Darwaza, were thrown open for the Amir to enter the Juma Masjid in state. Muhammadans from far and near were attracted and flocked in large numbers to the mosque to attend the prayers. These facts, Sir, show the significance of the Juma prayers. Indeed the very existence of a special mosque—the Juma Masjid—in Delhi and other important Muhammadan towns, is a proof positive of the great importance the Muhammadans attach to the Juma prayers. As a further proof of its great importance I would ask the hon'ble members to visit Sundhriapatty, Colootola, Sir Stuart Hogg Market, Chandney Chowk or Canning Street on a Friday morning, and there they will find the poor Muhammadan traders and shop-keepers closing their shops and suspending their business and hurrying off to neighbouring mosques to attend the Juma prayers. The Juma prayer is therefore recognised by Muhammadans of all classes as a very important function. The importance of Juma prayers over other prayers of the week is also recognised by Government, as we find that Government institutions like the Madrassas of Calcutta, Dacca and Chittagong and other places are closed on that day to allow the Muhammadans to say their prayers. We are very thankful to the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler for permitting for the past few years that the convicts in the Alipore Central Jail may say their Juma prayers. We hope that the privilege which has been allowed to the prisoners, will not be withheld from the free people, who frequent the law courts either as litigants, or witnesses, or as lawyers or clerks. (Several voices: "Hear, hear.") Every one knows that, what Sunday is to the Christians, what Saturday is to the Jews, that Friday is to the Muhammadans. The Christians get a full holiday on Sundays; the Jews a half-holiday on Saturdays. Will Government deny only one short hour's recess to the Mussalmans to say their prayers? Sir, is this not a very small and modest request?

We find that business is suspended everywhere in the law courts, including the highest in the land—the High Court of Judicature, every day for lunch to enable the Judges and Magistrates to satisfy their physical needs. This is done for the benefit of the Hakims only, as the Indian litigants and office employees, who have their dal bhat at 10 in the morning, and do not require lunch at midday. Sir, will it be too much to ask for a suspension of business for an hour only once a week for our spiritual food? (Several voices: "Hear, hear.")

From the Government point of view, I think the encouragement of Juma prayers is very important.

The late Justice O'Kinealy, while dealing with the well-known Wahabi case—that great movement to subvert the British Government, the seriousness and magnitude of which is known to you much more than to myself—recognised that other things being equal, a Muslim who said his usual daily prayers but abstained from taking part in the Juma prayers may as a rough and ready method be looked upon with great suspicion. We all know of the conflagration that was fanned by this movement and extended from Chittagong to Chitral, and the valley of the Swat. Sir, the very steps of this historic hall were stained with the blood of the victim of Wahabi fanaticism—I refer to the tragic death of the acting Chief Justice of Bengal (John Norman) at the hands of a Wahabi in 1871. Justice O'Kinealy was not only an eminent Judge but also a great Orientalist. He knew Muslim politics and the Mussalmans very well. What O'Kinealy did not know about a Muslim question or a Muslim family from Peshawar to Shillong, one could take it, was not worth knowing. He said that those Mussalmans who performed the Juma prayers recognised and accepted British India as Dar-al-Aman (Home of Peace). Imagine what a great thing Government would be doing by encouraging Muhammadans to recognise that British rule in India does not create Dar-al-Harb (Home of war), that is an enemy country, where jihad or religious war could or should be waged. I have given an expert opinion from an expert of experts on Muhammadan questions. Government are doubtless aware of the Farazi sect or the Bey Juma people; I need hardly take the time of the Council by repeating what their tenets and teachings are. I maintain that the encouragement of Juma prayers by Government would also materially help in counteracting the forces of evil let loose by the movement of non-co-operation. Sir, you are aware that the non-co-operation movement with all its potentiality for mischief, is also, among other things, urging the Muhammadans to believe that British India is Dar-al-Harb from where either one should migrate away (perform hijrat) or wage a holy war. We are now asking Government to afford facilities for the offering of Juma prayers. The request has come from non-official members. It has come from a quarter where official inspiration or influence could not be thought of. Therefore I request Government to very carefully consider this question and allow suspension of business for one hour on Fridays. We, most of the non-official Indian members, at any rate all the Muhammadan members, have come to this Council in spite of the opposition, in spite of the calumny and odium that was cast on us, by the so-called "Khilafat Committee" and the non-co-operators. We have come here to co-operate with the Government, we have come here to help Government, where such help is possible. Will it be too much if we ask Government to co-operate with us? Help us in every small matter, a very reasonable matter, by allowing only one hour's recess in the week?

We do not ask the people who do not say their prayers to suspend their work perforce. They can certainly employ the hour of recess in writing judgments, or going through a file if they are Magistrates or Judges. The nakalnawis can go on copying and the typist can do his typing if he is keen about it. But we feel that an official suspension of business will go a long way to afford facilities for saying the Juma prayers and will give satisfaction to a large body of men who appear in the law courts either as witnesses, clients, vakils, pleaders or as muharrirs or clerks, or are attached as Government servants in one capacity or other.

If according to existing Government circulars only the Muslim Government employees and Muslim lawyers and litigants are given leave and absented themselves from work, people will be chary of employing Muslims, on account of this invidious distinction which marks out the Muslims as working one hour less than others, whereas if an official suspension of business is established, this disadvantage is got over. Muslim holidays are few and far between, and their claims ought to be favourably considered in the light of this fact also. In this very Council, we find that it has been recognised that the Muhammadans should get fifteen minutes to say their evening prayers. The whole Council suspends business during this time. Those who do not pray utilise the time in taking tea, or in having their evening constitutional, or smoking and chatting in the lobby and the lounge. In any case, the importance of ordinary daily prayers has been recognised; and in the resolution before us we recommend that for the most important prayer of the week, only during the Muslim Sabbath, one hour's suspension of business be granted. In this matter all the non-official members of the Council, Hindus, Muslims, and Christians, are united. Let not Government alone stand in our way.

Maulvi HAMID-UD-DIN KHAN: The resolution just moved by my friend Shah Syed Emdadul Haq for suspension of business in all courts and Government offices for an hour for Juma prayer vitally concerns those who are the followers of Islam. This is not an educational, social or political question, but it is a question of religion, and it is the question of all questions. Any religious question to all, especially to Muhammadans, is sacred and should not be lightly dealt with. It is a matter relating to prayer, which brings man to the level of God when in direct communion with Him.

The prayer mentioned in the resolution is a weekly prayer, i.e., Juma prayer for an hour on every Friday, assembled in mosques. The time for prayer is between 12-30 and 1-30 p.m. The time for this prayer is very short. As regards other prayers, say noon prayers, time is extended from 12-30 to 3-30 p.m., and afternoon prayers from 3-30 to 6 p.m., but the time for Juma prayer is limited to one hour or so. This prayer is obligatory on all Mussalmans. Juma prayer cannot be dispensed with. If facility for this prayer is done away with, then creeps in the question of Dar-al-Harb or Dar-al-Islam. If this opportunity of saying this prayer is not given, then India becomes Dar-al-Harb, i.e., enemy country. If India becomes enemy country, what will be the duty of the Muhammadans? Their duty will be to leave this country and to go away to a country where they will get facility for saying their prayers. But, it has been decided, and long decided, that India is not a Dar-al-Harb. What is the reason of this decision? Simply because facilities and opportunities are given to the followers of Islam to say their prayer, and to perform all religious ceremonies without the least objection on the part of the Government. But time has wrought a change in the minds of the officers of Government, and especially the judicial officers. To the judicial officers, specially, the injunction to give facility to say Juma prayer gradually lost its force and become a mere "pious wish." Some of the judicial officers go so far as to say that the India Government resolution regarding Juma prayer is a pious wish and is meant for ministerial officers and not for litigants and other Mussalmans. In several cases, the answer comes from judicial officers when they are reminded of the pious wish: "We are here to dispense justice." But, they do dispense justice by the speedy disposal of the cases before them without thinking for a moment about the "pious wish," for they think that their promotion depends upon their speedy disposal of cases. The violation of the wish often happens in mufasssal courts. The Hon'ble Member in charge of this department may say in reply that no complaint or specific case has as yet been made out, so it will not be out of place here to cite two cases which have been disposed of:—

- (1) The first case is of Faleswari Nathni versus Tarikulla, money suit No. 1573 of 1918, in the Court of the second Munsif, Gaibandha, decided ex parte on 8th August, 1919. Review No. 228 of 1919. Rejected on 10th January, 1920.
- (2) The second case is of Bachui Bibi versus Yajuddin Sheikh, petty suit No. 617 of 1920, in the Court of the Second Munsif, Gaibandha, decided ex parte on the 30th July 1920. Review No. 221 of 1920. Rejected on 28th August, 1920.

Hence, Sir, there is no denying the fact that this pious wish is often violated, or sometimes disregarded, if I may be permitted to say so, with contempt. An hour's suspension of business on Friday from 12-30 to 1-30 p.m. will not materially affect or hamper the business of the day.

If an hour's suspension is granted for lunch, i.e., for comforts of body, then does not fairness and justice demand that suspension for an hour on Friday for prayer be granted to the Mussalmans?

Somebody may argue, what will the judicial officers do during the time of suspension? To him my answer is that they may write out judgments or inspect their offices in charge of Hindu officers and other similar business.

The Juma prayer stands in greater sanctity than that of Id prayers. What reason can there be when holidays are sanctioned for Id festivals, that suspension of business should not be made on Friday for an hour only for a greatly important prayer by 2½ crores of Mussalmans of Bengal? So my appeal to my Hindu and Christian brethren in the Council is that they should consider the resolution from a religious point of view and give their weighty decision in favour of their Muslim brethren who live, move and work with them.

With these words I support this resolution.

Maulvi EMADUDDIN AHMED: Before taking up the subject I think I ought to let the Council know what Mr. Hornell has himself done with respect to the Juma prayers. He has sent a circular to all institutions to allow half-holiday on Friday if the governing bodies have no objection to that or to set apart one hour on that day for the Juma prayer; and I understand that effect has been given to it; in some cases half-holiday has been allowed, and in some cases where a full sitting is held, one hour's recess is given, and for this concession there has been no loss and no students have suffered in consequence. Mr. Hornell has thereby put us under a deep debt of obligation; and I hope what Mr. Hornell has done will be done by the officers who are in charge of the other departments of Government. It may perhaps be argued that a circular has been issued drawing attention of the officers that facilities should be given to Muhammadans to offer their prayers on Fridays; but this has not been sufficient. I beg to submit that one ought to understand that a petty peshkar who has to work under a District Judge or some other judicial officer does not dare to absent himself from the court. I, therefore, submit that unless there is a full hour's recess the effect will be nil. We pray, therefore, that one hour's recess should be given. Perhaps you do not know what is the feeling about this. I may tell you a story about it. There was a high official who used to go every day at 1 o'clock to his bungalow, which was very near to the court, in order to take his lunch. He had a motor car and his driver was a very pious Muhammadan and, therefore, particular in saying his prayer at the Juma time. But the time when the officer used to go to his bungalow used to clash with the time for his Juma prayer; but the driver being a very pious Mussalman never cared what the high official would tell him; because, after all, he was not a petty clerk that he could not get any other employment. One day it so happened that the high official was very keen on going back to his bungalow as the time for lunch was up, but the man was going on with his prayer in the mosque near by. Consequently, there was a little delay and the official got very angry. As I was present there, the official asked me to somjao the man that it was better to pay more attention to his duty than to his prayer. I must admit that in my weakness I ventured to put a word or two to the man, but do you know what he said in his reply? He said: "Here is your motor car, Sir, and I shall never do your work against the call of the Almighty Father. I shall no longer be your servant." It seemed to me that it would have been better on my part not to touch that question. From this you can easily understand what is the feeling of the Muhammadans in regard to Juma prayer. That is the feeling of all the Mussalmanans who form half the population of this presidency, and they demand that not a full holiday but only an hour's recess be granted. They could have demanded a full holiday, but they know that there are other considerations and therefore they should be very reasonable. In view of the fact that the Muhammadans entertain strong feelings in this matter, I hope that this Council will accede to this modest prayer and put them under a deep debt of obligation. I beg to submit that during the hour of recess when it is proposed to suspend the business in many of the mufassal courts and district courts, as many of us know, the presiding officers generally idle away their time in talking to their friends or in taking their lunch. If, therefore, for an hour they rise and keep themselves absent from their courts, no harm will be done, as they ordinarily have half an hour's recess for lunch. Therefore, it seems to me that it is not asking for too much, and that by granting this request you will put the people under a deep debt of obligation.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: I think, Sir, enough has been said on this question and I do not like to add anything more.

I wish to support the motion.

Babu KISHORI MOHAN CHAUDHURI: I support the motion. The fear of God is a great qualification in man. If my Muhammadan friends want only an hour a day in a week to say their prayers, nobody should grudge it. I think there would not be any inconvenience for allowing them to say their prayers. If there is any urgent work, the particular court can sit a little earlier, if necessary. In some cases during tiffin time much office work is done. So practically there will not be any difficulty and there should not be any objection to this being granted. We, in this Council, by a majority of votes, decided that 15 minutes' time should be granted for evening prayer. If this has been done, it is sufficient recognition of the importance of the Muhammadan prayer time, and our Muhammadan friends' prayer for an hour should also be granted. We all know that the Juma prayer is looked upon by our Muhammadan friends with sanctity and reverence. And on Friday an hour's time devoted to prayer is not too much. I hope and trust that the authorities will raise no objection and will grant it.

MEMBER in charge of POLITICAL DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler): This resolution is almost a replica of one which was moved by Maulvi Abul Kasem in July, 1917, in the old Council and, after the reply given by Lord Sinha, was withdrawn. That resolution of 1917 was in its turn the successor of a very similar resolution of which notice was given in 1916, having special reference to the adjournment of the courts for this purpose of Friday prayers. At that time, after inquiry had been made of the High Court, and attention had been drawn by them to their orders of 1899 and 1904, which permitted an optional adjournment of the courts, that resolution too was withdrawn.

There is, therefore, not much that I can say that is new. It would obviously be improper for me to offer any comment on this question from the religious point of view, which is doubtless held, and rightly held, strongly by the great Muhammadan community. I can only deal with the question from the point of view of public business, and explain what the attitude of Government in the matter is. The position of Government is that it is anxious in this respect to give all reasonable concessions and facilities to its Muhammadan employees. Attention was drawn to this matter in 1912, largely at the instance of Mr. Ghaznavi, and orders were then issued to all concerned that for the purpose of Friday prayers facilities should be given to Government employees. It is true that to that order a condition was attached that Muhammadans so absenting themselves should work extra hours at other times. Personally, I doubt if that was a very necessary condition, and I very much doubt if it was ever enforced. There is a practical difficulty in bringing isolated members of an office to work at a time when the whole office is not sitting, and reviewing the matter now, I would be perfectly willing to ask Government to consider the withdrawal of that condition which, I think, is, in effect, an impractical condition. Another reason for doubting whether it was ever practically in force, is that all our information as regards the working of these orders is to the effect that they have been worked without discontent or dissatisfaction. That was the action taken in 1912, and it was then greeted by the Muhammadan community as a reasonable concession to their views. When the matter was brought up again by Maulvi Abul Kasem in 1917, a special inquiry was made as to the working of these orders, and the replies were practically unanimous that they were availed of by the Muhammadan employees of Government and worked smoothly and well. I am well aware that isolated exceptions were mentioned in 1917, but they were few in number and were susceptible of explanation. Since then, no special attention has been drawn to the matter in the same way, but in February of this year Government again said, in answer to a question, that they would make inquiries whether their employees had any reasonable complaints in this matter. That inquiry will be made, and should there be any grievances we will do our best to remedy them. Also I am perfectly willing to forward the proceedings of the Council to-day to the High Court in order that, in the light of it, they too may re-examine the working of their orders of 1889 and 1904, and see if anything further is required. If action is taken on these lines, I put it to the Council that, so far as we are concerned in our relation to our officers, we have done all that is reasonably possible.

The other aspect of the question is that of public business, with which Government is naturally also concerned. It has been held, and I am afraid I must urge again, that while we are willing to do all we can in respect of our own officers, we cannot, compatibly with the efficient and satisfactory discharge of business, impose this restriction on the public at large. I submit that if a thought is given to the matter it will be found that it is not a reasonable proposition. It is a mere platitude to say that in this vast country of India there are many communities, many creeds, and many different religious observances, and we have to endeavour to ensure the efficient conduct of the affairs of the country with reasonable concessions to the susceptibilities of each. But the public business has to be done. Again, in all friendliness, I put it to the Muhammadan members of the Council that it is not wise to push a too rigid restriction in a matter of this kind. The Muhammadan community is entering more and more largely into a participation in public life—a process which we hope to see continuing—but it will not facilitate this if their participation is accompanied by conditions which, from the public point of view, render their assistance less valuable than that of members of other communities.

The subject is one of some delicacy, upon which one of another creed naturally finds some difficulty in speaking, but I put it to the Muhammadan members that we, as a Government, have endeavoured to meet their susceptibilities to the full in this matter so far as our own officers and employees are concerned, and if we are not able to make this limitation binding upon the public at large, it is because other members of the public have rights and interests to which we equally feel ourselves bound to pay attention.

Maulvi A. K. FAZL-UL HAQ: It is not much that I desire to say on the subject, but I anticipated some of the remarks which have just been made by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler, and it is more by way of an appeal to him than to lengthen the discussion that I beg to say a few words on this subject. As the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has pointed out, the subject is not at all a new one in the Bengal Legislative Council. It was debated more than once and interpellations were made to which replies were given by Government, but long before this subject came up before any of the Legislative Councils, the question had attracted public attention in the country and had been brought to the notice of the authorities on more than one occasion. I might cite a few instances. I remember that a very influential deputation waited on Sir John Woodburn, the then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and later on on Sir James Bourdillon, who was then acting as Lieutenant-Governor. On these occasions the question was discussed from all possible points of view and instructions were issued not merely to heads of offices but also to the presiding officers of the courts, through the High Court, to afford facilities to their Muhammadan employees and Muhammadan litigants, witnesses and others for saying their Juma prayers. These orders worked satisfactorily for some time, but somehow or other they ceased to be observed as time wore on, and latterly it was found that they were honoured more in the breach than in the observance. That was the reason why this question had to be brought up repeatedly in various shapes and Government had to be approached for definite instructions not merely by circular orders of a recommendatory, but of a mandatory, character.

The resolution brings up the question in two distinct shapes. One affects business in law courts and the other in Government offices. So far as business in Government offices is concerned, it is quite possible for Government to pass orders that business should be suspended for one hour and that the work which might suffer might be made up by extra hours at the end of a day. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has already said that he is ready to issue a circular making it unnecessary for heads of offices to insist on Muhammadans working extra hours in order to make up for lost time. That might meet the requirements of the situation so far as Government offices are concerned. But it is with regard to law courts that difficulties would arise, and I also recognise that there are complications by reason of the fact that the business of the law courts is regulated by circular orders issued by the High Court. And if the matter is left to the High Court, I have absolutely no hope that any satisfactory solution would be arrived at. We do not know whether the High Court would think it necessary to take up the matter at all, or if so, in what shape they will think it necessary to issue orders in order to provide facilities for Muhammadans to say their prayers. I want, therefore, to put forward the following points by way of suggestion.

Is it not possible to issue orders to the presiding officers of the courts by some sort of arrangements to close for one hour on Friday and make it up by sitting for an hour more at the end of the day? We all know that the High Court circular insists that the courts are to sit from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M., but it is well known that the presiding officers sometimes hold their courts up to 6 or 7 P.M., and I have known instances in which they sit up to 10 o'clock at night. If the officers can do that, they might sit for an hour more on Fridays without distinct orders of the High Court. The Executive Government, who appoints these officers and is in touch with them, can easily issue orders to these officers to the effect that they should sit for an hour more on Fridays. But if the matter is left to the High Court, I am afraid nothing would be done by them which could satisfy the Muhammadan public. The matter has been considered in various shapes on various occasions, and I confess that no satisfactory solution has been arrived at.

As regards the question as to what the presiding officer should do to occupy the vacant hour, I think he might easily find some employment to occupy himself during that time. It is only a question of an hour and it would afford facilities for Muhammadans to say their prayers. It will not do to say that Muhammadan litigants or witnesses may absent themselves in that hour. I might point out that in Eastern Bengal there is not a single case in the law courts where Muhammadans are not interested, if not as litigants, at least as witnesses or even as tatbidkars. And so if it is a question of Muhammadans absenting themselves from courts at a particular hour, it would mean that the whole business of the court would be stopped. It is no use hiding facts—the whole business of the court would have to be held up for an hour.

Sir, this would be a concession to Muhammadan feeling, which is very strong in this matter. I therefore beg to support the resolution.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: I do not propose to look at this matter from the political point of view which my hon'ble friend has mentioned. I consider that the necessity for finding time for saying Juma prayers cannot be questioned. So great is the feeling of the Muhammadan world in this matter that we find our poorest shopkeepers closing their shops on Friday noon at considerable sacrifice only to be able to attend to their prayers. I think, Sir, it has been very aptly said by one of the greatest of men that man does not live by bread alone. Therefore, I do not think that there should be any person so bold as to venture to stand in the way of our Muhammadan brethren to get time to say their prayers, and in that view of the matter I support the motion in its entirety.

There is only one thing that I would ask my Muhammadan friends. I have just listened to Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq and I do not know whether I could make a suggestion. In making the suggestion I would beg my Muhammadan brethren to remember that I do it in a spirit in which it may be possible for other people to accept it. It has been said that much difficulty would be caused because there are people who would ask: Why lose public time in this way? I therefore think—though my friend Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq said that it would not do—that if the resolution is put in this way—that courts should be closed for an hour on Friday in order to enable such Muhammadans as are in any way concerned with the cases to say their Juma prayers—the matter may be acceptable to us generally and a considerable amount of difficulty would be removed. I do not know whether my friend would accept my suggestion. But if he accepts it, it may be considered by Government, though I do not know whether the Government would accept it.

Maulvi MUHAMMAD ABDUL JUBBAR PAHLOWAN: I would not discuss the question at very great length, as it has been discussed almost on all points. I would only answer two foolish arguments which have been put forth by some of my colleagues. The arguments are these. We do not get any time for other prayer and did not get any time for Juma prayers so long, so we are not entitled to claim it. I would not answer it from a religious point of view, as that has been fully discussed, but I would answer it in a secular way. Because we have not been given full responsible government, should we not therefore accept the present partial reform? And because we have been deprived of self-government for more than 150 years, should we not ask for it now? Therefore it is not reasonable to say, because so long we have not been given time for any other prayer, so we should not ask time for Juma prayers at present.

Professor S. C. MUKHERJI: I am not a Moslem, but I feel constrained to support this resolution. As a Christian I believe, and believe from the very depth of my heart, in the efficacy of prayer. It recalls to my mind the great line of the great Christian poet Tennyson: "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." I support this resolution not because it is politically expedient, but because it meets the spiritual needs of a man. I think it is the duty of Government to respect the religious susceptibilities of such a great community as the Muhammadan community. The Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler has discussed the question from the public business point of view. Supposing my Muhammadan friends turn round and say "Why lose the whole of Sunday? Why should not all the offices remain open on Sunday and public business be transacted? Why should we lose one whole complete day?" I should like to know what the reply of Government will be if that position be taken up. Religious susceptibilities, I consider, are of far greater importance than the dislocation of public business, if there be any, for an hour. Looking at it from every point of view, I think this little, modest concession should be made to the Muhammadan community.

Maulvi SHAH ABDUR RAUF: I am not going to dilate on the question of the importance of Juma prayer as my Muhammadan friends are well aware of it, and my Christian and Hindu brethren are also well aware of the importance of the prayer of their own religion. I should like to mention one thing. This prayer—the Juma prayer—I can be separated from other prayers, inasmuch as it requires to be conducted with a number of persons praying together. It can be said that why one hour's time is not asked for in case of prayers on other days; but it can be differentiated in this way, that prayers on other days are conducted individually and there is practically no time-limit, but the Friday prayers must be conducted all together. I have just looked into the circular which has been referred to by the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler. It has been said that no complaints are made by the employees of Government so far as the facilities for Juma prayer are concerned. I myself know, though it may not be officially known to Government as complaints have been made to me and to other persons living in the mufassal districts that due facilities are not given by the presiding officers of the courts. The circular refers only to employees under Government; it does not make any concession to the public at all. But here the aim of the resolution is to give facilities not only to the Muhammadan employees but also to the litigant public, 99 per cent. of whom in Eastern Bengal, I believe, are Muhammadans. My friend Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq has said that they are connected with the law courts either as pleaders or accused or witnesses, and so, if 99 per cent. of the court-going people, at least in Eastern Bengal, are Muhammadans, and if due facilities are not given to these persons to offer their Juma prayer for only one hour a week, I think a great injustice will be done to Muhammadans, and the hands of Government will be laid on their religious susceptibilities. I support this resolution on the ground that much inconvenience is caused to the litigant public. There is the circular before me, but in connection with this I may say that the presiding officers in the mufassal courts are hardly aware of the existence of a circular like this. On one occasion a client of mine was away attending the Juma prayer and his case was struck off. I myself was absent from the court and was in a mosque offering my Juma prayer. I then referred the court to the existence of the circular, but it was ignored. And afterwards a search was made in the office and the circular was found, and the learned Munsif agreed with me and allowed my case. My friend Maulvi Hamid-ud-din Khan, who was the second speaker on this resolution, referred to two cases which were rejected simply because the parties absented themselves at the time of the Juma prayer on Friday. There are innumerable cases unreported. These cases are hardly reported. I would invite the attention of the Hon'ble Sir Henry Wheeler to the fact that these cases hardly reach the ears of Government, and the litigant public suffer a great deal at the hands of the presiding officers. I think that some order from Government is absolutely necessary to save this trouble. I do not think it would be out of place if I mention that we are now in the midst of perilous waters so far as the non-co-operation movement is concerned. We are aware of the movement for the boycott of law courts, and if we deny these facilities—this small concession—to the Muhammadan litigant public, I think it may go a great way towards the boycotting of law courts.

The only ground on which a resolution like this is opposed is that it will cause great inconvenience to Government work. But I submit that if you take facts into consideration no sort of inconvenience will be caused by this, because I have found from my personal experience that in mufassal courts the Munsifs come out of their chambers most irregularly to try cases, sometimes at 12, sometimes at 12-30, sometimes at 1 and sometimes at 1-30. They are confined to the chamber because they have to sign a very big pile of papers. After lunch they do not generally come to the court before 3 or 4, and so, practically speaking, the business of the court is suspended for some time. I therefore submit that the business may be conducted by the presiding officers in their chambers and they may utilise one hour in the latter part of the day, and sometimes it so happens that adjournments are given according to the sweet will of the Munsifs; sometimes they get headache and they take an hour's time as leisure. So practically speaking, Government business will not be suspended or affected in any way if one hour's time is given on Friday for Juma prayer. In this connection I must say that my Hindu friends have most sympathetically supported this resolution, but what I feel is that my Christian friends should consider this case of the Muhammadans, inasmuch as they get one whole day in a week as the Sabbath day. And I refer to it because that shows clearly what the susceptibilities of a man might be. I do not support this resolution on any political ground, as my friend Dr. Suhrawardy has done. Political or not political, the question is that we must have it.

My friend Babu Surendra Nath Mullick has said that a certain modification might be made in the resolution, so that business may be suspended so far as Muhammadans are concerned, but I say that there will be some difficulty about it. A Muhammadan might be a presiding officer and a Muhammadan might be a bench clerk, and in that case practically the resolution will have to be taken into consideration. So I submit no amendment will do and we want the resolution to be passed in toto.

Dr. A. SUHRAWARDY: I move that the question be now put.

The PRESIDENT: I think I should give the Hon'ble the Member in charge an opportunity to reply.

The Hon'ble Sir HENRY WHEELER: With reference to the remarks that have been made by Maulvi Fazl-ul Haq, I have already mentioned that we are perfectly prepared to bring to-day's discussion to the notice of the High Court, and I have not the slightest doubt that the High Court will give due weight to the definite suggestions that have been made and to the arguments that have been brought forward. Beyond that we, as the Executive Government, cannot go, since the matter lies within the purview of the High Court, and we cannot dictate to them as to what they should or should not do.

Apart from that, we have to-day heard decided opinions from various quarters of the Council, and obviously the feeling in favour of the motion is strong. Clearly on a subject of this kind, involving religious considerations, it would be improper to take anything in the nature of a controversial vote, and, therefore, when the resolution is put, I, for my part, and I have no doubt other officials as well for their part, do not propose to record an opinion. I am content to have explained the attitude of Government towards this matter in the past and now.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

Kala-azar.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government that immediate steps be taken to investigate the cause of prevalence of kala-azar in every district of Bengal in which the disease is either known or suspected to exist."

The subject of this resolution is second to none in importance from the public health point of view. Kala-azar is to be recognised as the most dreaded and dreadful feature of a malady which is making headway in paralysing and killing the people.

A death-wave is sweeping Bengal. Bengal suffers from malaria in all its forms, cholera, small-pox, beriberi; and we have also to fight with this kala-azar. It is a matter of grave concern that the malady is also spreading in Calcutta, more specially in Wards Nos. 1, 9 and 22, i.e., Shampukur, Muchipara and Bhowanipore. It is officially contended that the number of imported cases is larger than locally infected ones. But this contention is of very poor consolation to us.

In kala-azar infected communities in civilised countries it is common to find whole families showing a marked degree of illiteracy, which is traceable to the disabling effects of the disease, and in many instances it has been found that for several generations none of these people has so much as entered a school. Kala-azar bequeaths a pernicious legacy to the infected communities, its work being done in a subtle, insidious manner, weakening the race, generation after generation, always tending to produce a condition of physical, intellectual and moral degeneracy, and economic loss to the infected country and communities.

Kala-azar was well known to the ancients. It was referred to by early Greek and Roman writers, and a description of it is to be found in one of the oldest Hindu Tantras. It was known even in those early days as "daukalin" fever, with gradual painful enlargement of the spleen, marked emaciation of limbs, and muddy appearance of the skin, and that is why it is called "kala-azar," "kala-dukh" or "black fever."

Closely allied to malaria and due to the same causes—neglected drainage, stagnant water and decomposed vegetable matter—is kala-azar, or Dum Dum fever, occurring both endemically and in epidemic form.

Kala-azar is not connected with the malaria mosquitoes, though common bed-bugs have been suspected to be the inveterate carriers of infection.

The disease was unknown in Bengal. Bengalis knew it to be confined to the wilderness of Assam, where it first attracted attention, and the Government there, on account of high mortality, sent medical experts, one after another, to find out the cause. Assam is no doubt responsible for spreading kala-azar into Eastern Bengal, and the disease spreads along the lines of communication as also in villages on the arrival of an infected stranger. The Assam Government has since taken up the duty of fighting kala-azar, has surveyed the districts to locate the infected areas, and opened treatment centres according to local necessities.

It is officially stated that not only Indians but Europeans also in East Bengal (Mymensingh, Dacca, Faridpur, Bakarganj, Tippera and Noakhali) are victims of kala-azar. Further, it is said that North Bengal (Jalpaiguri and Dinajpur) and West Bengal (Dum Dum, Burdwan and Hooghly) are not free from kala-azar infection. Mymensingh is suffering the worst. It has been found that 80 per cent of the villages of the Tangail subdivision are infected by kala-azar. People suffering from kala-azar, or "daukalin" fever as it is known in certain quarters, are succumbing in 95 per cent. of the cases either from nervous debility or from some complications, such as dysentery, diarrhœa, lung troubles, etc. As I have already said, the Rajshahi, Presidency and Burdwan Divisions, are not free from kala-azar infection. Sir Leonard Rogers, Dr. U. N. Brahmachari, Dr. Gopal Chandra Chatterji and other medical men have their own opinions, as to the cause of kala-azar infection.

While speaking on this subject, I must not forget to mention the mode of kala-azar treatment adopted by Dr. Muir, a missionary gentleman, who lived and worked at Kalua, district Burdwan, and who consecrated his life in the service of humanity. Dr. Muir had under his treatment hundreds of kala-azar patients, and I am proud to testify to his marvellous success in the treatment of these patients.

I have it on the authority of Rai Dr. Haridhan Dutt Bahadur, a member of this Council, that endemic fever, better known as kala-azar, is devastating the Tangail and Manikganj subdivisions. The Hon'ble Member in charge of Local Self-Government told us the other day that the District Board, Mymensingh, propose to start 18 centres for kala-azar treatment. Nothing done yet. Only it is proposed to start treatment centres. Are questions of life and death of the people to be dealt with in this way? I wonder. I have yet to learn, and I am anxious to learn, what the administration has done and is doing for arresting the devastation of the infected localities. I beg leave to ask this Council, and ask in all seriousness—Can the Government disown its direct responsibility to the suffering and dying people of the Tangail and Manikganj subdivisions? The implied official ineptitude and apathy would never have been passed over in any other country. / desire that effective steps be taken, irrespective of localities, not only to arrest the spread of kala-azar but also to eradicate the malady from the country. We have had several maladies and we are long suffering from them. We have endured many ills and evils. We cannot afford to add further to our miseries and misfortune and bring about a still larger death-roll. Once more I repeat with all seriousness that practical steps should be taken to investigate the cause of the prevalence of kala-azar and to eradicate it from Bengal.

Mr. H. BARTON: I rise to support the motion which has been moved. The question which the resolution aims at is a simple one, which is merely to investigate the cause of prevalence of kala-azar. I had occasion to raise the question some time ago and had a reply from the Hon'ble Member setting out percentages. I have made a reference to some of the best medical authorities in Calcutta, who are surprised to find that the figures submitted by the Hon'ble Member are so low that they are not prepared to accept them. One very eminent authority writes to say that he is fully convinced that the majority of cases of fever are treated as chronic malaria, indicating that those who treat fever cases do not go sufficiently deep into the treatment to satisfy themselves whether it is malarial fever or whether it is kala-azar. The question does not appear to be faced with the seriousness that it deserves. But it seems to me that the time is not far off when this disease will fall upon the people as a scourge, and then it will be too late to check its spread. The treatment of fever cases ought to be brought under closer supervision and under the best known medical authorities, and in all cases of fever the usual blood test ought to be insisted upon, as it is only then that any trace of kala-azar or malarial fever is possible. The cause of the spread of kala-azar is just now occupying the attention, I understand, of the best medical authorities in Calcutta. In my own case my child suffered from kala-azar, and up to the present moment the doctors who attended are racking their brains to find out how this contraction could have taken place. He was in Darjeeling for the whole season. He came down to Calcutta and two months after he was stricken by this fell disease, though living in one of the most healthy places in Calcutta for years. Doctors up to the present moment are unable to say how he could have contracted the disease. At the same time it is gratifying to know that the disease has to a very large extent been brought under, and I have it on the authority of some of the medical profession that under the treatment of intravenous injection 80 per cent. cures are practically guaranteed. But at the same time there is no doubting the fact that a large number of kala-azar cases exist in Calcutta and round about it, and that no one appears to have thought it his duty to sufficiently investigate the matter to find out what has been the real cause of its spread amongst the people. As I have stated, the resolution involves a very simple question and I feel absolutely certain that it will have the support of this Council and that Government will take steps to investigate the cause of the prevalence of kala-azar.

Raja MANILOLL SINGH ROY: I beg to support the resolution moved by Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur, if at all any support is necessary. Mr. Barton has very rightly said that many a life has been lost for the cases not being diagnosed properly. To my knowledge I have found some cases which were treated as simple malarial fever but they afterwards came to be proved as kala-azar. I know what Dr. Muir was doing at Kalna. He was doing immense good to the people, more to the Hindus and Muhammadans than to the Christians, and my District Board—the District Board of Burdwan—gave him Rs. 12,000 to help him in connection with his hospital and it will get every help that is necessary. Now the time has come when we should tackle the matter properly. First of all, to treat the cases properly we should know for certain that it is kala-azar, and consequently we cannot but take steps to investigate the cause of the prevalence of kala-azar if we are to get rid of it from the province. I whole-heartedly support the resolution that has been moved by the Rai Bahadur.

Dr. JATINDRA NATH MOITRA: I rise to support the resolution of Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur. Some of the councillors may not fully know that kala-azar, which played havoc in Assam in past years, is nowadays found in Mymensingh, Faridpur, Rangpur, parts of Nadia, Hooghly, Burdwan, etc. In fact it is almost as common as malaria, but it is a much more deadly disease, and in past years the mortality reached as much as 90 per cent. amongst those attacked. Thanks to the researches of Drs. Leishman, Donovan Sir Leonard Rogers, Brahmachari, etc., the disease now seems to be amenable to treatment, but our primary duty must be to find out the etiology of the disease, which, I am sorry to say, has not yet been fully worked out, and it is the investigation of this disease that this resolution aims at, and I therefore most heartily support it. The School of Tropical Medicine is going to be an accomplished fact before long, and we entertain very great hopes of finding out suitable treatment for this affection. But how this disease spreads; whether this disease has got any connection with malaria, as at one time it was supposed to have, needs solution, and early steps should be taken to investigate the disease in all its aspects. Mr. Barton has informed the Council that 80 per cent. of these cases are now cured by intravenous injection. But these statistics should always be accepted with a grain of salt, and I for one have seen very few cures by the present method of treatment in cases of kala-azar where the diagnosis was made by a thorough examination of blood and spleen puncture. With these words I beg to support the resolution.

Babu TANKANATH CHAUDHURI: I rise to support this resolution. I may add in this connection that the resolution does not go far enough. It suggests that steps should be taken for investigating the cause of the prevalence of kala-azar, but I think that steps should also be taken for preventing the spread of kala-azar as much as possible. Much has been said on this subject already, and I do not think I should take up the time of the Council in dealing with this further. I beg heartily to support this resolution.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I may at once say that I accept this resolution which has been moved by my friend Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur, and I am sure that the House will place Government in possession of funds that may be required for discovering the cause of the prevalence of kala-azar and also for the practical purpose of checking the spread of the disease. The line of Government action is of a twofold character. We should not only have to find out the cause of the disease, but, having ascertained that fact, we ought to adopt practical measures to fight kala-azar and to check its spread. So far as the investigation into the cause of the disease is concerned, it would be obvious that we have an institution ready to hand which would take it up with knowledge, and, I am sure, with efficiency. To that school my hon'ble friend Dr. Maitra has referred, namely, the School of Tropical Medicine. I am perfectly certain that the School of Tropical Medicine, equipped as it will be shortly for practical work, will be in a position to address itself to this very important task. Some reference has been made to the rate of mortality from kala-azar which was given by me in this House, and it has been suggested that the figures should be taken with a grain of salt. May I tell my hon'ble friend behind me (Mr. Barton) that I have given the Council the Corporation figures and I was quite justified in placing them before the Council as perfectly reliable and trustworthy, and unless and until these figures are challenged specifically and definitely by a different set of figures I am entitled to hold that they are correct. There may be an element of suspicion with regard to their accuracy, and perhaps it is justified because in many cases it would be difficult to differentiate between kala-azar and malarial fever, and a microscopic examination of the blood is necessary in order to ensure such differentiation. Therefore I am quite entitled to hold that the official figures which the Government has placed before this Council for acceptance are figures which, so far as they go, are reliable and trustworthy and must be accepted as such. Sir, I am very glad that my friend Rai Mahendra Chandra Mitra Bahadur has introduced this resolution before the House. He is an enthusiast in all matters relating to public health. He has given notice of another resolution regarding the cause of the prevalence of beriberi. My friend has thus afforded me an opportunity of placing before this Council and before the country all that Government has been doing in this connection and all that it means to do. I am afraid that my friend has been a little too hard upon the Government. I am afraid he seems to think, and there are others who think with him, that we have been allowing ourselves to go to sleep over the prevalence of kala-azar in the Tangail subdivision. The other day I was very much amused to read a letter which appeared in one of the newspapers purporting to be written by a retired servant of Government. In that letter the writer told the public that the "mush-room Ministers" had gone to sleep while kala-azar was decimating the Tangail subdivision. The writer in this case happens to be a man of science, and if there is one thing more than another which science teaches her votaries it is this—investigation first, judgement afterwards. But this man of science forgetting this elementary principle passed a verdict of condemnation upon the Government of Bengal without caring to inquire into the facts of the case. I desire to tell him and all else whom it may concern that we have not been inactive in this matter. As soon as I learnt from the newspapers that kala-azar was prevailing in a somewhat virulent form in the Tangail subdivision I at once placed myself in communication with the Sanitary Commissioner and we concerted measures and sent down instructions to the District Board to follow a constructive policy which we thought might be helpful. I am glad to be able to say and I have the assurance of the deputation to which I shall presently refer, that that policy is being energetically pursued by the District Board of Mymensingh. A deputation waited upon me this morning from Tangail subdivision consisting of many eminent representatives of that subdivision. There were present my friend Mr. S. M. Bose a member of this Council and the Raja of Santosh. These two gentlemen and the Subdivisional Officer of Tangail spoke to me with authority and a sense of responsibility. They informed me that the District Board had allotted Rs. 1,000 for operations in connection with kala-azar; further, that the work was being carried on systematically and with energy. Not only that; we are going to have 18 centres in the subdivision of Tangail for fighting kala-azar. There are to be six medical licentiates to be posted to each dispensary attached to the place and, not only that, there are to be two more centres for the admission of patients within five miles of these dispensaries. There will thus be as my friend has pointed out 18 centres, which will cover 425 square miles and about 900 to 1,000 villages. That represents the scope of the operations which are being undertaken to fight kala-azar in the Tangail subdivision. If my friend, the mover of this resolution, after hearing my speech and after having listened to these facts, still holds the opinion which he expressed in this House, that there has been a good deal of apathy on the part of Government, I claim on the basis of the facts which I have just stated, on the basis of the work which is being prosecuted with vigour and of the activities which Government have displayed in this connection—I claim, and I am sure I will have the House with me in this matter, that we have done our duty consistently with our resources, and subject to the advice and guidance that we are able to command.

It is necessary that I should put in a word of justification not only for myself as a member of the new Government but also for the old Government, which was not inactive in this matter. So far back as 1919 a survey of kala-azar was started by the Government of Bengal and a kala-azar survey was carried on in most of the Eastern districts—Mymensingh, Dacca, Tippera, Bakarganj and Faridpur, and Dr. Sur, who is in charge of this work, is now in Assam, carrying on a personal investigation, because it is understood that Assam is the centre and the seat of the disease. Well, that represents the work of the old Government; much of it was underground, much of it was not advertised; the Government worked in secrecy and silence and they did not care to reply to criticisms directed against them. Now I desire to raise a note of warning. It must not for one moment be supposed that kala-azar is confined to the eastern districts; nothing of the sort. The late Dr. Nott discovered several years back that there was kala-azar in the Murshidabad district and especially in the area between the Bhagirathi and the Chota Bhairab. Cases of kala-azar have been reported in the Burdwan district, and as my friend has observed also in the Rajshahi district, in Pabna, Rangpur and even in Calcutta. The Calcutta cases may be imported. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. We must try to realise the danger in which we are at the present moment and take necessary measures. There is that menace of kala-azar before us and we have to safeguard the population of Bengal against this terrible danger, more devastating in its consequences than even malarial fever. I think an Hon'ble Member has stated here that the mortality was 80 per cent. That statement is challenged; the mortality is believed to be higher; certainly a great deal more than the mortality from malarial fever. That being so, I ask the Council to be on their guard against the insidious advance of this terrible disease. We shall do our best with the organisation, staff and the resources that are at our disposal, but it is for you to vote the money. You hold the purse-strings; give us the money and then charge us with apathy if we neglect to apply it to the important purpose to which we are asked to devote it. I desire to raise this warning note and I hope it will be taken in the spirit in which it is made. With these remarks I desire to accept the resolution.

Maulvi SHAH ABDUR RAUF: I must thank the Government that this resolution has been accepted by the Hon'ble Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea, and after what he has said I need not add anything further. I support the resolution.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I have already addressed the House on the points which I wished to say. I have also listened to the speech of the Hon'ble Minister and I notice that he told me that I am an enthusiast. I have been long connected with medical institutions in the mufasssal. I have noticed the defects in the system of working. I thought it my duty to bring to the notice of the Council that there has been apathy on the part of Government. The Hon'ble Minister says that he had had a consultation with a few gentlemen of the Mymensingh district, but as yet no report of it has been published.

The Hon'ble Sir SURENDRA NATH BANERJEA: I have to correct my friend. The report has been published in to-day's paper.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I missed the report in to-day's paper. When I sent notice of this resolution I was not aware that any effective steps were taken by Government, and that was the reason why I complained to the House that there was apathy on the part of Government. I am delighted to see that the Hon'ble Minister has taken steps to eradicate the disease, which is certainly insidious in its character. I submit to the Council that the question which I have raised is not an easy one. In fact we find it stated that a death-wave is sweeping Bengal, and from personal experience I can say that it is necessary that effective steps should be taken; but the Hon'ble Minister assures me that he has already taken steps in this connection. I am greatly delighted to hear of it, and I shall cease to worry him and shall congratulate him when I find that he has actually done something to remove this scourge. The Council is aware that the Bengalis are a dying race. I am trying to find out the reasons which have affected the public health of Bengal, and the Hon'ble Minister will have to take trouble to devise means to improve the health of the people of the province.

The motion was then put and agreed to.

Steamship Companies.

Maulvi A. H. M. WAZIR ALI: "This Council recommends to the Government that immediate steps be taken to compel all steamship companies carrying on passenger traffic in Bengal, especially the India General Navigation and Railway and Rivers Steam Navigation Companies and their Managing Agents, to provide suitable waiting rooms at all their stations, and also that the abovenamed Companies be asked to reduce their rates of fare to the rate charged by any of the State-owned Railways in Bengal."

This resolution hardly requires any speech. It is of such a simple nature and of such a general character that it is within the easy ken of every one present here. I doubt if there is a single person who will oppose this resolution. In my resolution there are two prayers: firstly, it appeals to the Government to exact some of our legitimate dues from a few capitalists; and, secondly, it appeals to the Government to save us from the exploitation of the said capitalists. To our European friends here it may sound as an anomaly that there can be a station without a waiting room. But to us, the poor Bengalis, it is a hard matter of fact of every-day experience. I have travelled on most of the services run by the India General Navigation and Railway and Rivers Steam Navigation Companies, but I do not remember to have seen a single waiting room in any of their stations. Sir, you can easily imagine the sad lot and the untold miseries which the passengers using the stations of the abovenamed companies suffer. The sufferings of these poor passengers can better be imagined than described.

Sir, so long I have only attempted to give you a glimpse of our sufferings in general. Now I wish to refer to a few specific cases. There is a station called Hularhat on the K.N.M. service. It is a very important junction of several steamer services and used by nearly 400 passengers a day. It is also the station for the subdivisional town of Pirojpur in the district of Bakarganj. But Messrs. Macneill & Co., who are so very fond of flouting and riding rough-shod over public feelings and opinions, did not think it worth their while to provide a waiting room there. Sir, the Barisal express with a full load of passengers reaches there about 3 in the morning. Can anybody tell me where these unfortunate passengers, especially the poor helpless Indian ladies, will go at that ungodly hour? There is no waiting room, no human habitation near by, where these passengers can go and take shelter. These passengers and the passengers who want to embark from Hularhat have no other alternative than to expose themselves to the inclemencies of the weather for hours and hours together. Sir, it is impossible to describe their most pitiable condition. They suffer from the rigours of a chilly and biting cold in the winter, from torrential downpours during the rains, and from a tropical sun in all seasons. Messrs. Macneill & Co., not only do not provide any waiting room, but to crown all their misdeeds they drive away those unfortunate passengers who come to take shelter in their receiving flats and jetties. This is neither a barber's tale nor a barber's news. I say this from my own personal experience. Maulvi A. K. Fazl-ul Haq Sahib too had this unpleasant experience on the 1st of October, 1920, when he went to attend his mother's burial. Sir, I have faintly described the sufferings of the passengers in one station only, but that is the condition of the poor passengers at all their other stations as well. Hularhat may be taken as a type of the rest. You will be astonished to hear that the net profit of the company at the said station is nearly Rs. 1,00,000 per annum. It is not that they cannot make both ends meet with their little income, so they are not in a position to provide these little comforts to the passengers. They are simply piling money on the expense of our countrymen. The same tale is told everywhere.

The following is a table of a few of their important stations:—

	Rs
Barisal	2,00,000 No waiting room
Jhalakati	2,00,000 "
Nalchiti	1,00,000 "
Chittagoug	1,20,000 "
Nalmuri	1,25,000 "
Daulat Khan	50,000 "
Bhola	50,000 "
Boalmari	40,000 "
Boga	60,000 "

Sir, the cost of the said companies for maintaining their stations is very low in comparison with the railways. What a railway spends for one of their third-rate stations they do not spend that for their very best stations even. Jhalakati is one of their biggest stations with an earning of nearly Rs. 2,00,000 a year. Their various cost of maintaining the said station is not more than Rs. 12,000 a year. I think Rs. 12,000 is nothing pitted against Rs. 2,00,000. At every railway station, be it as unimportant as it may be, there is always a waiting-room, but if we only see with our eyes wide open we will find that the steamer companies have not got waiting rooms at all their important stations even. If anybody would take the trouble of visiting stations like Hatiya, Sandwip, Churlakshi, Kadirpur, and hundreds of others which are far removed from human habitations, then only would he realise the untold miseries and sufferings which the poor passengers suffer for want of waiting rooms. Messrs. Macneill & Co. are so ungenerous and unsympathetic that in a hurry to pile profits after profits they not only do not provide waiting rooms but also deliberately and wilfully refuse to keep in a habitable condition those waiting rooms and rest-houses which the public, pressed by dire necessity, build at their own expense. Take, for instance, the case of Kaukhali. The travelling public after undergoing hardships after hardships at last built a rest-house at their own expense. The company for their own benefit have removed the station to a distance of nearly a mile from the old site, but they did not think it worth their while to remove the said rest-house to their new station. This would not have cost them Rs. 25 even.

Sir, I think I have sufficiently proved that a waiting room is a dire necessity at a station, more especially at a steamer station, on account of the uncertainty of the arrival and departure of steamers. I have also proved that these companies have deliberately refused to provide rest-houses in utter disregard of public feelings.

Now coming to the second point, namely, reduction of the rates of fare. Sir, I think I have made a very modest request in this respect. In fairness to the railways I should have suggested that the rate of the steamer companies should be lower than the rate of the railways, because the latter have got to make a very vast outlay in the beginning which the steamer companies have not. Besides, the costs of the railway companies are much higher than those of the steamer companies. Under the Barisal agency they have got 209 stations, but of these 110 are "sircir" stations, that is, the cost of maintaining each of these stations is only Rs. 7-12 a month and not full Rs. 8 even. This very clearly shows how cheap their costs of maintaining most of their stations are. Look at the railway stations, how beautiful they are; look at the railway officials, how well paid they are; look at their workshops, how vast and expensive they are; in short, look all round them and you will find that they excel the steamer companies in every department. The cost of laying a mile of track, as I have been informed by the Traffic Manager, Eastern Bengal Railway, is a lakh of rupees. So, according to this calculation, the cost of laying a line from Barisal to Khulna would have been one crore and four lakhs. But what is the cost of the steamer companies in this direction? Nothing but a big Zero? The cost of the steamer companies in this direction is nil, as against one crore and four lakhs of the railway companies. Still the railway companies charge a lower rate than the steamer companies. The railways charge a fare and half of their third class fares for the intermediate class, but the steamer companies charge full two third class fares for their intermediate class. The railways never carry goods in a passenger train. They have got to run a separate service for carrying goods. But steamer companies can carry, and really do carry, both passengers and goods on one and the same vessel. The hold of a vessel is stuffed with goods, and so also the lower deck. Only the upper deck is reserved for the use of the passengers. Moreover, when necessity demands, railways provide additional trains, but these steamer companies will never do that. The steamers sometimes, especially during the Puja exodus and other Hindu festivals such as the Snan Jattras and Jogs, carry more passengers than they are licensed to carry. According to the license certificate the companies ought to allow the passengers to use the lower decks as well. But this they, in direct violation of their license regulations, never do. The result is that during the Pujas and other Hindu festivals passengers are hardly provided with seating accommodation even on the steamers that are used by the India General Navigation and Railway and Rivers Steam Navigation Companies are a very cheap means of transport. These steamers are so ill-furnished that, not to speak of their intermediate class compartments, their second class cabins even are not furnished with cushioned seats. In spite of all these the steamer companies delight to charge a very high rate from the helpless passengers. They have been emboldened to do so on account of the Government giving them a long rope to do as they please. A glance at the following figures will show how exorbitant the rates of the steamer companies are :—

Sir, I could have given you hundreds of other instances if Messrs Macneill & Co., had only condescended to sell to me a copy of the latest edition of their fare and distance tables and also a copy of their coaching tariff. I wrote to Messrs. Macneill & Co. expressing my desire to purchase some of their papers, old and new. They wrote to me in reply that they had no spare copies of their old papers. Then I sent my man to purchase copies of the latest edition of their fare tables and coaching tariffs, but they refused to sell them. During the Easter holidays while I was at Barisal I sent my cousin to buy copies of the and books from their Barisal agency, but they also refused to sell them. In these time tables and coaching tariffs are sold by all companies except Messrs. Macneill & Co. This clearly shows that their conduct is not fair and above board.

Sir, not only do they charge a very high rate, but they are also always in the habit of increasing their fares without any justification whatsoever. And the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr told the House the day before yesterday, in reply to a question put by me regarding the said companies, that these enhanced rates do not cause any inconvenience or hardship to anybody. How can the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr know from his Secretariat chair whether these enhanced fares cause hardship or not? If he really wants to know, let him take the trouble of going round these stations and inquire whether these systematically periodic increments cause hardship or not. There is, moreover, another reason which may account for the blissful ignorance of the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Marine Department. The reason is that first and second class fares have been left unassailed and only the third class fares have been increased. It is only the wearer who knows best where the shoe pinches. Is the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr aware that meetings were held at Barisal early in December last vehemently protesting against this nefarious practice of the said companies? The public are so very excited that they are thinking of inviting Messrs. Bando & Co. to open steamer services throughout the whole of Bengal. This unfortunate utterance of the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr will give a fresh impetus to the steamer companies to increase their fares furthermore.

A moment's consideration will show how fond Messrs. Macneill & Co. and their partners are of increasing their fares:—

Sir, not only their fares increase year after year, but the distance also increases from one station to another, according to their computation. In the joint companies' fare tables for 1914 the distance from Barisal to Chittagong is shown as 139 miles, but in coaching tariff circular No. 187, dated Barisal, the 8th February, 1915, the distance is shown as 141 miles. The distance from Hularhat to Kaukhali, as shown on page 41, joint companies' fare tables, 1921, is 2 miles and the distance is actually 2 miles. But in a circular issued on 1st March, 1918, the distance is shown as 4 miles. So I propose that the task of calculating the distance from one station to another be undertaken by Government and the cost be levied from the said companies.

Sir, according to an antediluvian reckoning Barisal was 104 miles from Khulna, and the companies, deliberately and dishonestly winking at the fact that the distance has been reduced by 12 miles on account of the dredging of the Gabkhan canal, are still putting the same figure on their tickets and robbing the passengers thereby in an indirect way.

The distance from Kaukhali to Barisal is at present, on account of the short route through the Gabkhan canal, not 35 miles but only 23 miles, and for these 23 miles the steamer companies are charging annas 13-3, i.e., more than double the fare that the railways would have charged. In fact, the said companies are plundering the people in a scientific way.

Sir, before I sit down I wish to draw the attention of the House to another fact. Formerly the charge for one maund of luggage from Calcutta to Barisal was Rs. 2 and for 10 seers, annas 8. Now the charge for one maund has been, at the instance of Messrs. Macneill & Co., increased to Rs. 2-13. But the funniest part of the thing is this, that while they charge Rs. 2-13 for one maund, they charge Re. 1-2 for 10 seers. I think, Sir, a new Sir Isaac Newton has been born in the dusty shelves of Messrs. Macneill & Co., at No. 2, Clive Ghat Street, who has propounded this new theory of ratio and proportion for them.

Sir, when I move this resolution I have got the backing of the whole country behind me. The resolution was very highly commended and ably supported by almost all the leading Indian newspapers, such as the Amrita Bazar Patrika, the Bengalee, the Basumati and the Nabajug.

Sir, with your kind permission I would like to read a passage from the Amrita Bazar Patrika dated the 3rd April, 1921:—

Maulvi Wazir Ali, an elected member of the district of Bakarganj, has given notice of a useful resolution which is likely to come up for discussion in the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council to-morrow (Monday). The inconveniences suffered by the travelling public for want of suitable resting places at the steamer stations of the river districts of Bengal are so well known that we need hardly recapitulate them over and again. The times of arrivals and departures of steamers are not and, in fact, cannot be certain, like railway trains. Passengers are therefore sometimes compelled to wait for hours, and consequently the necessity of some sort of shelter cannot be too strongly emphasised. The steamer companies earn fat revenue from the river districts of Bengal, and there is no reason why they should not be compelled to make suitable arrangements for the convenience of the travelling public. Maulvi Wazir Ali's resolution requesting the Government to ask the steamer companies to build sheds in all stations is a modest and reasonable one, and we see no reason why this resolution should not be accepted unanimously. Further, the Maulvi's demand for reducing the fares has our whole-hearted support, and in the interest of the poor people of this country the members of the Council should have no hesitation to accept this very reasonable demand.

Sir, with these few words, I commend my resolution for the acceptance of the House.

Babu NIBARAN CHANDRA DAS GUPTA: I do not like to make a long speech on this subject. It would have been better, if my friend and colleague in Council, Mr. J. E. Roy, representing the steamer companies, had been here. I regret his absence. I rise simply to bear testimony to some of the allegations made in the speech of the mover.

With regard to the point of rest-houses and waiting rooms at the steamer stations, I think the inconvenience to the public is tremendous. Of course, I fully appreciate the difficulties of the companies in erecting rest-houses and waiting rooms, because the river-bed is constantly changing and there is constant cutting away of the river banks. There is the same difficulty in having permanent rest-houses. Not considering the inconvenience to the travelling public, there is no reason why temporary rest-houses, to give shelter to the ladies and children during the rains and in the hottest part of the summer, should not be erected. This question was also brought to the notice of the District Board of Bakarganj some years ago—I was then a member of the District Board—the steamer companies promised to have rest-houses at some of the more important stations. Since then, nothing has been done. I think this is due to the golmal in every part of the world, not only in this country, owing to the war, and it is very necessary that the attention of the steamer companies should now be drawn to these facts. It is a very small matter—the erection of temporary or permanent rest-houses where practicable, at all important stations. This can be easily done, and I think if the steamer companies took up the question in right earnest, the District Board of Bakarganj and the district boards of other places concerned, will be only too glad to come to the help of the steamer companies and have the rest-houses erected.

With regard to the rise in the rates of fares, I can say that the rise has been steady, and it does affect, very materially, the poor travelling public. Now these steamer companies have, in a manner, the monopoly of navigation throughout the rivers of Eastern Bengal, and they are taking advantage of that position. There is no other rival company; it gives rise to a very important question, the question of the State management of railways and of steamer companies. Of course, this is a very large question, and a question like this should have been brought before the Legislative Assembly of India, and I think we shall have a definite pronouncement after the report of the Railway Commission is submitted to the Government of India. Of course the recommendations of the Railway Commission, with regard to the nationalisation of these railways, will affect steamer companies as well, but so far as this Council is concerned, I do not quite see what we can do in the matter.

It is a matter within the competence of these private companies, and our recommendations will be of no use—of no practical use—unless that recommendation is accepted; Government interference in a matter like this may be resented by private companies. Nevertheless, I think this is a matter which should be discussed and fairly debated upon by the District Board of Bakarganj, which is the proper place where this question should be discussed. At any rate, I thank the mover of the resolution for drawing the attention of the Government and the public to this all-important matter. It affects public convenience greatly, and I think the mover's speech would have been very much appreciated by the Railway Commission, if it was placed before it; though it refers particularly to the steamer companies. They are almost on the same ground, that is to say, whether these companies should be allowed to run their business, on lines chosen by them, or whether the State should take up the management of the railway and the steamer companies. This is a very large question, it affects the public very much, and I think the time is not very far off when the question shall have to be considered, and we shall have to face an important aspect of it, viz., whether we should nationalise the railways and these steamer companies.

One word more, and I have done. With regard to the rates of fares, suppose we ask the companies—I do not know how the Government can ask—to reduce the fares, and if they refuse to do so, how can we compel them? All that we can do is to ask them. But what is the good of merely asking? Will not there be some loss of dignity on the part of the Government if they ask private companies to do something and they refuse? The Government have no authority and cannot force their will upon the companies. That is the situation. I do not oppose this resolution and I have already said so before. I thank the mover of the resolution for drawing attention to a very real grievance of the public.

Dr. HASSAN SUHRAWARDY: The details of the resolution have been very well threshed out by the mover himself and I do not wish to go over the same ground again. I, however desire to point out that there is no doubt that the initial capital expenditure, and the recurring maintenance and working expenses of the railways are very much higher than those incurred by the steamer Companies. They have not to fill up and consolidate low-lying marshy lands, level up hilly tracts, construct bridges and tunnels to lay their roads. The steamer companies utilise nature's gift, the great waterways of Bengal, as their ready-made permanent way; these in most cases do not require any maintenance expenditure, nor have the steamer companies to entertain a special expert staff of block and signal engineers and carriage examiners to ensure safety and comfort. But in spite of all these advantages and consequently large outturn of profits the disparity between the two means of carrying passengers is very remarkable indeed. I do not mean their rate of locomotion. I mean the difference in the notices between the comforts and facilities offered to the travelling public, by the two undertakings. At the railway stations we find that trains nearly always arrive and depart at the hours stated in the time table, but such punctuality is not the case with the steamer companies. It may be due to the varying tides, sudden hurricanes, shifting sands and other natural causes. However, whatever the contributing causes may be, the fact remains that passengers have to wait longer at stations on the river system than on the railway system. And therefore it is very desirable that at steamer stations suitable waiting rooms should be provided by the companies that run the line, as is the practice at every railway station. Want of suitable waiting rooms, or even of temporary sheds to be utilised for that purpose, is very keenly felt, especially by the Indian community, who travel with their women folk, whose needs are too well known to require repetition. I believe a great deal of hardship and discomfort is experienced by all classes of passengers, as in many places even a temporary shed to take shelter from the sun and the rains are not provided. Then again, as a steamer journey takes longer than a railway journey, one would naturally expect that suitable arrangements should be made at a station and on board the steamer for providing fresh and wholesome food to the passengers. Here again we find the railways providing arrangements for Indian and European refreshments, under the supervision of a regular staff of European and Indian food inspectors. I do not think the Indian passengers on our inland steamers get anything excepting old puri and mithai and sometimes stale tarkari. A little re-arrangement for cooking accommodation on board a steamer for both Hindu and Muhammadan passengers will provide necessary means for supplying fresh Indian food to such passengers on the same lines as is done in the non-orthodox European style for the upper class passengers. Such arrangements will go a long way to materially add to the comfort of the poorer classes of the Indian travelling public—not to speak of their being conducive to their health and preventing diseases.

I do not know whether we have the power of “compelling” private companies to do what the resolution recommends. I have, however, no doubt that the Hon’ble Mr. Kerr, whose sympathies with us are well known, will find some ways and means for ensuring comfort and safety to the poorer class of Indian passengers. Government has the power of granting charters and licenses to steamers, and they may so upset the profitable business of carrying of goods, that the request from the Hon’ble Member in charge of Commerce, even in the absence of a direct power of compulsion, will make the Directors of the steamer companies seriously think over the expediency of taking early steps for providing waiting rooms and ensuring other facilities, to Indian passengers, by steamer companies at the different stations of Bengal, where steamers ply for passengers.

Babu ANNADA CHARAN DUTTA: I am sorry in this resolution I have to part company with my friend Maulvi A. H. M. Wazir Ali on principle. The steamer companies, two of which have been specially mentioned in this resolution are, after all, private concerns, and their dealings with the public are governed by the ordinary law of contract, supplemented by a few provisions of the Carriers' Act. In none of these, I believe, has Government got any direct power to intervene in any of those matters between the public and the steamer companies. I do not suggest for a moment that if any particular policy of importance is at stake, such as we have recently had between the Tramways Company and its employees, then it is the duty of the powers that be to interfere and make matters smooth. But in the present resolution, there is nothing to be met with which really requires such particular attention from the Government, because at certain places certain waiting rooms are more or less necessary, or because at certain other places the company charges fares under certain rules, which do not compare favourably with those obtaining in railway companies. There is a great deal of difference between railway companies and steamer companies. In my professional capacity, I have done the work of both companies for several years. Railway companies are governed by the Railway Act. Under the Railway Act we have got risk notes, and guarantees, and the law has invested the Governor General in Council with power to make certain rules. On the one hand the railway company has got a great deal of advantage by reason of risk notes and such other favourable provisions which do not apply to steamer companies. On the other hand, the rate of fares in the case of railway companies has to be determined by law, whereas, as regards private companies, the rate of fares has to be determined by various factors which are governed by the exigencies and necessities of trade.

Having been connected with these two companies for some years in my capacity as their retained pleader, I know a great deal of these companies. The bright picture which the mover has drawn of the companies earning so much that it amounts to exploitation of the public, is not true; I do not say that the companies are insolvent, far from that; but I know there is a great deal of difficulty under which these companies run the services, and we are very apt to forget the advantages which the company has brought to us. In former years, before we had the steamers at these places, we know how native sloops had to come from Chittagong via the Sunderbans and how, sometimes at a great risk of life and property, it took us 10 or 15 days to reach place like Barisal, Khulna, etc. The steamer companies have really shortened the distance and given great facilities. I do not mean to suggest at the same time, that the inconveniences which have been referred to by the mover of this resolution should not be removed, but I believe that if proper representation is made to these companies, they will be the first to adopt suggestions for the improvement of their own business, and at least meet us half-ways. But there are stations, such as Goalundo, where the landing stage has to be shifted every two or three months where it is really impossible to suggest the building of any permanent structure. But in those places some shelter is afforded by the receiving flats, and at the other stations some amount of shelter is provided at the stations themselves.

In these circumstances, the main question that arises is, since the steamer companies are running the service as a private concern, whether there is such an important policy involved,—such as the companies taking advantage of their position as monopolists, as to call for interference on the part of the Government? I do not see any reason why the absence of a few waiting rooms should necessitate Government interference. If Government is going to interfere in these matters I do not see how they can avoid interference with private companies always. I can well see the mischievous result if Government interfere with the liberty of trade.

Coming to the rates of fares, I have also taken certain figures; the rates never exceed 4 pies per mile between Goalundo and Chandpur. These rates differ and in many stations are lower. For carrying mails better class of steamers have got to be kept; navigation is very difficult in the Padma and great expense has to be incurred to keep the mail steamers up to the high standard of efficiency. But when you go to more distant places, such as, Dibrugarh, the rate is less than 3 pies. From Calcutta to Chittagong the direct route costs 4 pies including the Assam-Bengal Railway fare. The Assam-Bengal Railway fare is 4 pies a mile; from Calcutta to Chandpur it is 4 pies per mile; from Goalundo to Chandpur also 4 pies and if you go to other places such as Fenchuganj and Badarpur, it is less than 3 pies. In the Ganges service it is not more than 2 pies a mile, because it is a safer service. So many things have got to be considered, not only the capability of the people to pay, but also the question of competition, difficulties of the route, expense of upkeep, etc. It is all very well to say that the steamer companies are earning Rs. 2 lakhs at a station and therefore they should spend Rs. 1½ lakhs on the convenience of passengers; this is a very superficial way of judging things, and I submit that the Council should not take it up and force the hands of Government to make any recommendation in a matter like this.

Babu NITYA DHON MUKHERJEE: We have heard the mover of the resolution on behalf of the public; we have heard Mr. Wazir Ali, and we have also heard the case of the steamer companies from Mr. A. C. Dutta; we also expect to hear the Government point of view from the Hon'ble Member. Now I really sympathise with the supporters of the resolution for having put forward so many facts in its support. It is absolutely necessary, as suggested in the first part of the resolution, that there should be waiting rooms or places for rest provided for passengers. Just imagine the difficulties of people, respectable or otherwise, waiting for many hours with families and children, in the sun and rain in expectation of steamers coming! It is absolutely necessary that these companies should, as far as practicable, make suitable waiting rooms for these passengers.

As regards the second portion of the resolution the reduction of fares, my friend has said that there has been exploitation of the public. Well, we are not in possession of facts and figures to endorse that view. But there is one thing which strikes me in the resolution, and that is that it asks that immediate steps be taken to compel all steamship companies to do certain things.

I do not know how the Hon'ble Member will reply, or how far Government have got the power to compel these private companies to do this. If any member of this House brings in future a resolution that Government should interfere and compel private companies or zamindars, or private individuals, to do something, I think all non-official members will oppose the resolution. Now practically it comes to this: that Government will be asked to compel these steamship companies to do certain things. If Government had the power to do that, some day or other, I think, one member may wish to bring up a motion that in certain khas mahals Government realise rent at a certain rate, therefore all the zamindars in that locality should be compelled to realise their rent from their tenants at the same rate. In this Council there was a great uproar about the high charges of the Hon'ble High Court for making paper books. One day we may hear of a member sending in a motion that the High Court should be compelled to reduce the amount of charges for making paper books. No doubt my friend's object is very sympathetic and helpful to the public, but I think, at the same time, the wording of the resolution should be changed. These companies are private companies, some of them have a small capital. How can Government compel them by law to reduce their rates and incur heavy expenditure? The result will be that they will have to be wound up! It is desirable that my friend should change the wording of his motion so as to make it such as Government may help the public in this matter.

Babu INDU BHUSHAN DUTTA: I am not surprised that the motion has been opposed by my friend Babu Annada Charan Dutta, who has confessed himself to be the retained pleader of these two companies. I must say, this Council is not the place for such special pleading. In a matter like this, I should have hesitated several times before supporting a resolution which attempted to take away the liberties of private companies, but I know that these two companies, which have been specially mentioned in this resolution, are in the nature of monopolist companies in the waterways of Bengal and Eastern Bengal. These two companies, the Indian General Navigation and Railway Company and the Rivers Steam Navigation Company, have been enjoying a sort of monopoly; and they, with the advantages of large capital and large staff, have, I believe, sometimes endeavoured to stifle Indian companies who tried to compete with them in small waterways. I do not know whether it is known to Babu Annada Charan Dutta, but I have been told (I stand to correction if I am mistaken) that some Indian gentlemen, once, tried to start a service with two steamers. But what did the I.G.N. and R.S.N. people do? I believe that they carried passengers without charging any fares (I have also heard it said, but I am quite certain, that they promised to give away handkerchiefs to passengers who travelled by their steamers). This is the sort of company against whom we are asked to take steps. They are practically monopolist companies, and I say, without fear of contradiction, that the public have a right to enforce their views in connection with matters which touch the public more seriously than the companies themselves.

Babu Annada Charan Dutta has said that these companies do not earn large dividends, as has been asserted by the mover of this resolution, but he has taken good care not to mention what those dividends are. May I know from him what dividends they earn? Did they come here out of pity for us to start the service? I think it would have been better for Babu Annada Charan Dutta to ask this Council to vote an address of welcome to these companies for the great work of charity that they have come to do in this part of the country.

There are certain regulations which are always insisted on every company before a license is granted by Government to utilise their steamers for carrying passengers. I shall not go into the details of what these regulations are, but I beg to submit that the necessity of having waiting rooms at every steamer station should be and ought to be one of those conditions which must be insisted upon by Government. I do not know if my friend, Babu Annada Charan Dutta, has had the good fortune or rather the misfortune of waiting at a wayside station in the burning heat of the tropical sun or in the torrential rains. Perhaps, he has not had that misfortune, and that is the reason why he spoke so glibly that there is no necessity of having such waiting rooms. But those who have had the great misfortune of having to wait in the rains or in the burning sun at some of the wayside stations know what that means. There are hundreds of passengers, who have to go through the sad experience daily and they know what this means. To ask for certain waiting rooms is such a small matter, that I am struck with surprise that it can be opposed by any serious member of this Council.

As regards the fares, we believe that large dividends are earned by these two companies, but we need not go into the details. As has been pointed out by the mover of this resolution, the steamer companies have not to spend anything for making permanent tracks and keeping them up, like the railway companies. They have the use of the natural waterways and rivers of Bengal, and I do not know whether they have any dredgers to improve the waterways. If they had any dredgers, we should not have been asked to vote such a large sum for the Grand Trunk Canal scheme; because, I believe that it was at the instance of these very steamer companies whom Babu Annada Charan Dutta wishes to help, and because they complained that the channels and waterways of the Sunderbans were silting up, that the Grand Trunk Canal scheme became necessary. If they were enthusiastic in their love for us, could they not spend some amount of money for dredgers? Under these circumstances, as we find that these companies have not to pay anything for the upkeep of the route, we ought to support this resolution wholeheartedly.

As regards the question of compulsion, I do not know what powers the Government have, but I do suppose that the Government have the power to compel the steamer companies to reduce their fares and to insist on certain conditions being fulfilled before licenses are granted to them as carriers of the public.

Maulvi EKRAMUL HUQ: In order to get enlightened on the subject I had to hear with attention the address just delivered by the mover of the resolution. I was labouring under a disadvantage, because I feared that I might be called upon to speak at a time when the opposite side of the question was not before the Council. But fortunately that drawback was removed, as my friend, Babu Annada Charan Dutta, has pleaded the case of the company before the Council. Certainly, from the facts and figures of the case as laid before the Council by the mover of the resolution it is quite plain that the company is not looking after the convenience of the public, but to my mind it is catering for its own greed and avarice. It is in fact right and proper that whatever company be formed in this country it should first of all look to the interest of the public; it is a wonder that this company which has all along been carrying passengers from station to station, has not seen it proper to have waiting rooms for passengers. This it could easily have done if it had a mind by keeping separate flats at every station. This, I am sure, would have removed the inconvenience.

The next thing on which a complaint has been made is that the rate of fare is much higher than what we are called upon to pay for railway journeys. This is also a complaint which could quite legitimately be made by the public, and arrangements should be made in order to see that this is removed. It might be said that the Government have no power to compel the company, and this has in fact been urged by Mr. Dutta. We may not have power to do so at the present moment so far as this resolution is concerned, but we know this much, that if in the first instance the Steam Navigation Company is asked to do as we desire, it knows that a request from the Government means that the company must comply with it or else it will have to wind up. If we had any fear that if this company were to go, there would be no substitute to take its place in this country, then we would have hesitated to take steps; but as has been pointed out, several other companies were started but their efforts were stifled by this company, and from this, it is quite plain that there are people in this country who want to have companies of their own. Even if there were no enterprising persons in this country eager to start such companies, then we could have asked the Government submissively that it was the duty of the Government to see that companies were started on the lines of the Eastern Bengal Railway Company. Under the circumstances we should not hesitate to support the resolution and compel the company to do what is right.

At this stage the Council was adjourned for 15 minutes.

On the Council reassembling the President called upon the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr to reply.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of COMMERCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): This resolution recommends the Government to compel the steamer companies to provide waiting rooms and to ask them to reduce their fares. I am not sure why the mover has made this distinction between the provision of waiting rooms and the reduction of the fares. But I think it will save a good deal of the misunderstanding that appears to exist if I explain at once that Government have no powers of compulsion whatever in regard to either of these matters. The legal position has been quite correctly stated by Babu Nibaran Chandra Das Gupta and Babu Annada Charan Dutta; and if it is true, as has been alleged, that Mr. Dutta is the legal representative of the steamer companies, it only adds weight to his view of the legal position. We have of course certain powers of control over the steamer companies under the Inland Steam Navigation Act. Under the provisions of that Act their steamers have to be surveyed and their officers have to be licensed by Government, and so forth, but we have no more power to compel the steamer companies to provide waiting rooms or to reduce their fares, than we have the power to compel Messrs. Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co. to provide waiting rooms for their customers or to sell their goods at certain rates. It is of course true that the comfort and efficiency of the steamer services is a matter of some public interest; and we can, if we think it justifiable, make representations to the steamer companies in compliance with any requests that are made in this Council. I have no doubt that the steamer companies will be willing to listen to any reasonable requests or representations; but I submit that they should be reasonable and expressed in a reasonable manner. I do not think that in a matter like this it is in the real interest of the mover of the resolution and his friends that they should come to this Council and accuse the companies of dishonesty and of robbing the public, and so on.

Well, we have been in communication with the steamer companies with regard to these matters. I am sorry that Mr. Roy is not here to-day to defend the companies. I understand that he has been obliged to leave Calcutta. It is not my business to defend the companies; it is merely my business to state the facts as I find them. In regard to the question of waiting rooms, the companies have told us that they took up this question so far back as 1913; and they have since then erected a number of waiting rooms at steamer ghats and steamer stations; but during the war, owing to want of materials, the work was suspended; and the companies now say that they are prepared to proceed with the construction of waiting rooms at places where they are required, as soon as the price of materials falls to a reasonable level. They have told us further that they have been in communication with district boards and have made an offer to share with the district boards the cost of construction of waiting rooms at certain places where such construction would save the district boards from erecting rest-houses. From what they tell us I gather that the negotiations with the district boards have not made any great progress so far, and the companies tell us that the Bakarganj District Board have intimated that they have not sufficient funds for the purpose. This seems to me rather a pity, and subject to what the Hon'ble the Minister in charge of Local Self-Government may think, it seems to me that this is a matter which greatly concerns local convenience and that local bodies might very well take it up with advantage to the residents in the areas with which they are concerned. The companies, however, warn us that it would be impracticable to erect waiting rooms at all stations owing to the changes which become necessary in the position of steamer ghats when the rivers change their course. The mover of the resolution has mentioned a number of places, where waiting rooms are said to be urgently necessary; and we will bring this point to the notice of the steamer companies; in fact I propose to send a complete record of this discussion to the steamer companies for their consideration.

As to the matter of fares, I also have got figures comparing the railway fares with those of the steamer companies. I am not sure whether it is very sound to compare the two things. I do not pretend to be a steamer expert or a railway expert, although in my present capacity I seem to be expected to know everything about all industries, from printing presses to tramways. However, there seem to be several good reasons why we cannot compare steamers with railway undertakings. The mover of the resolution has told us that it costs a lakh of rupees to lay a mile of railway track, and he says that the steamer companies do not have to undertake any expenditure like this. That no doubt is true, but I think he forgets that on railway tracks you can run traffic at all hours of the day and night; whereas a steamer can only carry a limited amount of traffic in each trip. However, as I say, I am not an expert in these matters and I do not wish to say much about it. In regard to the actual figures which I have got, they show that on the main lines the steamer companies' fares vary from 3·3 pies per mile to 4·4 pies; the difference, I suppose, is due largely to the size of the steamers and the expenses of the establishment which have to be kept up on particular runs. The railway companies' fares on main lines vary between 3 and 4 pies per mile, which is a little less than the steamer fares. On the branch lines, the steamer companies charge from 2·53 pies to 3 pies per mile, which is considerably less than the railway fares on feeder and branch lines, which vary from 4 pies to 4½ pies per mile. On the whole, then, it may be said that there is nothing much to complain about in regard to the steamer fares from the point of view of comparison with the railway fares. A more important point is what the recent enhancements in steamer fares have amounted to. As regards this, I gave some particulars to the Council on the 4th April in answer to a question. I showed in my answer that intermediate and third class fares on all steamer services were increased by 10 per cent. in 1916 and again by 10 per cent. in January, 1921. In addition to this on three branch lines third class fares were increased by 10 per cent. in 1919; that is to say, since the war, the steamer companies' fares have been increased by only 20 per cent. on most lines and by 30 per cent. on certain branch lines. But having regard to the great increase in the cost of working the steamers, the increase of the cost of stores and in the payment of staff, the increase of the cost of repairs, and most important of all the rise in the price of coal, I do not think that we can say that the increases in fares which the steamer companies have effected can be regarded as excessive. I do not say that these increases have not caused a certain amount of hardship to the public and I did not say so in my answer. I said that Government were not aware that these increases had caused great hardship and inconvenience to the travelling public and that is perfectly true, as Government have not received any representation on the subject. I have no doubt that these increases do cause some hardship and inconvenience to poor people to whom a few annas is a matter of importance, but my point is whether we can call the increases which the steamer companies have effected during the last five years excessive, having regard to the circumstances I have mentioned. I do not think that Government would be justified at the present time in making representations to the steamer companies in the matter of fares. Government cannot, as I have indicated, accept the resolution as it stands, because it asks Government to do something which Government have no power to do. We shall, however, be prepared to send the record of this discussion to the steamer companies and ask them to consider the matter.

At this stage, Babu Bhabendra Chandra Ray and the Maharaja of Nadia moved that the closure be put.

The motion that the question be now put, was put and agreed to.

The PRESIDENT: The mover of the resolution has asked for permission to amend his motion by omitting the words "immediate steps be taken to compel" and putting in their stead the words "be asked." If there is no objection to this, the amended motion will run as follows:—

"This Council recommends to the Government that all steamship companies carrying on passenger traffic in Bengal, especially the India General Navigation and Railway and Rivers Steam Navigation Companies and their Managing Agents be asked to provide suitable waiting rooms at all their stations, and also that the abovenamed companies be asked to reduce their rates of fare to the rate charged by any of the State-owned railways in Bengal."

This was agreed to and on the amended motion being put, a division was taken with the following result:—

Bengal Pilot Service.

Rai Dr. HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: "This Council recommends to the Government—

(a) that immediate effect be given to the decision of the Public Services Commission to amend the rules prescribing that candidates for the Bengal Pilot Service must be Europeans or the descendants of European or Anglo-Indian parents;

(b) that application be made for the appointment of officers in England only after the Bengal Government is satisfied that no suitable candidates are available locally, and that experience in a sailing-vessel be not regarded as an essential qualification for admission to the service as decided by the Public Services Commission in 1916;

(c) that the foreign and travelling scholarships proposed to be given during the years for literary and other studies be made available for students willing to proceed to England for a Board of Trade certificate of competency as second mate or to join a mercantile training ship for master's certificate."

The resolution I have the privilege to submit to this Council aims at the removal of a long standing grievance of the sons of the soil against their most unjustifiable exclusion from the Pilot and wharfage services with the result that there is not a single Indian Pilot or Indian Harbour Master in the Port of Calcutta. The exclusion is so very unjustifiable that the Public Services Commission have peremptorily decided that this most invidious racial distinction must at once be removed.

Sir, the time is very short or I would have quoted at length from the report of the Public Services Commission. But on page 292 of their report, the Commissioners say that "there is no justification for excluding Non-Europeans from the Service on racial grounds. Further at page 293, we find: "the change we recommend is in regard to the rule prescribing that candidates for appointment must have served for two years in a square rigged sailing vessel. Sailing ships no longer come to Calcutta and experience in the handling of such vessels need no longer be regarded as an essential item in the training of a Hooghly pilot.

This regulation is also open to the objection that it operates unfairly against local candidates who for the most part are denied the opportunity of obtaining employment on sailing ships. We recommend that the rule should be abolished."

Next I quote from the minutes by Sir Abd-ur-Rahim at page 469: "In the department there are 55 officers of whom 39 are Europeans and 16 Anglo-Indians. They are paid from fees and their earnings vary between Rs. 600 and Rs. 2,000 or more a month. The present rules exclude Indians of pure Asiatic descent and I agree in the recommendation of the majority that the bar should be removed. This, however, will have no practical result unless the Government of Bengal sees its way to provide facilities for the training of Indian youths for the work. There is at present a class of Muhammadans in Bengal" (he evidently forgot the Nurpur fishermen who are Hindus) "who would be extremely well suited for pilots' duties if trained. Many of them have proved themselves excellent navigators on the difficult rivers in Eastern Bengal and on the Hooghly. In fact the inland navigation of Bengal is mostly managed by them. They are generally self-trained and their educational qualifications are of a rudimentary character. But boys of this community, if trained, would supply very efficient material for the service."

From these quotations it is evident that the Public Services Commission not only recommended the removal of the racial bar against the Indians but also decided that in no case the Secretary of State should be asked to appoint any one to fill up the appointment until the same had been locally advertised. The wonder is that though in all other points about the increment of pay and pension regarding the recommendations of the Public Services Commission have been fully given effect to, these two definite decisions, which they found necessary to move an unsupportable and objectionable racial distinction are still being delayed. The plea that might be adduced is that no Indian would be available for such a service and there are none at present qualified for any of the posts. But is it not a commonsense view of the matter that until this fatal seal of racial exclusion be removed no Indian would be so very foolish as to undergo the expense and trouble to qualify for such posts? If anybody would doubt as to the capacity of Indians to undertake nautical work, I would invite him to watch the working of the Harbour Masters and Pilots in the port. It is no exaggeration to say that the highly paid Pilots and Harbour masters are often helpless without the active co-operation of the Nurpur fishermen. These poor Indians have admittedly been found very useful in the management of vessels up and down the Hooghly. Indian laskars, sukanees and serangs have firmly established their reputation even in the sea and the Government have recognised their services during the last naval warfare. For the information of those who hold that an educated Indian will never come forward for this service even when the racial bar is removed, I might here mention that, fighting against innumerable odds, one Bengali youth has already been successful in obtaining a berth as an officer in a merchant ship. I am proud to mention here the name of another Bengali who unfortunately for our country is no longer in this world. The memory of Lieutenant Roy is still green. He succeeded in entering His Majesty's Air Service during the late war and lost his life in France but not before attaining distinction in that service. Bengalis have never been found wanting in any sphere of activity provided they are afforded opportunities and had this disqualification been removed earlier, I believe, we might have been in a position to count a number of Bengali names in the nautical service of this country. We should not forget that with this iniquitous racial bar staring them in the face no parents or guardians can allow their wards, however adventure-loving they may be, to adopt a course of life which can land them nowhere. There may be exceptions, and who has not heard of Captain Suresh joining the Brazilian service to satisfy his military and naval predilections. But unless these prejudicial restrictions be expunged no one with a normal frame of mind would indulge in having a training in such lines for a pastime.

The essential point now is—unless the Government is determined to flout the decisions of the Public Services Commission—to amend the rules of recruitment and to give wide publicity to the new condition after doing away with the racial disqualifications and sailing ship experience. But this is not all. As we have no training ships here and as all steamship lines are in the hands of foreigners, Government must hold out some encouragement to Bengali youths to go to England to qualify for the Board of Trade Certificate as master or to be trained in the training ships Conway and Worcester as second mate. For this as an experiment one or two scholarships should at once be offered. If there be any want of money, I would suggest diverting some of the educational qualifications offered by Government for various studies, namely, Comparative Philology, Critical method of learning oriental languages, etc. There is some apprehension that these young men on coming back may not find any ready berth at once or it may so happen that the various steamship companies may from racial prejudice refuse to take them in their services and thus they may get stranded. I, however, do not see the validity of such an argument or any reasonableness in such apprehension. As a matter of fact Government never guarantee any scholar to provide him with suitable appointment on return. I know of State Scholars in Agriculture now carrying on business of their own and one in Philology has returned about four years ago and has not yet got any appointment. I cannot therefore accept the plea of the want of immediate prospect as a valid argument against establishing one or two scholarships to train our youths as naval officers, masters or second mates and make them eligible for the posts of pilots and harbour masters, if not as officers and masters in troopships, mercantile marines, etc. Some of these scholarship holders may go in for degrees in Naval Architecture and on return may find employment in the Royal Indian Docks in Calcutta or Bombay or in any of the private docks.

In conclusion, my humble submission is that Government has, without any justification whatsoever, neglected to carry out the clear and distinct decisions of the Public Services Commission and cannot with any decency make any further delay in blotting out this racial incapacity for Indian youths to enter this service in the ports of Calcutta etc., and I earnestly request the authorities to give practical proof of their sympathy by arranging to grant suitable scholarships for nautical training abroad.

Rai MAHENDRA CHANDRA MITRA Bahadur: I have great pleasure in seconding this resolution which aims at removing an anomaly in the service conditions of a most important department of the State. In the Public Services Commission report the subject of to-day's resolution was dealt with in all its aspects. It seems to me a puzzle that practical effect has not been given to the recommendations of the Commission in this particular matter all this time. Certain statements of the officers of the Pilot service made before the Commission as well as a portion of the statement of Mr. C. J. Kerr, representative of the Port Commissioners of Calcutta, will, no doubt, bear repetition here. In the report of the Commission under the heading "Pilot Service" and sub-heading "Employment of non-Europeans" Commander G. M. Forteath, R.I.M., Port Officer, Calcutta (1914), is stated to have said: "I see no reason why Anglo-Indians and others should not enter the service." Messrs C. D. Budge and G. F. Thorpe, Branch Pilots, in their evidence, said that "there was no disposition on the part of the Indians to enter the service and the subject need not seriously be considered." Mr. Kerr said, "there is no demand on the part of the natives of India to enter the Pilot service." But those are old tales of old days. The war has changed the whole aspect of the world and this country has also changed. The youths of the country are now anxious to prove that they are equal to all tasks and risks and they are worthy of all trust and responsibility. The Bengali youths proved plucky, cool, determined and daring in the field of Flanders and I can confidently assert, that, given proper opportunity, they will prove worthy members of the Bengal Pilot service. The anomaly of the situation which proved an unjustifiable bar to their entry into this particular branch of the public service is no longer to exist. Government have made up its mind to do justice in this matter to the sons of the soil.

My submission to the House, therefore, is that this matter ought to be considered by them.

Raja MANILOLL SINGH ROY: If opportunity is given, I think there will not be any dearth of candidates. I know that for a Board of Trade Master's certificate Mr. B. Chaudhuri of Burdwan has already served his five years' term in the ship-building yard and docks of Messrs Martin and Co. of Calcutta as a Foreman-Mechanic and has proceeded to the United Kingdom where he has already completed 15 months out of 18 months' term as Third Engineer of a Mercantile Marine. On the completion of the remaining three months' term he will be eligible for the Master's examination. With these few words I beg to support the resolution.

MEMBER in charge of MARINE DEPARTMENT (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): The first two clauses of this resolution ask us to give effect to the proposals of the Public Services Commission in regard to the Bengal pilot Service. This, however, has already been done and I think in conversation I mentioned this to the hon'ble member. After the usual correspondence with the Government of India and the Secretary of State, in May last year, we got the Secretary of State's final orders, authorising us to alter our rules in accordance with the recommendations of the Commission. The rules now provide that any statutory natives of India, if duly qualified, will be eligible for these appointments. They also provide that the Government of Bengal will use every endeavour to ascertain the existence of suitable local candidates before applying to the Secretary of State for India for the selection of candidates in England. There is no provision in the rules requiring experience in a sailing vessel to be regarded as an essential qualification for appointment in the Service. That rule was, I believe, abrogated some time ago owing to the small number of sailing vessels now available. We have, therefore, no objection in accepting the first two clauses of the resolution, because, as I have said, they have already been embodied in the rules.

No case of recruitment has come up since I took charge of the Marine Department three months ago, but when the question of recruitment does arise, I need hardly say that I shall follow the rules in the letter and in the spirit. There is now a Standing Committee attached to the Marine Department; and I further undertake to consult them on the occasion of the next recruitment for the service and see what steps we can take to get suitable Indian candidates.

That is all I have to say, so far as the first two clauses of the resolution are concerned. The third part of the resolution is more difficult and I must say that I have had some difficulty in understanding what exactly the mover wants. I have, however, informally discussed the matter with him and from that discussion and from his speech I gather that his object is to afford Indian youths who wish to take up a sea-faring career every opportunity of doing so. But for this purpose a course of training on a training ship in England is not essential. Not only is it not essential but it is not sufficient. The requirements for a second Mate's certificate are either four years' service at sea, or, as an alternative, two years' service in a training ship and three years' sea-service. For a Master's certificate, the requirements are six years' service at sea, of which one year must be service as second Mate while holding a first Mate's certificate, and two and a half years must be service in charge of a watch as third or fourth Mate, while holding a second Mate's certificate. All these certificates can be obtained in India and it is not necessary for a candidate to undergo training in a training ship in England. Nor is it necessary, as appears to be supposed, for a candidate for the Pilot Service to hold a Mate's certificate. It is true that the nautical examination which will be held here if we get suitable candidates, requires a knowledge in navigation and seamanship up to the standard of a second Mate's certificate, but the actual requirements under the rules are four years' service in a Merchant vessel employed in foreign trade either as a Seaman or as an Apprentice. These then are the essential qualifications for Mate's and Master's certificates and for entrance into the Pilot Service; and in none of these cases is a course in a training ship in England essential. The fact is that the real difficulty is not the course in a training ship but, as we have found in connection with our enquiries about the nautical school, the fact that there will be a considerable amount of difficulty in finding ship-owners who are willing to take Indians as apprentices. It is no use concealing this difficulty, and until it is overcome there must be considerable obstacles in the way of educated Indians wishing to take up a sea-faring career. Even if we found an Indian youth willing to go to England for training with a scholarship, there would be a considerable risk that at the end of this training he would find it wasted, either because he was not willing himself to go to sea or because no ship-owner would take him. These are serious difficulties to be overcome, but the mover apparently asks us to provide facilities for boys to go to England on the off-chance that they would get service in merchant vessels. We must remember in this connection that the foreign scholarships referred to in the resolution are granted by the Government of India and not by us. They are granted for the purpose of enabling Indian boys to get a training in England or in other foreign countries which they cannot get in their own country. But they are granted on the assumption that the Indian boys will be able to make use of this training when they come back to their own country. As I have said, we are not quite satisfied that Indian boys would be able to make good use of such training even if we were in a position to send them to England for a nautical course. The money, available for these scholarships is limited and we are not prepared, as things stand at present, to go to the Government of India and ask them to allot a certain sum for sea-training by taking away sums allotted for other subjects. If conditions change or if we receive applications from any Indian boys willing to undergo sea-training and if, on enquiry, we find that the difficulties can be overcome, we shall be prepared to consider the matter further. But, as matters stand, at present we are not prepared to go up to the Government of India and ask them to make a scholarship available on such conditions as are mentioned in the resolution. That is to say, we are not prepared to accept the third clause of the resolution or to take action at present upon it.

Dr. Rai HARIDHAN DUTT Bahadur: After what has fallen from the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr, I am disposed to withdraw the third clause of my resolution and ask the Council to accept the first and second clauses. The third clause can be taken up later on after we have seen what the Standing Committee does. I would ask the permission of the House to withdraw the third clause.

Leave was given to withdraw the third clause.

The first and second clauses were then put and agreed to.

Adjournment.

The PRESIDENT: Gentlemen, the time allotted for non-official business is over and the remaining resolutions cannot be taken up now. If members in whose names these motions stand desire them to be taken up during another session they must give fresh notice to the Legislative Department. This does not apply to the two resolutions on the City Civil Court which have been postponed with the leave of the Council.

I adjourn the Council to 3 o'clock to-morrow as His Excellency has expressed his intention to address the Council in exercise of his powers under section 72 of the Government of India Act. Perhaps it would be desirable for members to be in their seats by 2-50 P.M.

Proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council assembled under the provisions of the Government of India Act.

THE Council assembled at 2-50 P.M. on the 7th April, 1921, in the Council Chamber in the Town Hall, Calcutta.

Present:

The Hon'ble the President, the Hon'ble the four Members of the Executive Council, the Hon'ble the three Ministers, and 114 nominated and elected members.

Budget Grants.

The PRESIDENT (the Hon'ble Nawab Sir Syed Shams-ul-Huda): Order! Order! The Hon'ble Mr. Kerr.

MEMBER in charge of DEPARTMENT of FINANCE (the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr): In accordance with section 92 of the Bengal Legislative Council Rules and Standing Orders, I beg to lay on the table a statement showing the action taken by the local Government in the case of certain demands which have been refused or reduced by the Council together with a copy of the certificate granted by His Excellency the Governor, under section 72D (2) (a) of the Government of India Act.

Babu SURENDRA NATH MULLICK: May I have a look at the statement which has just been placed on the table by the Hon'ble Mr. Kerr?

The PRESIDENT: It is placed on the table and you can see it after the Council is adjourned. His Excellency will be coming in in a few minutes.

The statements were as follows:—

8—FORESTS.

I hereby certify that the expenditure provided for by the demand of Rs. 13,200 for two temporary Imperial Service officers of the Forest Department, under the head "8—Forests—(B) Establishment," is essential to the discharge of my responsibility for the subject.

RONALDSHAY,
Governor of Bengal.

The 6th April, 1921.

His Excellency the Governor having certified, under proviso (a) to section 72D (2) of the Government of India Act in relation to the demand of Rs. 13,200 for two temporary Imperial Service officers of the Forest Department, under the head

"8—Forests—(B) Establishment," that this expenditure is essential to the discharge of his responsibility for the subject, the Government of Bengal direct that the above demand be shown in the Civil Estimates under the above head as if it had been assented to by the Legislative Council.

A. MARR,

Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

The 6th April, 1921.

22F—GENERAL ADMINISTRATION.

I hereby certify that the expenditure provided for by the demand of Rs. 7,287 for the Director of Information and his staff up to the 15th June 1921, under the head "22F—General Administration," is essential to the discharge of my responsibility for the subject.

RONALDSHAY,

Governor of Bengal.

The 6th April, 1921.

His Excellency the Governor having certified, under proviso (a) to section 72D(2) of the Government of India Act in relation to the demand of Rs. 7,287 for the Director of Information and his staff up to the 15th June 1921, under the head "22F—General Administration," that this expenditure is essential to the discharge of his responsibility for the subject, the Government of Bengal direct that the above demand be shown in the Civil Estimates under the above head as if it had been assented to by the Legislative Council.

A. MARR,

Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

The 6th April, 1921.

24—ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

I hereby certify that the expenditure provided for by the demand of Rs. 37,600 for the Additional Legal Remembrancer and his establishment, under the head "24—Administration of Justice—(B) Law Officers," is essential to the discharge of my responsibility for the subject.

RONALDSHAY,

Governor of Bengal.

The 6th April, 1921.

His Excellency the Governor having certified, under proviso (a) to section 72D(2) of the Government of India Act in relation to the demand of Rs. 37,600 for the Additional Legal Remembrancer and his establishment, under the head "24—Administration of Justice—(B) Law Officers," that this expenditure is essential to the discharge of his responsibility for the subject, the Government of Bengal direct that the above demand be shown in the Civil Estimates under the above head as if it had been assented to by the Legislative Council.

A. MARR,

Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

The 6th April, 1921.

The Registrar to the Council then announced to the President that His Excellency the Governor was without.

The President then left his seat on the dais and met His Excellency at the door of the Chamber. His Excellency then entered the Chamber with the Hon'ble the President and, at the request of the President, took his seat.

His Excellency the Governor's Address.

HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR of BENGAL (the Earl of Ronaldshay): MR. PRESIDENT,—The first session of the Legislative Council under the new constitution comes to a close to-day; but before proroguing, it seems desirable that I should say something on the subject of the constitution which came into operation a few short weeks ago. The constitution under which we are working is, indeed, not only new but novel; and the intentions of Parliament with regard to its working have to be sought for and carefully studied in the various documents in which they are embodied. I think, if I may say so, that the Legislative Council has looked at its duties in respect to the Budget from a somewhat different angle of vision—to make use of a phrase which has come into frequent use in connection with the reform scheme—to that from which Parliament viewed them. I hope, when I say this, that it will not be thought that I desire to be controversial. That is the last thing in the world that I desire. But I, too, have duties under the new constitution; and it is important that I should make it clear in discharging them that I am acting in strict accordance with the intentions of Parliament. I shall confine myself to the Budget of the reserved half of Government, and I shall state as clearly as I can why I think that your treatment of it has not been quite in accordance with the intentions of Parliament. To be quite frank, then, you have treated it as if the reserved half of the Government was responsible to you—in other words you have treated it as you are constitutionally justified in treating the transferred half of the Government: which amounts to saying this, that you have acted as if there was no difference between the reserved and the transferred halves into which Government has been divided. This is of course not so. There is a great and fundamental difference between the two. The fundamental difference arises out of the fact that whereas the Ministers in charge of the transferred subjects are responsible to you, the Members in charge of the reserved subjects are not. Let me examine the bearing of this fundamental difference between the position occupied by Ministers and that occupied by Members of the Executive Council, upon the position which you yourselves occupy in relation to the transferred and reserved budgets, respectively. The Ministers being responsible to you, are quite properly dependent upon you for the granting of supply. If you refuse to vote the supply asked for, the Ministers have their remedy. They can transfer the responsibility for carrying on the administration with what they regard as inadequate funds from their own shoulders to yours—in other words, they can resign, and those who have refused them the supply can be called on to assume the responsibility of administration in their place. That is a perfectly well understood feature of responsible self-government. But the position of the reserved half of the Government is an entirely different one. Supposing that you refuse to grant me in my capacity as head of the reserved half of Government the supply which I regard as necessary, what can I do? I cannot come to you as I would if I were a Minister and say to you, "Under these circumstances I cannot carry on the administration and I therefore tender you my resignation." Someone may, perhaps, ask "Why not?" The reason is plain, namely, that you have neither the power to accept my resignation nor to appoint anyone else to take my place. In other words, because in respect of reserved subjects I am responsible to Parliament and not to the Legislative Council. But you may reply that I can tender my resignation to the Secretary of State as representing Parliament, with a request that it be submitted to His Majesty the King. Supposing that I were to do that, what would the Secretary of State reply? Surely he would say, "No, it was not the intention of Parliament under such circumstances that you should resign and it was for this reason that Parliament inserted in the Act, clause 72D (2) (a) empowering you to secure the supply which you regard as essential." Perhaps you will say that it was not intended by Parliament that the use of this power should be regarded as part of the normal procedure under the constitution, but that it should only be employed in exceptional circumstances and that to make use of it except in the most exceptional circumstances, is an arbitrary abuse of power. Indeed I think I have seen that view expressed in print already by a member of this Council. That is a view, however, which it is impossible to sustain in face of the perfectly clear declaration of Parliament itself upon the point. The declaration in question appears in the report of the Joint Select Committee. It is a declaration of the utmost importance, and since it does not seem to have attracted the attention which it deserves, I propose to quote it verbatim from the report. It runs as follows: "Where the Council have reduced a provision for a reserved subject which the Governor considers essential to the proper administration of the subject concerned, he will have a power of restoration." And then follow words to which I would direct your special attention: "The committee wish it to be perfectly clear that this power is real and that its exercise should not be regarded as unusual or arbitrary; unless the Governor has the right to secure supply for these services for which he remains responsible to Parliament, that responsibility cannot be justly fastened upon him." Well there we have a perfectly plain declaration of the position with regard to the reserved budget under the new constitution. It leaves no sort of loophole for doubt as to what the intentions of Parliament are; and it is in light of this declaration that it seems to me, as I have already said, that you have approached the Budget from a point of view which differs, somewhat from that intended by Parliament. You may not unnaturally ask, "Why, then, did Parliament give to the Legislative Councils the right of moving reductions in the case of reserved subjects?" I think the intention was that you might have the means of obtaining from Government information in connection with such subjects. No doubt it was also intended that you should have a means of making your opinions known on questions of policy affecting reserved subjects and in extreme cases giving emphasis to your wishes by voting an actual reduction of supply. But in view of all that has been said upon the subject in the report of the Joint Select Committee of Parliament I cannot suppose that it was ever intended that such strong measures should be adopted as part of the regular practice of the Council.

I hope that you will not think that anything that I have said is intended to be in any way in the nature of a rebuke. Far from it. I know well how difficult you must have found your position, faced as you have been with a huge deficit arising out of the financial settlement which has been fastened upon us. I know how keenly you must have felt the necessity for attempting to effect economies wherever that seemed possible. I have dwelt at length upon the constitutional position, with no sort of desire to attribute blame but with the sole purpose of making it perfectly clear that any action which I feel called upon to take under clause 72D of the Government of India Act is not taken by way of protest against any action which you have thought fit to take, but solely in the discharge of my responsibility to Parliament—a responsibility which, whether I like it or not, I am compelled to bear. And there is only one other comment, I think, which I need make in dealing with the nature of the constitution, and that is this, that while it is quite clear that it was the intention of Parliament that, in the event of such a situation arising the Governor should exercise his right to restore grants in the reserved budget freely it must also be clear that the necessity for a constant resort to the use of this power can mean only one thing, namely, the existence of a practically unbridgeable cleavage of opinion extending over the whole administrative field between the Governor and the Council. If such a state of affairs came into existence I think the Governor himself would realise that his usefulness either to Government or to the province had come to an end, and he would in such circumstances be justified, I think, in demanding release from responsibilities which he was no longer able satisfactorily to discharge. I do not make this comment out of any considerations personal to myself. It is to be regarded as a purely dispassionate and impersonal statement of a situation which might conceivably arise under the new constitution as I understand it. If things so turned out that such a situation did become applicable in my own case I should accept it in good part; for my position is this, that I am ready and anxious to serve Bengal so long as I feel I can do so with advantage, but I should be equally ready to give place to someone else if I came to the conclusion that my continuance in office was no longer of advantage to he Province. Nor, if I came to such a conclusion, should I regard it as necessarily casting discredit either upon myself or upon those with whom I differed, for I hold the view that a really irreconcilable difference of opinion can only arise out of deep and honest conviction discreditable to neither of the parties concerned.

Now having said so much let me take one by one the items in the reserved budget in respect of which grants have been refused or reductions made. Government accepted the reductions asked for by the Council in respect of the following items: Additional circle officers, Rs. 1,00,000; provincialization of Steam Boilers Commission, Rs. 52,000 net; and hill allowance a sum which will probably fall not far short of Rs. 40,000.

Then I come to reductions carried against Government. First a reduction of Rs. 20,000 under Major head 8—Forests. I have considered this with great care. The Forest Department is a revenue-producing department; and it is all to the interests of the Province that its operations should be extended. We have been greatly handicapped in recent years by shortage of staff, and so urgent had the matter become that failing permanent officers the recruitment of five temporary officers was sanctioned. Up to the present we have only succeeded in securing two—Mr. Gammie and Mr. Morde; and it is the pay of these two officers that has been refused. Mr. Morde who is an officer of the Bengal Provincial Service is at present engaged on important boundary work in the Jalpaiguri and Buxar forest divisions and it would be impossible to remove him at this moment without detriment to that work. In deference to the vote of the Council I shall be prepared to let him revert from the Forests to the Bengal Civil Service as soon as he has completed his present task, though I confess that it is with some reluctance that I do so. Mr. Gammie is serving on a two years' agreement and began work on the 18th of January last. I have consulted the Conservator of Forests who assures me that unless important work is to be allowed to fall into abeyance he simply cannot be spared. Last year the Forest Department brought in a net revenue of Rs. 10,00,000 to Government. That is to say, after paying the whole of its cost it proved to be a source of income to that extent; and I am satisfied that on financial grounds alone it is in the interest of the Province that Mr. Gammie should continue his work.

Next comes a reduction of Rs. 25,000 under the head 22—General Administration. This is in respect of the salary of the Director of Information and his staff. This officer was appointed because we were always being told that Government worked in the dark and never told the public what it was doing. I thought the criticism was a just one myself, and I thought that a director of information would fill a real want by keeping the public supplied with accurate information. However, I do not wish to press my opinion against that of the Council and I therefore accept their decision. The present holder of the post, however, cannot be discharged before June next since we are under agreement with him up to hat time and in order to avoid a breach of contract, it will be necessary for me to certify a sufficient sum to enable Government to meet its liabilities up to that date.

Under Head 24—the Administration of Justice—reductions have been made in respect of provision for the preparation of paper books in the High Court; and for the additional Legal Remembrancer and his establishment. I cannot say what action will be taken in connection with the first of these two items because I am not responsible for the administration of the High Court, which is under the Government of India, and I have not yet received instructions in the matter. So far as the second item is concerned, I again defer to the wishes of the Council. Some small grant will be necessary because the additional Legal Remembrancer cannot be summarily dismissed, at least a month's notice being necessary. At the same time, while deferring to the wishes of the Council in this matter I would like to place on record Government's high appreciation of the manner in which Mr. P. L. Roy has discharged his duties, and to this I would add an expression of my feelings of personal regret at the severance of my official relations with him.

Under head 41—Civil Works in charge of Public Works officers, a number of reductions has been made, as follows:—

	Rs.
1. For the partition of Mymensingh ...	6,00,000
2. For the partition of Midnapore ...	7,25,000
3. For a residence for the Chief Justice ...	1,00,000
4. For the police hospital at Bhowanipur ...	4,86,000
5. For quarters for the Calcutta Police at Lal Bazaar ...	2,83,000

In two out of these five cases there seem to me to be grave objections to the reduction, namely, in those of Midnapore and of the quarters at Lal Bazaar. In each instance I should be prepared to justify my opinion on the merits of the case alone. But in these particular instances there are considerations of a financial character in addition, which in my opinion weigh heavily in the scale. I think there has been some misunderstanding with regard to the police quarters. The simple facts are these. There is a small piece of land which impinges upon the compound of the police headquarters at Lal Bazaar. It is bounded on two sides by streets and on the other two sides by the compound of the police quarters itself. I have inspected it myself and I can best describe its position by saying that geographically it is a part of the compound. I am satisfied that it is most desirable that it should be acquired; and further that it should be acquired without delay because the longer we delay the greater will be the price which we shall eventually have to pay for it. I should regard it as important that we should acquire the land even if we did not require it urgently for further accommodation. But it is urgently required for additional quarters. Quarters are required for the accommodation of certain married officers who cannot obviously be housed in the single men's barracks even if there was room for them there. The officers for whom these quarters are required are three assistant commissioners, eight inspectors and twelve sergeants. On grounds of efficiency it is extremely desirable that these officers should be housed at headquarters and not scattered over the town. On grounds of economy it is desirable that we should construct quarters for them because we are already obliged to pay rent for houses for them to the amount of Rs. 27,000 a year, with the practical certainty of this sum increasing in the near future.

The case of Midnapore stands in a class by itself. It is not a new scheme. It was accepted on two occasions by the late Legislative Council, and it received the final approval of the Secretary of State in all its details more than two and a half years ago. Before that time we had received the sanction of the Secretary of State to proceed with the work of collecting materials for the necessary building operations and that was explained to the Legislative Council in the course of the Budget debate so long ago as March, 1918, when financial provision to start work was made. Under these circumstances it is not surprising that the amount already spent is large. The amount of money actually paid out is in round figures Rs. 8,26,000, that is to say, Rs. 78,000 for the acquisition of land and Rs. 7,48,000 for buildings. But this sum does not represent the amount already spent, because it does not include bills for work done amounting to Rs. 1,47,000 which are now due. The amount already spent, therefore, is Rs. 9,73,000. Nor does the story end here. The work being in progress, contracts are in force; and it is estimated that the cost of terminating existing contracts would amount to something not far short of three lakhs of rupees. Supposing, then, that I have to order work to cease, what will the position of Government be? Why this—it will be out of pocket to the extent of nearly Rs. 13,00,000 and as a set-off against this large expenditure it will be in possession of a number of unfinished buildings which would be altogether useless. It has been suggested that we might find purchasers for these buildings. I see no prospect whatsoever of any purchasers being forthcoming for I cannot conceive to what use, other than that for which they are intended, buildings such as the collectorate or the jail buildings could be put. Moreover, as I have said, I am prepared to justify my opinion in the case upon its merits. I am in complete agreement with the view put forward in this Council by Maulvi Saiyid Nasim Ali who obviously spoke with an intimate personal knowledge of the actual conditions of the district; and I am convinced that not only in the interests of good administration, which after all is a matter of real importance to the masses of the people, but in the interests of successful local self-government also it is desirable that this project should be completed.

The same arguments can be urged in the case of Mymensingh; but in this case we are not nearly so heavily committed as in the case of Midnapore. We have spent some money certainly, but not nearly so much
